Mr. CLARK. I'm not sure. I don't know.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What about reviewing a title commitment?

Mr. CLARK. I don't know what the Rose Firm did in this case. Generally what attorneys do in loan closings or may do in loan closings is to review legal documents, including title commitments, to see that Madison Guaranty's lien is a valid first lien.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, in this particular instance also the bill is for attending the closing. Normally when you attend a closing and you are a lawyer, aren't you expected to ascertain whether the transaction is in compliance with State and Federal law? I mean, that is one of the reasons people hire law firms to attend closings and review documents, isn't it, sir?

Mr. CLARK. Lawyers may do different things at different closings. In some cases, they conduct the closing; in other cases, they are there simply to advise their clients.

Senator SARBANES. Are you a lawyer yourself, Mr. Clark?

Mr. CLARK. No, I am not. I am only speaking as an examiner and as someone who has had some experience in real estate transactions.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We have a number of things to go through, but just one quick thing. With regard to the feasibility study that was discussed earlier in your examination, I would observe that that feasibility study was dated November 1986, which was after your examination was concluded; correct?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So the feasibility study should have been done at the time of the acquisition of the land, prior to the acquisition of the land, not more than a year later; right?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That would have been the proper banking practice?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. We're not going to start another line.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Senator.

Do you happen to know, Mr. Clark, whether Ms. Bassett, the Securities Regulator in Arkansas, had discussed prior to the Bank Board meeting about which Ms. Pulcer's notes were mentioned, whether Ms. Bassett and Mr. Faulk prior to that meeting had had extensive discussions about what would occur?

Mr. CLARK. I do know there was some contact between the Federal Home Bank of Dallas and Ms. Bassett. The extent of those contacts or who participated I do not know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Pulcer, do you happen to know whether Ms. Bassett, as she testified here before this Committee, had discussed with Mr. Faulk the problems at the bank and the action that the Bank Board would recommend prior to the meeting?

Ms. PULCER. I'm sorry, what is your question? Am I aware—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You made an observation in your notes that you thought it was odd that Ms. Bassett had not spoken up. Did you happen to know that Ms. Bassett had discussed with Mr. Faulk what the action that was recommended would be at the meeting?

Ms. PULCER. I was not aware of the extent of her discussions with Mr. Faulk, if any.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right, and if, in fact, she and Mr. Faulk had discussed the matter extensively and were in agreement, then the fact that she didn't speak up would be more understandable, would it not?

Ms. PULCER. Your question is if they had had prior discussions before this meeting—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right.

Ms. PULCER. —her lack of comment would not seem unusual?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right.

Ms. PULCER. Perhaps.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, Mr. Faulk has made a statement which has been provided to this Committee wherein he said, referring to Ms. Bassett, at page 8, "She acted responsibly at all times and I don't see how anyone could say, that knew the history of this case, or who would look into the history of this case, could say that she acted irresponsible or delayed or drug her feet in any manner whatsoever." Do you have any reason to take issue with Mr. Faulk's comment about Ms. Bassett's performance?

Ms. PULCER. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And on the issue that, Mr. Clark, I asked you about earlier, Mr. Faulk has given this opinion on the question of the $60 million loss, "Had it been timely acquired," meaning the Madison Savings & Loan, "Had it been timely acquired, it is my opinion that whatever the ultimate loss is, it could greatly have been curtailed, by the taking of more timely action." Now, do you agree with that assessment?

Mr. CLARK. Let me make sure I understand what you are asking. The $60 million loss you referred to is the ultimate loss of the RTC?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That's right.

Mr. CLARK. And you are asking—and Mr. Faulk has said that had the—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Had the savings and loan—

Mr. CLARK. —had the RTC or the Dallas bank or the FSLIC, at some point, earlier than—had closed Madison Guaranty earlier—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right.

Mr. CLARK. —would the loss have been reduced?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Correct.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, it would have.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He said that the ultimate loss would have been greatly curtailed. Do you agree with that?

Mr. CLARK. I'm not sure about the extent. It would have been reduced, depending upon the time period, the timing of an earlier takeover, it would have been reduced to a greater or lesser extent.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. She recommended, referring to Ms. Bassett, she recommended that the Federal regulators take over the bank in 1987. It was acted upon by the Federal regulators in 1989, so it is a period of something less than 2 years.

Mr. CLARK. Again, I don't know when the losses accrued through time. Had Madison Guaranty been closed sooner, the loss would have been less. How much less, and at what time for a particular time of closure, I am not sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who is Mr. Faulk, do you know?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Faulk was one of the supervisory agents of the Dallas bank.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that the Ninth District?

Mr. CLARK. I believe so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That covered Arkansas and Texas; correct?

Mr. CLARK. It may have covered other States, but yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, I put before you a statement of James Barth and Dan Brumbar, prepared for the Committee on Banking and Financial Services of the U.S. House of Representatives, and submitted August 7, 1995. And I draw your attention to page 15 in the middle of the page. Are you with me?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Where it says,

At year end 1987, there were 186 institutions in the Ninth District reporting insolvency based on Generally Accepted Accounting Principles, or GAAP. The institutions had \$60 billion in assets and were reporting negative tangible capital of \$16 billion and negative income of \$7.3 billion. At this time, Madison's \$111 million in assets represented  $\frac{2}{100}$  of 1 percent of the total assets of insolvent institutions in the Ninth District, and its \$12 million negative capital represented  $\frac{2}{1000}$  of 1 percent of the total negative capital reported in that district.

Do you have any reason to take issue with that assessment?

Mr. CLARK. I haven't check the numbers, but it looks reasonable.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you recommend closing Madison after your 1986 audit?

Mr. CLARK. It wasn't my position to make that kind of recommendation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I am not suggesting that it was, sir. But I am asking you, for clarity of the record, whether finding the irregularities that you found, it was your position and your recommendation that the bank be taken over by Federal regulators?

Mr. CLARK. At the time, that would have been the best solution. However, at the time, as I alluded to in my earlier testimony, there was a shortage of resources. What we did, as far as issuing a Cease and Desist Order and taking the actions we did, I think were the best, given the resources we had.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that goes to the question of the loss that was incurred ultimately, between the time when the problems were identified and Ms. Schaffer and others came to the conclusion that the savings and loan might be taken over, the fact that it wasn't was a function of lack of resources by the Federal authorities at that point, and more pressing problems?

Mr. CLARK. That was my own view that I put forward at the time; and the others involved in the process may have had different views, but certainly, I would say that lack of resources was a large factor.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me refer you to——

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste, I know it is on your time. I am going to ask them to suspend the clock for a moment because I would like to make an observation.

First of all, Mr. Clark, let me tell you, I think you have testified to the best of your ability, and I think you have done your job as admirably as anybody could. But, you see, one of the things that disturbs me is when you—and maybe you did or didn't identify the transaction at that point in time to the extent that it did—and this is the first time I have seen this. I have heard about these transactions, but they have never been broken down. And as the Madison Financial Corp., October 25, that little thing with the arrows going, where it shows 35 acres——

Senator SARBANES. Why don't we finish ours——

The CHAIRMAN. I will go back. It goes to the business of when you close down, when you don't close down, whether they have enough resources. I guess you had limitations because they didn't have resources there to do this. We had discussed this on this Committee, how much money we should make available for closing down these institutions.

But when there is a transaction, which is as transparent as this Tucker deal, where he buys 35 acres, supposedly for $125,000, that was the cost, and the bank gives him $260,000. When you saw something like that, that's clearly illegal, clearly grotesque, clearly beyond the pale of any kind of acceptable conduct; would you go to your boss and say, "Hey, let me tell what you they are doing here, they are taking property?" If you admit it was worth $125,000, and it probably wasn't worth anywhere near $125. These guys buying it, and the bank president's wife gets a commission of $12,500 on top of that. Now, wouldn't that call for some action to remove the president and the operating officers of that bank? I mean, that's the question I have.

Mr. CLARK. In terms of telling my boss, that is the supervisory authorities in Dallas, what this particular transaction was, these particular facts were brought forward in an interim report to the supervisory authorities in Dallas.

The CHAIRMAN. It was?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you recall any conversation that you had with them? Because you couldn't find many kind of transactions like this. In your whole banking experience, have you found many like this?

Mr. CLARK. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This is incredible, I never heard of such blatant robbery. So what happened when you went to the boss and told him, what did he say?

Mr. CLARK. Well, you have to understand, this is one among many, OK. Even when I reported it for the first time to the Dallas bank, it was one among many. Ultimately, through the Cease and Desist Order and through supervisory contacts with the people at Madison Guaranty, the officers were removed.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank my colleagues for giving me the time. I think that goes back to what Senator Murkowski and others were saying, notwithstanding lack of resources, when you had a pilferage going on in such an open, notorious manner that the examiners have identified, it seems to me that the guys in Dallas certainly should have moved with much greater speed. They should have thrown them out, not ultimately in 1987—they should have thrown them right out. This is incredible. Again, I thank my colleagues for giving me the opportunity of making this observation.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, over 50 percent of the loss to the Federal Insurance Fund came from institutions in Texas, I might observe; some of them in the amounts of hundreds of millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that. I am suggesting that the fellows down there should have moved with greater speed. It seems to me that kind of an action would have brought about some more definitive action.

Senator SARBANES. Go ahead, Richard.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Clark, following along in the Chairman's observation, have you had the opportunity to read the literature concerning the S&L crisis, the books that have been written on the size of the losses due to inside deals, and flipping transactions, and so forth?

Mr. CLARK. I have read some of it at least.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There are banks where literally tens of millions of dollars on each transaction were lost; isn't that so?

Mr. CLARK. Based upon my recollection, I would say yes, that was so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There were people flitting around buying castles in Europe on their own bank, purchasing jets, and engaging in fraudulent transactions that made the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan look like a child playing in the sandbox; wouldn't you say?

Mr. CLARK. In terms of size, in terms of scale, that certainly would be true. However, some of the same basic things that occurred at Madison Guaranty occurred lots of other places.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We are not reinventing the wheel at Madison Guaranty. There were all kinds of similar transactions going on throughout the United States that precipitated what's being known as the savings and loan crisis; isn't that so?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It wasn't a function that you didn't want to take over these banks. You regulators realized that these transactions were improper and required some action, but the simple fact of the matter was that the country wasn't prepared to deal with losses on this scale at that point. When you said we didn't have the resources, you meant the financial resources to make good on the insurance?

Mr. CLARK. I meant that, but I also meant the personnel resources, the people it would take to actually close down all the thrifts as well, resources in many senses.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And so I put before you, from a document entitled, "Origins and Causes of the S&L Debacle: A Blueprint for Reform. A Report to the President and Congress of the United States by the National Commission on Financial Institution Reform, Recovery and Enforcement," dated July 1993. At page 48, where it says, "Weak regulation and lax enforcement by the Bank Board and virtually nonexistent regulation and supervision in States such as Texas, Florida, and California encouraged the equivalent of Ponzi schemes in which rapid growth, guaranteed accounting profits, and the capacity to loot S&L's through dividends, perks, bonuses, and payments to developer owners." Would you agree with that assessment?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Clark, let's put up chart number 2. This is the chart that we talked about where we showed the sale of properties from Ward and Madison Financial to a number of insiders at Madison. And we've gone through the first three transactions, which would be Master Developers, the Fitzhugh transaction, and then the Tucker transaction that the Chairman just made notice of, which was of the 35 acres of land.

What I would like to do now is go through the last three transactions that are set forth in this chart; $120,000 to Mr. Kuca, $770,000 to former Senator Fulbright, and $1.12 million to something called Castle Sewer & Water.

If we could put up chart 8 first, which would be the Kuca transaction. Mr. Kuca was the manager of the Campobello project that Madison had up in Canada; is that your recollection?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was another real estate debacle that Madison was involved in that you looked at and you've talked about. In this transaction, Mr. Kuca purchased 9 acres of land on November 20, 1985, not very long after the initial acquisition of the land on October 4, 1985. He paid $120,000 for it to Madison Financial and he was someone who worked for the affiliated company of Madison. Now, in connection with this transaction, Susan McDougal received a $12,000 commission. And again, your testimony would be that was just a way to funnel money to a bank insider; the $12,000 commission, correct?

Mr. CLARK. Where are we? Yes. I'm sorry, I was confused for a moment between the two $12,000 figures. But yes, the $12,000 figure or the $12,000 paid to Susan McDougal was a way to give her funding.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You have no reason to think that she did any work in connection with obtaining this sale?

Mr. CLARK. No, I don't.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And so, this was a commission that she was not entitled to?

Mr. CLARK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Madison funded this transaction with a loan of $108,000 to Mr. Kuca, and then Campobello Properties Venture, an affiliated Madison company, gave Mr. Kuca a $12,000 bonus. Do you recall this transaction?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So this was another way for Madison to fully fund the acquisition of this property by Mr. Kuca?

Mr. CLARK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would that be an improper practice by an S&L in your view?

Mr. CLARK. That's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now can we turn to chart number 7—this is a somewhat complicated transaction. This has to do with the February 28, 1986 acquisition of the sewer and water utility by the Castle Sewer & Water Company. What do you recall about that particular acquisition, and then we will get to the chart? Generally what was the significance of Castle Sewer & Water Company obtaining this utility?

Mr. CLARK. It was the utility that would serve the single-family land development. It had already been constructed previous to the acquisition of the entire parcel from IDC. We thought at the time, and I think now, that it was essentially another straw transaction where Madison Guaranty, through one means or another, provided the entire purchase price of the parcel.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In connection with this transaction, Mrs. McDougal received a commission of $120,000, 10 percent of the purchase price. In this transaction, interesting funding, there was a loan of $825,000 to something called Dean Paul, Limited. Are you aware of that loan?

Mr. CLARK. To the best of my recollection, we were aware—we might have been aware about some involvement of Dean Paul.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Were you aware of Capital Management then providing a $150,000 loan to Castle Sewer & Water Company?

Mr. CLARK. Let me explain a little bit. When we started analyzing this transaction, we started wondering where the $150,000 downpayment came from and began looking. I think there was—we looked at several—at two or three possible sources, but we couldn't precisely pin it down.

When we began asking the management of Madison Guaranty about this project in particular through a series of written questions, we asked this question, "Where did the $150,000 come from?"

We were told it came from Capital Management Services Company that was run by Hale.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you later learn that the $150,000 from Capital Management was, in fact, part of the proceeds of a $825,000 loan from Madison Guaranty to Dean Paul, Limited?

Mr. CLARK. I don't think we learned that during the examination. I believe I've read something about it long since.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And in this particular transaction, Madison Guaranty gave a loan of $1.05 million, and then you had the $150,000 loan, and then that funded the $1.2 million purchase price of the utility. Do you recall any discussion of an appraisal that was conducted in connection with this utility by Mr. Betts?

Mr. CLARK. I recall generally Mr. Betts' involvement and then he produced a number of appraisals, including some on properties at Madison—excuse me, at Castle Grande.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What was your view of the appraisals that were prepared by Mr. Betts for Madison Financial?

Mr. CLARK. They were wholly inadequate.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why were these appraisals wholly inadequate?

Mr. CLARK. Well, they didn't follow any recognized appraisal procedures used by the appraisal industry to determine value of property. Frankly, the reports seemed to us to be essentially shams, some documents to put in the loan file.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall speaking to Mr. McDougal during the course of the examination?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did he indicate to you how he was able to determine what the sale price for some of these properties should be?

Mr. CLARK. He said he based it on his own experience.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did he sort of indicate to you that he had a special experience with regard to the valuing of properties in the Little Rock area?

Mr. CLARK. In terms of valuing properties and in terms of determining the feasibility of and appropriateness of development, yes, he said it was based upon his special expertise.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did he indicate to you in any way that his special expertise was based on principles or practices that are normally recognized in the appraisal industry?

Mr. CLARK. No, he did not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you attempt to press him to try to find out the basis for some of the values that he was giving to various properties at Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. Let me clarify this a little bit. He was not placing values on the properties. These appraisals were—he—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you have a sense that Mr. Betts and Mr. McDougal worked very closely together?

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a second, let him answer the question.

Mr. CLARK. He was not placing the values on the properties, all right, the appraisal certificates were, Betts & Palmer, is my recollection. Those appraisals, in fact, justified—that is a bad word—

The CHAIRMAN. They used the appraisals to attempt to justify inflated values?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, thank you.

I am not sure what you are referring to. What Mr. McDougal did was to determine the cost allocations often, in determining the cost of sale for these parcels, so that, as I think I discussed in earlier testimony, those cost allocations were very low, producing a very large profit.

Mr. GIUFFRA. OK, let's turn to chart number 9, which is the Fulbright transaction. This would be an acquisition in January 1986 of 486 acres by former Senator Fulbright. What do you recall about this particular transaction, if anything?

Mr. CLARK. I recall that it seemed a little bit more problematic. In the first case, it was, to some extent, different from the others. The amount of equity was relatively small, and as I recall, it came in the form of notes that Fulbright essentially endorsed over to the institution.

The amount of profit recognized on this transaction, as I recall, was relatively small. I would have to check, but I believe that the amount of indicated loss, classification loss, that the exam found on the Fulbright loan was small, if there was any at all. So, as I say, and as I think I phrased it in the exam report, Fulbright may or may not have been acting as a straw.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, in connection with this acquisition, you also have another commission being paid to Susan McDougal; in this case for 10 percent, $77,600 and this is just another example of the insiders basically feathering their own nests using the money earned in these transactions; correct?

Mr. CLARK. My recollection is, as in all of the other cases, Mrs. McDougal didn't perform services that would warrant payment of $77,000.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put chart number 2 back up on the screen. We have gone through six of these transactions. These were transactions involving sales of a total of $3,187,000. Am I correct that, in your view, it appeared that each one of these transactions was a straw man transaction?

Mr. CLARK. With the exception of Fulbright, yes. As I said, the Fulbright transaction was more problematic. I wasn't certain about that one.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At least with regard to the other five, because of the fact that they were straw man transactions, they allowed Madison Guaranty to violate the provision in Arkansas law limiting the amount of money that Madison could invest in Madison Financial, the so-called Direct Investment Rule; isn't that right?

Mr. CLARK. They disguised the violation, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This was a way to circumvent this important regulatory requirement which was intended to minimize the risk being borne by Madison Guaranty?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And you would agree that from the beginning, meaning the acquisition of the IDC property by Mr. Ward, that that was just another straw man transaction intended to evade the Direct Investment Rule, using Mr. Ward to purchase part of the property?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up chart number 1 for a second. I don't believe you have ever been asked this, at least in a Congress-sional hearing. With regard to the actual $1.15 million nonrecourse loan from Madison to Mr. Ward, did Madison receive any loan fee income on this loan?

Mr. CLARK. I don't believe so, but I am not sure based upon my recollection.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What is loan fee income?

Mr. CLARK. Many times borrowers are charged points, up front fees, in order to—when they are granted a loan, it is part of the compensation to the lender, just like interest.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, to the best of your recollection, were the terms of this $1.15 million nonrecourse loan from Madison to Mr. Ward unusual in that the loan was only for 1 year with one semi-annual interest payment required?

Mr. CLARK. It was unusual for thrift institutions in general. It was not unusual for Madison Guaranty.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In this particular case, the land was actually sold before any initial interest payment was due on the note; isn't that correct? Do you recall that?

Mr. CLARK. It may have been that that is correct. It also may have been that an interest payment was due and waived. I'm not sure. That also frequently happened.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Just to look at the dates, the transaction occurred on October 4, and yet land is being sold starting almost immediately thereafter, in November, which would have been before interest would have been due on the loan.

Mr. CLARK. Now that you mention it, I think that's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That's further evidence of a straw man transaction involving Mr. Ward?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. And frankly, on many of the loans that involved straws at Madison Guaranty, the straws did not pay interest, or it was funded by Madison Guaranty.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Normally—

The CHAIRMAN. Counselor, the light's been on, let's give it to the other side, suspend your questioning at this point, all right. Because you are going to attempt then to rush it and the other side is going to want their opportunity.

Senator SARBANES. How much more time do you expect to take, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. GIUFFRA. About 20 minutes or so.

Senator SARBANES. Why don't we go to Mr. Cole.

Mr. COLE. Now, I would like to shift the focus to the Campobello project, if I could.

Ms. Pulcer, am I correct in understanding you did not work on that particular transaction?

Ms. PULCER. On Campobello?

Mr. COLE. Yes.

Ms. PULCER. That's correct.

Mr. COLE. So, Mr. Clark, I will direct my questions to you. Perhaps it would make it easier for you if I gave you a copy of your 1986 report of examination. If you don't have that down there, I will have someone bring you a copy.

Mr. CLARK. I think I may have it.

Mr. COLE. I have a copy that's marked Campobello, page—

Mr. CLARK. Now, let me make—I have it.

Mr. COLE. If you could turn to page 8.4, correct me if I am wrong, sir, but I believe that is the portion of the report that describes the Campobello project?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. COLE. If you need to take a moment to review it, please do so, but could you describe briefly the Campobello project and the investment in that project by Madison Financial?

Mr. CLARK. The Campobello project was a land development. It involved the purchase of a substantial portion of Campobello Island, New Brunswick. It was a land development in the same way that the others were. Lots were being developed, it was the intent to sell them. I did not feel, as with many of the other projects, that the development was feasible. And, as with many of the other projects, funds were being siphoned off to insiders.

Mr. COLE. Can you tell us, in relative terms, the size of the Campobello project in comparison to the Castle Grande project that we have been discussing here today? And I believe the Castle Grande project is described at page 8.2 of your report, a few pages previous to the page I pointed you to on Campobello.

Mr. CLARK. At this point in time—the end of April, 1986—the total investment in Castle Grande is about the same as that in Campobello. The classification of assets is different. In Castle Grande's case, there is a split, $1.8 million or $1.9 million approximately, is substandard and $1.8 million approximately is classified as loss. For Campobello, the entire amount, $3.7 million, is classified as doubtful.

Mr. COLE. So am I correct in understanding, sir, that at that time, the exposure on Campobello was greater than the exposure on the Castle Grande property exposure, total exposure to the institution?

Mr. CLARK. The exposure that we could determine to be lost was greater.

Let me explain a little bit about classifications. The substandard classification indicates a greater degree of risk, but no loss is immediately apparent. The doubtful classification indicates that there is a distinct possibility of loss, but that the exact amount of the loss can't be determined. Of course, the loss classification indicates that there is a present and determinable amount of loss.

So we could determine, on Castle Grande, at the time of the examination, there was approximately a $1.8 million of loss with the rest being a higher risk, substandard. For Campobello, we could not make a final determination of loss simply because of lack of information, as I recall, and so we classified the entire amount as doubtful.

Mr. COLE. So you had, in layman's terms, you had some concerns about the entire project?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. COLE. Did you visit that project, Mr. Clark?

Mr. CLARK. Campobello?

Mr. COLE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. COLE. What did you find when you visited it? What were your observations?

Mr. CLARK. Campobello Island is scenic, a lot of the coastal areas are very beautiful. The land is rocky which meant that you couldn't use septic tanks because it simply is not feasible, which of course would increase the cost of development. We found that the Campobello Island is in the Bay of Fundy. The Bay of Fundy has one of the highest tides in the world, so that many of the seafront lots which were bordered on water at least on an inlet of the sea, at high tide, were a half mile to a mile from the water at low tide.

All of these things, make this development just to one extent or another less attractive to buyers or would increase development costs. For that reason and for the fact that no effective feasibility study was in hand at the time, we felt that the project may very well not have been feasible.

Mr. COLE. If I could direct your attention to the middle paragraph of the page of your examination report that discusses the Campobello investment, the first sentence, "Madison Financial has always provided most of the capital to Campobello," and then you go on to describe the then-current structure of the investment.

And the fourth sentence, "This relationship has now been restructured leaving Madison Financial as the general partner with a 75 percent interest, and Sheffield Nelson and Jerry Jones as limited partners with interests of 12.5 percent each." Do you see that portion?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, I do.

Mr. COLE. I think you've already testified as to your knowledge of who Mr. Nelson and Mr. Jones were, and are, so I won't re-cover that, but the point that I am interested in, and you may or may not be able to provide any testimony on this, is the ultimate disposition of the Campobello investments by Nelson and Jones. Do you know what happened with regard to their investment in Campobello? And obviously it occurred after your examination—

Mr. CLARK. No, I don't recall.

Mr. COLE. So you don't recall that they were bought—that their initial investments of $225,000 each were bought out in 1988 for $362,000 each, giving them each a profit of about $137,500?

Mr. CLARK. No, I don't recall knowing that.

Mr. COLE. Based on your experience as an examiner, in 1988, Madison would have been operating under the Cease and Desist Order that was put in place following your examination; correct?

Mr. CLARK. If it had not been released, yes, that would be correct. I don't know that it ever was—

Mr. COLE. I understand. What I am getting at, would it have been unusual in terms of regulation of financially-troubled savings and loans generally for investors in a project that was as troubled as you found Campobello to be in 1986 to be bought out using Federally-insured funds at not only a recovery of their investment but also a return of capital, or profit?

Mr. CLARK. I would have to question that transaction, yes.

Mr. COLE. But you don't have any testimony that you can provide for the Committee on that transaction, the buyout, the subsequent buyout?

Mr. CLARK. No, I am not familiar with that transaction.

Mr. COLE. We will save that for another day, then.

Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Just going back to the question about terms of a development loan, normally, am I correct that a loan would be based on a development plan, the terms of the loan?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, in part, a development plan would indicate to a lender when repayment could be expected and how to structure the loan, and also a development plan would indicate the cost of development which would tell the lender the amount of the loan that was needed.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And there was no meaningful development plan that you saw in the files of Madison Guaranty with regard to any of the projects related to Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. There were a number of documents labeled as development plans, but they did—were not effective in doing that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, am I correct that Madison—this is a more general question—regularly rolled over loans that were not current as to interest and principal?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was done to disguise the problems with those loans?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, at least it was done to disguise the fact that perhaps the borrowers could not afford to pay the interest out of their own funds.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was done with regard to some of these Castle Grande loans, the rolling over of the loans?

Mr. CLARK. That may be true, but I don't recall specifically. It very well may have happened.

Mr. GIUFFRA. During your exam, you found that Madison insiders accrued a number of benefits, amongst them being the ability to finance real estate projects that were fully funded by the bank, by the S&L; correct?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And in some instances, to receive real estate commissions that they were not entitled to; right?

Mr. CLARK. Or at least that they did not truly earn, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Or receiving a real estate commission on a project where you are the buyer is obviously a commission that you didn't earn?

Mr. CLARK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you also find that one of the benefits afforded to Madison insiders was the ability to write checks on insufficient funds?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, that occurred.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What did you find with regard to the ability of Madison insiders to write checks on insufficient funds?

Mr. CLARK. They could do so and the checks would be force paid; that is, they would be paid despite the fact that they overdrew the account. And at various times several of the insiders' accounts were overdrawn by substantial amounts.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Earlier you testified that you believed that there were indications that Madison management was actively trying to obstruct your examination. Do you recall that testimony?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall any instances in which Madison management was attempting to obstruct your examination with regard to Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. There was a problem with obtaining checks and disbursement documents from an outside title company with regard to the initial purchase from IDC. I believe there were problems in obtaining loan files right along.

Mr. GIUFFRA. These would be Castle Grande loan files?

Mr. CLARK. I am speaking of Castle Grande.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What were the condition of the Castle Grande loan files, as far as you can recall?

Mr. CLARK. They were a mess.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What sorts of documents were missing from those loan filings that normally should have been contained in loan projects for projects such as Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. Many and sundry, particularly important was the loan settlement statement which would, of course, tell where the loan funds went. We've talked about the inadequacies—

Mr. GIUFFRA. The fact that there was no settlement statement was a way for the insiders to divert loan proceeds into their personal accounts; isn't that right? It was a way of concealing the diversion of loan proceeds?

Mr. CLARK. It was a way of concealing the diversion. Normally on a settlement statement, all checks issued are detailed one by one. At Madison Guaranty, either the settlement statements were all—in most transactions, the settlement statements were either missing entirely or else just had one large, lump sum disbursement for the entire loan amount without detailing the checks issued.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And that was something, for example, that was true on the Jim Guy Tucker loan that we had up awhile ago with the $260,000 that the Chairman was commenting upon?

Mr. CLARK. To the best of my recollection, I think that was true of the Tucker loan.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever see anything like that before?

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps in one or two minor cases, in which case, we criticized it severely. In fact, this particular point, the presence of a completed settlement statement was required by regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, did you ever see a situation where somebody got a loan, a nonrecourse loan, which means that they can't be sued if they don't pay; right? That's unusual in itself, isn't it?

Mr. CLARK. I have seen it elsewhere, but it certainly adds to the risk of the transaction for the lender.

The CHAIRMAN. Right, but did you ever see one where the property was bought for $125,000, and then a loan was given for $260,000? I mean, twice the value of the property that they paid? We don't know what the value is because we have these phony real estates appraisals. Have you ever seen anything like that?

Mr. CLARK. Well, in many development loans, the loan for the purchase of the raw land and the ultimate development of the property are combined, so you would have a loan amount very much larger than just the purchase of the raw land.

In this case, as I think I testified earlier, when we started looking at where the other $135,000 went, we could only trace it, trace a check to Mr. Tucker. We were told that——

The CHAIRMAN. You did trace a check to Mr. Tucker?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, we saw a check go to Mr. Tucker.

The CHAIRMAN. How much was that for?

Mr. CLARK. $135,000. When we asked why they gave him the money, we were told it was to clear the land and prepare a development. The land had been cleared, but it didn't seem to us that it would cost that much money to clear 35 acres of land. And the development report was, again, wholly inadequate, but it would certainly not seem to have cost that much money.

The CHAIRMAN. OK.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Clark, let me see if I can quickly sum up your testimony with regard to the entire project, that is on the easel right there, at least as far as you knew, that was known as Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That's how bank insiders described it to you; is that correct?

Mr. CLARK. For the most part, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. When you discussed it with other bank regulators, the whole project was known as Castle Grande?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Pulcer, would you agree when you discussed this particular project with bank insiders, it was known as Castle Grande, the whole project, the north portion and the south portion?

Ms. PULCER. I believe so, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. When you discussed this particular loan with other bank regulators, it was known as Castle Grande, both the north and the south portion of this project?

Ms. PULCER. Yes, we referred to it as Castle Grande.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up chart number 3, very quickly. With regard to at least these six loans, you will agree that five of the six would be straw purchaser transactions; is that correct, all except——

Mr. CLARK. Yes, all except for Mr. Fulbright's loans.

Mr. GIUFFRA. All involved sales to insiders; correct?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. All involved financing by Madison; correct?

Mr. CLARK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Typically nonrecourse loans?

Mr. CLARK. Typically.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And typically you have large commissions going to insiders, and in particular to Susan McDougal?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. These commissions were not earned commissions; these were commissions that were a means to send money to bank insiders?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Clark, are you encompassing Senator Fulbright within each of those answers?

Mr. CLARK. I'm sorry. My understanding was that these——

The CHAIRMAN. With the exception of Senator Fulbright, he said that transaction he would not make a comment on, he was not in the position. And all of the transactions that he's testified to encompass five out of the six, they do not include Senator Fulbright.

Senator SARBANES. I think he ought to make that point each time because we have a chart sitting up there on the Elmo to which you are replying. And the question is all in each instance.

The CHAIRMAN. Why don't we say with the exception of the transaction of Senator Fulbright, that's in the record. It is noted. I think we have commented on it several times. But to make sure that there is no misinterpretation, we will set the record straight. Again, he makes no judgment with respect to the transaction Senator Fulbright was involved in; is that correct?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct. Some of the problems that we were enumerating may be true of Senator Fulbright and others may not be. But when I was replying, I was thinking definitely of the other five.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, in the Senator Fulbright transaction, you also have a commission being paid to Susan McDougal for $77,000; I believe?

Mr. CLARK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And then the entire project, you don't have a feasibility study at the outset in October 1995; correct?

Mr. CLARK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Only feasibility studies in November 1986, which is the wrong time to have a feasibility study obviously; you would agree with that?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, I would.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So to sum this up, would you describe these Castle Grande transactions as a sham?

Mr. CLARK. The five?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Pulcer, would you describe the five we have discussed, excluding Senator Fulbright's transaction, these five transactions, would you describe them as sham transactions?

Ms. PULCER. I don't know as I would use that terminology, but I would say that we were not able to fully determine the purpose of those loans at that time.

Mr. GIUFFRA. They were very suspicious transactions; would you agree with that?

Ms. PULCER. I would agree with that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. No further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to make an observation. The Committee, on December 4, 1995, wrote to the Office of Independent Counsel, or we actually wrote to him before that. We submitted a list of potential witnesses to the Independent Counsel and sought his advice, whether his investigation would be hindered or impaired if the Committee examined the following witnesses on December 4th.

The Office of Independent Counsel objected to this Committee's examination in any fashion of the following witnesses: Neal Ainsley, who is with the Perry County Bank; Lisa Anspaugh, a former employee of Madison; Don Denton, a Vice President of Madison Guaranty; David Hale, Capital Management; Larry Kuca, the Madison insider of Campobello; John Latham, President of Madison; Dean Paul, who was involved in the actions involving Hale, Tucker, Randall, Madison, and McDougal; R. D. Randolph, a business partner of Tucker and McDougal; Robert Palmer, a Madison appraiser; Steven Smith, a business partner of McDougal and former aide to Governor Clinton; and Greg Young, a Vice President of Madison Guaranty.

In addition, the Committee, in the quest to obtain information, subpoenaed business records of Jim Guy Tucker and also of Mr. McDougal. And as a result of their attorney raising objections to it and threatening the process of the trial, we withdrew that request for enforcement of the subpoena.

Now, why do I raise this? Because I believe that the charges and attacks—some of a very political, partisan nature—have been leveled unfairly. The Chairman has and will continue to attempt to do the business of the Committee in a fair and impartial manner. But we are going to be comprehensive, we are going to be thorough. We are going to get the facts, that's what our job is.

The fact that some people may be disturbed because some of the facts that are being produced and the testimony, and even testimony with Mr. Clark, reveals very vividly some of the descriptions that have been made with respect to this bank. I said before that I learned and I was surprised to learn the extent, and today I learned even more of the criminal enterprise of this bank.

This was a criminal enterprise being operated by Jim McDougal. They were nothing less than thieves, he and his wife and others engaged with him in this practice. I think it is a very fair and reasonable question to attempt to ascertain exactly what did Webb Hubbell know. This isn't just some stranger, this is President Clinton's dear friend, his best friend, Associate Attorney General. It was his father-in-law that participated in one of the biggest shams that cost the American taxpayers millions of dollars, not just once, but repeatedly.

This was at the centerpiece of this Castle Grande property. They didn't advertise it on television as IDC or IDC Development. It was advertised, it was known, it was promoted as Castle Grande. Now, one has to be rather naive to think that Webb Hubbell didn't understand that his father-in-law and the Rose Law Firm, because he was a partner of the Rose Law Firm, didn't understand what was taking place. And that's what we are getting to.

We are talking about records that indicate billable time, time involve in these transactions, records to indicate that indeed partners in the law firm were talking to Seth Ward; not once, not twice, not occasionally, but more than a dozen times. Billing records to indicate that partners prepared documents and reviewed contracts with respect to this.

I think it is rather disingenuous, and bring a tax on the work of the Committee when indeed, many of these records and much of this information has just come forth and just come into the possession of the Committee rather recently.

Now, we are going to pursue this. And I am not going to be dissuaded by the kinds of attacks and statements that have come forward. I want to do it fairly. I want to do it as expeditiously as we possibly can, but remember the constraints that were placed upon us when we entered into this. That's the manner in which I intend to proceed. No amount of bullying is going to dissuade this Senator from going forward in this manner and I will not be diverted.

That's my statement.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, at the end of September, you and I joined in a letter to the Independent Counsel in which we said we believed that, "The concerns expressed in your letter do not outweigh the Senate's strong interest in concluding its investigation and public hearings into the matter specified in Senate Resolution 120 consistent with section 9 of the Resolution." Which was the provision that we complete our work by February 29, 1996.

First, the fact that the Independent Counsel has raised some objections, it seems to me, ought not to dissuade us from pressing forward, intensifying our hearings, and completing this Arkansas phase of the inquiry.

Second, I simply note that the Independent Counsel's inquiry will, of course, continue. That was what happened in Iran-Contra. The Congressional hearings were concluded within 7 months from the appointment of the Committee—we are now approaching 9 months—but the Independent Counsel in that instance continued. Of course, the Independent Counsel in this instance would continue, as we well know.

Now, the trial to which reference has been made has been twice postponed, once from October to January and again from January to March. For all we know, it may be postponed again. We have no way of knowing and then we have no idea of how long it will last once it begins.

What all of this does, adjoined together, is simply to prolong this inquiry well into the election year. And as I have said, and as we said in our report, we believe that doing that will contribute to a public perception that the investigation is being conducted for political purposes. It is for that reason that I have strongly urged the Chairman to intensify the hearings, to try to give more form to the witnesses that are going to be called, to look at other testimony that they've given to see whether that can be utilized by the Committee, and to press ahead with our work.

We are about finished, I take it, with this panel. As I indicated to the Chairman last week, I thought we should have done another panel today. We worked at that pace earlier in our inquiry. And the Iran-Contra certainly worked at that pace consistently in the summer of 1987 in order to complete its work and not carry it over into an election year. In fact, when that Resolution was passed, Senator Dole was rather strong about the necessity to do the work within the allotted time and not to continue thereafter as we were considering the Iran-Contra Resolution. And so I just want to underscore that again as some of my colleagues have here today.

What time will we convene in the morning, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. We will convene at 10 tomorrow morning. I wish to note that the Committee started this session at 10:30 a.m., did not take any breaks whatsoever, and it is now 20 minutes to 3.

I think that we have proceeded in a very reasonable fashion. I might also like to say, again, this is the first time that the issue of Castle Grande has been reviewed with some detail, so that we'd have an idea, both the Committee and the American people, as to what we are talking about when we talk about sham transactions, straw men, manners in which moneys were routed improperly.

So I think it was a very important hearing and it was right to have this panel with us, because Mr. Clark and Ms. Pulcer were there, when these things were taking place.

I want to thank the witnesses for appearing today. I also want to say that they came in, and obviously, couldn't answer all our questions. Given the fact that, in many cases, you didn't have documentation to refresh your memories, given that some of the questions that were asked by both sides—I would say probably more on the Republican side than even my colleagues on the Democratic side—you had no way of really knowing some of the answers, but you answered to the best of your ability. The Committee thanks you for your participation, for your patience, and for your candid testimony.

We stand in adjournment until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 2:58 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10 a.m., on Wednesday, January 31, 1996.]

SUMMARY

James McDougal, a major stockholder, with the help of others effectively controls the affairs of the Institution and its wholly-owned subsidiary. Among other things, this control enabled Mr. McDougal to use corporate resources to develop large land developments. It also enabled him to divert substantial amounts of funds from the projects to himself and others, who are considered to be insiders (relatives of Mr. McDougal, employees, relatives of employees and friends).

These developments have been determined to be of questionable economic worth and significant losses are apparent. Of particular concern are the Campobello, Maple Creek and Castle Grande projects. If recognized, losses associated with these projects could render the Institution insolvent.

For the most part, all projects, including the end-loans to purchasers, were financed by the Institution. Basically this funding was provided by cash receipts derived from insured savings deposits. Since Mr. McDougal acquired the Institution in 1982, liabilities grew from $6 million to over $123 million.

A large portion of the profits associated with the projects (sales of lots and tracts) were taken into income immediately. This accounting treatment is improper (as such sales were usually fully financed by the Institution and indirectly by its subsidiary). Instead, the profits should have been deferred. If the profits were booked properly, the Institution would be, in fact, insolvent.

These profits also had a direct relationship to savings growth. By increasing net worth with the profits, the Institution effectively maintained a base to support some of this growth. The growth allowed Mr. McDougal to make the development investments and to direct cash payments to himself and other insiders.

In addition to the improper accounting entries, management blatantly disregarded numerous regulations, including the growth regulation. It is also apparent that certain provisions of the August 6, 1974 Supervisory Agreement were ignored.

The Board of Directors consented to a Cease and Desist order which became effective on August 15, 1980, and is shown as Exhibit 1. This order addresses most of the problems contained in the comments.

In the Board of Directors' meeting on July 17, 1986, Mr. John Latham resigned as a Director, and the Board terminated his employment as Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer. He was retained as an advisor to the Board. A Board Committee, composed of Directors Cuffman and Hawkins, is now directing the affairs of the Institution.

Formal investigative powers have been granted in this case under Section 407(m)(2) of the National Housing Act.

The Sewer District also does not appear to provide a secondary source of repayment. Since its three commissioners are McDougal-Henley Group members (William Henley, Pat Harris, and Bruce Watson), the Sewer District is not an independent entity. The Sewer District continues to have substantial negative cash flows, both before and after debt service. These operating deficits are funded by Madison Guaranty loans to the Sewer District. Periodically these loans are repaid when Madison Guaranty purchases additional bonds.

Mr. Latham and Mr. McDougal stated that Maple Creek would eventually be profitable. Director Hawkins even questioned why the examiners were reviewing the project. However, Mr. Latham admitted that no feasibility study has ever been prepared on Maple Creek. He also stated that continued development was based on the early sales experience. However, as noted above, the nature of the development has changed (lot size reduced), and the current sales experience has been poor.

1. Overview

The Castle Grande project involves approximately 1,100 acres of land located about ten miles south of Little Rock, Arkansas. At the time of purchase, the land was improved with a water and sewer system and an industrial building. The parcel was purchased from the former corporate owner under a workout arrangement with the owner's creditors. This land was purchased and sold in a series of fictitious transactions involving McDougal-Henley Group members and Madison Financial. These sales were usually fully financed by Madison Guaranty, and down payments generally came from the proceeds of loans or fees paid by Madison Guaranty or its subsidiaries. Because arbitrarily low cost allocations were used in calculating the cost of sales, these transactions generated $1,817,000 of inflated profits that were recognized at the time of sale by Madison Financial. Sales commissions of $375,000 were paid to Madison Real Estate.

Approximately half of the land is being developed by Madison Financial as single-family sites for manufactured homes. Of the $715,000 of development costs paid to April 30, 1986, $104,000 (14.5%) has been paid to McDougal-Henley Group members or related business entities.

2. Reasons for Classification

The total current investment in this project exceeds its current economic value, in part, because of the inflated profits and payments to insiders. The classified investment includes the direct investment of Madison Financial and the commercial loans by Madison Guaranty to fully finance sales of land to McDougal-Henley Group members who apparently acted as straws. Since Madison Guaranty has apparently retained the risks of ownership on these loans, they are also considered direct investments.

There are significant problems with the project. Much of the land is low and swampy and cannot be developed without considerable cost. The sale of the land for an industrial, commercial, or home site use is the primary source of both repayment of the loans and return of the investment. There is no evidence that there is a viable market for this land in any of these uses. The land has been on the market as industrial sites for ten years without significant sales. Most of the sales volume that has occurred so far has been to insiders acting as straw buyers. The sales of home sites have been the best, most easily developed lots. Many of these sales involve preferential financing by Madison Guaranty. Some of these loans are to borrowers with such poor credit that they might not obtain financing elsewhere. Most of the home development near Little Rock has not occurred south of town where Castle Grande is located. The loss classification is based on a survey of current market data made by the Appraisal Specialist.

Reports and other documentation of cost, value, and feasibility are so completely inadequate that no reliance can be placed in them. The Appraisal Specialist reviewed a representative sample of the appraisals made on the entire project and in underwriting Madison Guaranty loans. He found that they did not conform to the guidelines of NLRB Memorandum 9-41b, and did not even conform to any acceptable appraisal process.

There does not appear to be a reliable secondary source of repayment of the loans or return of the investment. The borrowers on the classified loans are McDougal-Henley Group members who acted as straws and have little or no cash equity in the project. Most of the borrowers have little apparent financial worth independent of Madison Guaranty. Thus, these borrowers may not have either the ability or inclination to pay the loans themselves.

The land and improvements which secure three of the loans, do generate revenue from outside sources. However, the lease payments from an industrial building are insufficient to cover the debt service on the loan to Fitzhugh. Castle Sewer and Water receives fees from users of the Castle Grande system which could provide debt service on its two loans. However, the fees attaching new customers to the system are to be paid by Madison Financial which is not an outside source of income. Both the hook-on fees and the continuing user fees are dependent on land sales in the development, and the sewer system will operate with a negative cash flow for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Latham stated that management believed Castle Grande would be profitable based upon their experience at Maple Creek and upon Castle Grande's subsequent sales history. However, as discussed elsewhere, Maple Creek sales activity is very sluggish, and there is reason to doubt that the sales in Castle Grande indicate a viable market.

5 James McDougal was a friend of then-Governor Clinton's, and 6 I believe that they may have been business partners.

7 *Mrs. Roukema. So you recall that Mr. Parr not only 16 *Mrs. Roukema. Primarily, at that point, you were very

18 *Mr. Clark. Yes.

19 *Mrs. Roukema. In conducting your examination of 22 *Mr. Clark. Yes. Infrequently, I came across notes,

17 *Mr. Sanders. So you found nothing whatsoever.

18 *Mr. Clark. We found no transactions involving Mr.

SUBJECT: Madison Guaranty S&LA ("Madison")
Little Rock, Arkansas
FHLBB No. 7601

At the request of Madison's management, a meeting was held today at 1:00 p.m. in the Pueblo Room, FHLB of Dallas. Attending were: John Latham, CEO; Greg Young, CFO; Sarah Worsham-Hawkins, Sr. V.P.; Jim Smith, Supervisory Agent; John Mitchell, Supervisory Analyst; Anna Mullican, Supervisory Analyst; and Jim Boggs, Supervisory Analyst. The purpose of the meeting was for Madison's management to become acquainted with regulatory personnel and to discuss the business plan previously submitted by Madison.

The SA indicated general satisfaction with Madison's business plan as well as corrections and improvements following the last examination report except that the rapid growth has not been accompanied by proportionate increases in Net Worth. Madison's business plan reflects projected total assets at December 31, 1985 of $100 million which would be 108 percent annual growth over the fiscal year. Projected net worth is $1.5 million which is only 1.5 percent of total assets and insufficient to meet the minimum net worth requirement. The institution has grown at an annualized rate of 192 percent through the first two months of 1985. The SA advised that, without adequate net worth, the growth would have to be curtailed. Ms. Hawkins stated that, under the new regulation, the estimated net worth requirement at March 31 would be $1.12 million, and net worth would be about $300,000 short of meeting that requirement. The Association plans to issue $600,000 of preferred stock for which a buyer is awaiting issuance, and a second issue of an unknown amount will follow shortly thereafter. The business plan projects total assets at $148 million at December 31, 1987, and management professes concern for its net worth position and an intent to meet all regulatory requirements.

A discussion was had regarding Madison's service corporation development projects, with which we have a reasonable comfort level. The service corporation, Madison Financial Corporation, is run by Jim McDougal, who owns 84 percent of Madison. Development has involved purchase of relatively cheap raw land and development into lots or tracts (1-5 acre) suitable for building. Madison has financed lot sales, but has not become involved in any commercial construction loans incident to any developments. The projects are:

- (1) Maple Creek - A highly successful residential development just southeast of Little Rock. Initial phases are sold out, with later phases over 70 percent sold.
- (2) Gold Mine Springs - A development in rural north central Arkansas. Within the last two weeks, this project is almost sold out; what has not been sold will be sold to a limited partnership.

- (3) Green Tree Farms and Fair Oaks - two projects of 50-55 tracts of 2-5 acres each in Camden, Arkansas. Green Tree Farms is completely sold, and Fair Oaks is over 70 percent sold in 4 months.
- (4) Campobello Island - A residential tract development in Nova Scotia. Sales have at least equalled Madison's investment in this project. Madison has only a one-fourth interest in this project by virtue of its one-half interest in a joint venture comprised of two limited partnerships. After the return of investment, some 3400 acres remain which can be developed. Madison is not obligated to be a lender or participant in further development, though it may choose to later participate. One acre tracts have been developed for summer homes, with plans by the joint venturers to later build a hotel, marina, etc.

The SA advised that Madison's growth, investment strategy and net worth compliance would be monitored closely. Though the institution was profitable ($104,080) in 1984 and shows a $128,400 profit for the first 2 months of fiscal year 1985, the SA advised that growth would have to be accompanied by adequate capital.

I. SCOPE AND FOCUS OF THE INVESTIGATION.

On February 4, 1994, the Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC") issued an Order of Investigation in the matter of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, McCrory, Arkansas ("Madison Guaranty"). The Order of Investigation stated (among other things) that the investigation would seek to determine whether former officers, directors and others who provided services to, or otherwise dealt with, Madison Guaranty . . . its successors or affiliates, may be liable as a result of any actions, or failures to act, in connection with or which may have affected Madison, its successors or affiliates . . .

The Order was issued consistent with 12 U.S.C. § 1441a(b)(14), as modified by the RTC Completion Act of 1993, Public Law 103-204. That statute extended the limitations period applicable to RTC claims arising from fraud, intentional misconduct resulting in unjust enrichment and intentional ~~misconduct resulting~~ in substantial losses to the institution.

~~The focus of the investigation was shaped by several factors. First, a number of the officers, directors and other people involved with Madison Guaranty and related entities had been released from liability or discharged in bankruptcy, or had only minimal assets to satisfy any judgment that the RTC might obtain against them. Second, the losses associated with a number of the real estate loans and projects were, standing alone, too small to make it likely that litigation could be cost-effective. Third, it became apparent that funds had been transferred among individuals and entities associated with Madison Guaranty or with Madison Guaranty's principal owners, Jim and Susan McDougal, in ways that could not readily be justified or explained.~~

In light of these factors, (1) ~~the investigation of real estate loans and projects focused primarily on the two transactions presenting the strongest combination of facts and possible sources of recovery (Castle Grande and 1308 Main Street, Little Rock); (2) the investigation of other real estate loans and projects looked for patterns and practices of misconduct that might make it cost-effective and not unduly complex to add these transactions to any litigation that might be brought based on Castle Grande and 1308 Main Street; and (3) the investigation of Whitewater included an effort, using forensic accountants, to trace funds back to Madison Guaranty and, in so doing, to look for patterns and practices of misconduct in the funds transfers among individuals and entities associated with Madison Guaranty or with Jim and Susan McDougal.~~

In February 1994, the RTC retained Pillsbury Madison & Sutro LLP ("PM&S") as outside counsel to assist in the investigation. Thereafter, the RTC retained Jordan & Keys as outside counsel to assist in the investigation and Tucker Alan Inc. as forensic accountants to provide financial and economic analysis support.

II. EXTENT OF INVESTIGATION TO DATE.

Pursuant to the Order of Investigation, over 350 boxes of documents from the following sources have been collected and examined:

1. Records of Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial
2. Records of the Office of Thrift Supervision
3. Records of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board
4. Reports of Borod & Huggins and Gerrish & McCreary
5. Aetna Life & Casualty Company
6. Arkansas Securities Department
7. Citizens Bank of Jonesboro
8. William Jefferson Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton
9. First Commercial Bank
10. First National Bank of Wynne (fka Bank of Cherry Valley)
11. ~~First Ozarks National Bank (fka Citizens Bank of Flippin)~~
12. J. W. Fulbright
13. Madison Bank and Trust
14. McCartney, Manning, McDonald & Guinn, Inc.
15. ~~James B. McDougal~~

19. Searcy County Bank
20. Security Bank of Paragould
21. Stephens Security Bank
22. Stogniew & Associates
23. Virginia Surety Co., Inc.
24. Worthen Bank
25. Betsy Wright, Wexler Group

In addition, Jordan & Keys obtained other documents from additional witnesses.

Beyond the sources of documents listed above, the following individuals have produced documents either by voluntary production or by subpoena:

1. Lisa Aunspaugh
2. George Betts
3. Jim Clark
4. Stephen Cuffman
5. Harry Don Denton

6. Mary Freeman
7. Sarah Hawkins
8. Larry Kuca
9. ~~Sheffield Nelson~~
10. Dean Paul
11. George N. Plastiras
12. R. D. Randolph
13. Sue Strayhorn

A number of other witnesses have responded that they either retained no documents pertinent to the investigation or had previously turned over their documents to the Office of the Independent Counsel without retaining copies.

In March 1994, the RTC moved for production of documents in the hands of the Independent Counsel. The motion requested Madison Guaranty documents and the Quapaw Title Company records formerly in the possession of the RTC that had passed to Central Bank & Trust, which purchased much of Madison Guaranty. That motion was granted and an agreed order was entered on May 25, 1994. A similar motion was filed on October 4, 1994, seeking documents which had been turned over to Independent Counsel by various witnesses. On November 2, 1994, an order was entered allowing the RTC to obtain those documents.

The RTC has issued administrative subpoenas for documents or a combination of documents and testimony as follows:

Aetna Life & Casualty Company
 George Betts
 R. J. Brown
 Citizens Bank of Jonesboro
 William Jefferson Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton

In addition, documents were obtained from other sources:

RTC criminal referrals
 Documents from other sources assembled by PM&S
 FDIC Reports of Examination and other documents
 Records of Ingersoll & Bloch
 Records of litigation between Madison Guaranty and Bill Henley Records of Meux v. Earth Movers
 Records of Newgent, et al. v. Great Southern Land Co. et al.
 Records of United States v. James B. McDougal

Forty-five depositions and interviews of individuals have been conducted.
 These witnesses are:

Lisa Aunspaugh

Of these witnesses, the McDougals declined to answer questions, invoking the Fifth Amendment. Wade consented to an initial interview but refused a second interview, invoking the Fifth Amendment.

Interrogatories were served on William J. and Hillary R. Clinton and Christopher Wade. The Clintons answered the interrogatories propounded to them. Wade has not answered his interrogatories. Initially he indicated through counsel that he would submit to an interview. Later, after he became dissatisfied with his plea arrangements and sentencing, he indicated through counsel that he would invoke the Fifth Amendment.

As a result of this investigation, several reports were prepared detailing findings. These reports are:

- o Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Whitewater Development Company, Inc., A Preliminary Report to the Resolution Trust Corporation (Apr. 24, 1995).
- o Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Whitewater Development Company, Inc., A Supplemental Report to the Resolution Trust Corporation (Dec. 13, 1995).
- o A Report on Certain Real Estate Loans and Investments Made by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Related Entities (Dec. 19, 1995).
- o A Report on the Representation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan by the Rose Law Firm (Dec. 28, 1995).
- o A Report on the Rose Law Firm's Conduct of Accounting Malpractice Litigation Pertaining to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan (Dec. 28, 1995).

In addition, co-counsel (Jordan & Keys) and RTC lawyers handled other parts of the investigation and issued reports of their own covering topics such as other real estate loans and investments, check kiting and the representation of Madison Guaranty by the law firm of Mitchell, Williams, Selig & Tucker.

III. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND - MADISON GUARANTY SAVINGS AND LOAN.

A. The regulatory history.

In October 1980, Jim and Susan McDougal acquired control of a commercial bank, Madison Bank & Trust Company ("Madison Bank"), formerly known as The Bank of Kingston. Jim McDougal soon became disenchanted with Madison Bank because, as a commercial bank, it did not provide a vehicle through which he could invest in real estate. Changes in the law meant that a savings and loan association could be such a vehicle.

In January 1982, the McDougals purchased an interest in Woodruff County Savings and Loan Association, which they later renamed Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. Much of the acquisition was financed by bank loans, as had been the McDougals' acquisition of Madison Bank. With these two acquisitions, McDougal took on more than a half million dollars of personal debt. Madison Bank and Madison Guaranty did not earn enough to service that debt, which increasingly burdened the McDougals. The McDougals' cash-flow problems came to a head between 1984 and 1986.

At acquisition, Madison Guaranty was a small traditional rural savings and loan on the brink of failure. McDougal once said that the Association's losses at acquisition would have exhausted its net worth within four months. McDougal's response was an attempt to grow the thrift out of its problems. In the first full year of McDougal's tenure, Madison Guaranty's total assets grew from $6.6 million (at December 31, 1982) to $17.0 million (at December 31, 1983). To achieve this asset growth, Madison Guaranty initially relied heavily on costly brokered deposits. By and large, Madison Guaranty used its new deposits to invest in real estate loans ($8.5 million at December 31, 1983) and to invest in Madison Financial's projects ($1.2 million at December 31, 1983).

Many of the direct investments were investments in real estate acquisition and development projects made through a newly created service corporation, Madison Financial Corporation ("Madison Financial"), which Madison Guaranty formed in February 1982. Madison Financial participated in real estate development projects both in Arkansas and as distant as the Campobello project in New Brunswick, Canada. These projects followed a pattern established by McDougal back in the 1970s. Typically, McDougal would locate tracts of land near lakes or streams, buy these tracts at a low price, subdivide the property and sell lots as vacation or retirement home lots on an installment basis, taking notes in return.

For the most part, Madison Guaranty financed Madison Financial's activities. Frequently Madison Guaranty's aggregate investment in Madison Financial exceeded the limits imposed by Arkansas law. Madison Financial maintained a checking account at Madison Guaranty, which was regularly overdrawn. In time, the negative balances grew so large that the balance shown on monthly statements started with a comma: There was not sufficient room on the statement to show a seven-figure negative number. Ultimately, Madison Guaranty simply deemed the overdraft an additional investment. By that point, it exceeded $2 million.

As Madison Guaranty moved into real estate loans and investments, payments to affiliates of McDougal and payments between and among various real estate projects grew. Relatively large commissions typically were paid to Susan McDougal or her brothers, among others. Lots often were sold to McDougal's business associates in transactions fully financed by Madison Guaranty. In addition, money often moved between and among seemingly unrelated entities and ventures.

In January 1984, the FHLBB started a special limited examination of Madison Guaranty. The report of examination sent to Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors on June 1, 1984 was sharply critical of the Association— Noting that scheduled items were almost double the association's net worth, it stated that "[t]he viability of the institution is jeopardized through the institution's current investment and lending practices in real estate development projects." It also noted improper recognition of substantial profits from real estate sales. The examiners determined that approximately $565,000 of gains recognized by Madison Financial on the sale of real estate were improper. Adjusting Madison's books by that amount would have more than eliminated the net worth of the institution: It would have created a capital deficit of $70,000. The relevant accounting issue under 12 C.F.R. § 563.23-1(f)(3)-(4) (1984)<sup>1</sup> was remediable, however, and management made changes that it contended allowed it to recognize the profits despite the criticism.

The report of examination also noted loan underwriting and documentation problems; poor appraisal practices; loans to affiliates; excessive concentration in real estate development projects; loans to borrowers without equity; over-reliance on brokered deposits; violations of regulations; poor records, systems and controls; and inexperienced management. In response, management filed a plan for addressing most of these deficiencies; for the most part, the FHLBB deemed this plan satisfactory.

The 1984 examination led to a supervisory agreement, to which Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors consented in July 1984. The supervisory agreement required compliance with net worth and affiliated party transaction regulations, and better policies and procedures.

In October 1984, Jim and Susan McDougal resigned as directors and officers of Madison Guaranty. They remained majority shareholders; Jim McDougal remained chairman and president of Madison Financial until July 1986; and by most accounts other than his own Jim McDougal continued to dominate Madison Guaranty.

In March 1986, the FHLBB began another examination of Madison Guaranty. The problems recognized in the 1984 report of examination not only remained but had become much worse. On June 19, 1986, the FHLBB wrote to the Board of Directors of Madison Guaranty to report on its interim findings. This letter alleged a violation of the July 19, 1984 supervisory agreement and noted Madison Guaranty's continued failure to comply with the FHLBB's net worth requirements.

On July 11, 1986, the FHLBB called Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors to a meeting in Dallas. The directors were instructed to remove Jim McDougal as chairman and president of Madison Financial (he had resigned his Madison Guaranty offices in 1984) and John Latham as chairman of Madison Guaranty. McDougal and Latham resigned. A month later, the FHLBB entered a cease and desist order ("C&D") against Madison Guaranty. Shortly thereafter, the FHLBB undertook a special limited examination to determine whether Madison Guaranty's new management had complied with the C&D. The report determined that new management was attempting to comply with the C&D but had not complied in all respects and was paying itself excessive compensation.

Between 1984 and 1986, Madison Guaranty was audited by Frost & Company. In July 1986, Frost & Company was replaced by the accounting firm now known as KPMG Peat Marwick. By May 1987, KPMG Peat Marwick had concluded that the financial statements for 1985 audited by Frost & Company materially misstated Madison Guaranty's financial condition. As restated by KPMG Peat Marwick in an audit report issued May 22, 1987, Madison Guaranty's financial statements for 1985 showed a regulatory net worth of negative $4.78 million as of December 31, 1985. Thus, after the issuance of KPMG Peat Marwick's audit report in May 1987, Madison Guaranty was known to be insolvent.

The FHLBB did not take over Madison Guaranty until February 1989; in large part because the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation ("FSLIC") lacked the money needed to take over all failed thrifts, and many other institutions presented worse problems and larger losses. On February 28, 1989, the FHLBB found that Madison Guaranty was insolvent and that grounds existed to appoint FSLIC Madison Guaranty's conservator. After the enactment of FIRREA, the RTC succeeded FSLIC as Madison Guaranty's conservator. On November 30, 1989, the Office of Thrift Supervision placed Madison Guaranty in receivership and appointed the RTC receiver.

B. Analysis of Madison Guaranty's failure.

This section presents a financial analysis, prepared by Tucker Alan Inc., of the failure of Madison Guaranty. This analysis is based primarily on the annual audited financial statements of Madison Guaranty from December 31, 1982 through December 31, 1987,<sup>2</sup> and the 1984 and 1986 FHLBB reports of examination.

<sup>2</sup> The 1982 and 1983 financial statements were audited by Deloitte Haskins & Sells. The 1984 and 1985 financial statements were audited by Frost & Company. Frost & Co. also prepared the Clintons' personal tax returns from 1978 through 1983. KPMG Peat Marwick audited Madison Guaranty's 1986 and 1987 financial statements, as well as the interim period ending June 30, 1986. KPMG Peat Marwick also re-audited the 1985 financial statements and made substantial modifications to Frost & Company's work.

1. Summary.

- Madison Guaranty grew rapidly with little capital. Total assets increased from $6.6 million as of December 31, 1982 to $17.0 million by December 31, 1983, $49.0 million by December 31, 1984 and $109.7 million by December 31, 1985. Madison Guaranty had very little capital or loan loss reserves to absorb losses. By December 31, 1985, according to Frost & Company, Madison Guaranty had just $1,841,905 of regulatory capital (1.9% of deposits) and $150,000 of loan loss reserves.
- Madison Guaranty's "core" operations were unprofitable. Initially growth was funded by high-cost, short-term brokered deposits. As Madison Guaranty grew, it did not generate enough of an interest margin to cover substantially increasing operating expenses.<sup>3</sup> This alone (even without loss-causing real estate investments) could have caused Madison Guaranty's failure soon after it was acquired by McDougal.
- Madison Guaranty was dependent on profits booked on sales of real estate. Madison Guaranty recognized $1,978,383 in gains from the sale of real estate in 1983 and 1984. Madison Guaranty's regulatory net worth was just $700,000 by December 31, 1984. Without these real estate gains, Madison Guaranty's net worth would have been negative $1,278,383 by the end of 1984.
- Madison Financial's real estate projects ultimately lost substantial sums of money. Madison Financial's first big real estate project (Maple Creek) ultimately caused a principal loss of approximately $3.1 million to Madison Guaranty. Later projects, including Castle Grande, Campobello and six other real estate developments, ultimately caused more principal losses totaling approximately <sup>3</sup> Interest margin is the lifeblood of a sound thrift; it "pays the bills." Interest margin is the difference between interest income earned on loans and investments and interest expense incurred from deposits and other borrowings. "Core" operations are the normal and recurring functions of the thrift and generally include the interest margin and recurring sources of fee income (such as normal customer service charges) less normal operating expenses. Core operations exclude income sources that are dependent on business cycles (such as loan fees) or are nonrecurring, such as gains on sales of assets such as loans, investments or real estate.

- o Whitewater did not meaningfully contribute to Madison Guaranty's failure. As discussed in the reports on Whitewater, at most $88,022 in funds traceable to Madison Guaranty was deposited into Whitewater. This did not cause Madison Guaranty's failure; that was caused by the much more substantial problems summarized above and discussed in further detail below.

2. 1982: The first year of McDougal control.

At the beginning of 1982, Madison Guaranty had total assets of $3,873,310 and capital for financial reporting purposes of $74,473. By the end of 1982, total assets had grown to $6,595,244, and capital for financial reporting purposes was $83,817.

In 1982, Madison Guaranty lost $95,656. Contributing to that loss was a $101,882 negative interest margin. In all the years of McDougal control, poor interest margins were a chronic financial problem; this greatly contributed to Madison Guaranty's failure.

3. 1983-1984: Rapid growth and questionable profits.

Madison Guaranty's total assets grew to $17,059,979 by the end of 1983. This represented a large increase but it seems almost modest compared to what was to occur thereafter. By the end of 1984, Madison Guaranty's total assets had grown to $48,961,154. In 1983 and 1984, little was done to provide and build reserves for the risk inherent in Madison Guaranty's rapid loan growth and development risk (real estate investments). As of December 31, 1984, Madison Guaranty had a total loan loss reserve of just $75,000.

Madison Guaranty reported profits of $117,127 in 1983. Within the revenues that generated that profit were gains on the sale of real estate totaling $1,000,068.

4 Losses described in this section are derived from damages calculations prepared by RTC Investigations. The calculations include cash investment losses consisting of unrecovered acquisition and development costs and related loan losses; prejudgment interest and other lost opportunity earnings components have been excluded. On this basis, principal losses are estimated as of July 1995 as follows: Maple Creek, $3.1 million; Castle Grande, $7,051,207; Campobello, $2,934,452; Brittany Point, $259,374; Lake Faircrest, $677,200; Greentree Farms, $105,911; Fair Oaks, $404,143; Gold Mine Springs, $262,390; and Eden Park, $483,796.

Madison Guaranty reported a loss of $74,046 in 1984 and had virtually no interest margin, just $48,047. This loss would have been substantially greater but for $978,315 of gains on sale of real estate recognized during the year.

Thus, during the two-year period ending December 31, 1984, Madison Guaranty recognized net income of just $43,081. Without the real estate sales profits of $1,978,383 described above, Madison Guaranty would have lost $1,935,302.<sup>5</sup> This would have substantially more than absorbed its regulatory capital, reported to be $700,000 as of December 31, 1984.

Real estate profits in 1983 and 1984 masked the explosion of Madison Guaranty's operating expenses. During McDougal's first year of control, 1982, the thrift incurred just $213,984 of operating expenses, including an incredibly low $86,793 of compensation cost. In 1983, operating costs increased to $990,523 (including $375,175 in compensation expense). Operating costs in 1984 increased even further to $1,554,589 (including $578,633 in compensation expense). Of total operating costs in 1983 and 1984, approximately one-half was spent by Madison Financial: $524,730 in 1983 and $721,247 in 1984.

From an accounting and regulatory point of view, the real estate profits presented two main issues: ~~revenue recognition issues and loss contingency~~ issues. The revenue recognition issues (mentioned above) centered on the fact that Madison Guaranty financed nearly all of Madison Financial's real estate sales, many of which were to friends and insiders who put up no real equity of their own.<sup>6</sup> The loss contingency issues centered on the failure of Madison Guaranty and its audits to recognize losses once its real estate projects began to turn sour.

Without its reported profits on real estate sales, Madison Guaranty was insolvent by December 31, 1983. Reported regulatory net worth at that time was just $354,994, bolstered by real estate profits of $1,000,068. Without these profits, regulatory net worth would have been a negative $645,074. Because Madison Guaranty's core operations were substantially unprofitable, only new capital infusions or other business opportunities would have restored Madison Guaranty to solvency. That never happened.

<sup>5</sup> This calculation is an approximation. It is possible that certain incremental expenses might not have been incurred absent those sales (e.g., legitimate sales commissions), or that management might have controlled certain expenses had it not been for these real estate profits. Even so, the financial impact would still have been substantial.

<sup>6</sup> There were other issues as well. Project cost accounting often was arbitrary. Large commissions were paid to friends and insiders. Contracts were awarded without any serious bidding or negotiation over price.

4. 1985: More rapid growth and more large reported real estate profits.

Madison Guaranty's total assets grew from $48,961,154 at the end of 1984 to $109,680,561 at the end of 1985. Madison Guaranty reported net income of $829,614 in 1985. Included in gross income was $1,857,684 from the sale of real estate. Without that income, Madison Guaranty would have lost more than $1 million.

Once again, Madison Guaranty had a thin net interest margin, just 70 basis points, or $460,513. This compares to operating expenses that had grown from $1,554,589 in 1984 to $2,826,278 in 1985 (including $1,231,606 in compensation). Thus, Madison Guaranty's core operations continued to be substantially unprofitable. Even with the substantial real estate development profits recognized by the institution, Madison Guaranty's reported regulatory net worth of $1,841,905 was below its minimum requirement of $3,691,000, as reported in its December 31, 1985 financial statements audited by Frost & Company.

Between McDougal's acquisition and December 31, 1985, Madison Guaranty reported profits on the sale of real estate of $3,836,067. This compares to aggregate reported net income for the same period (1982 through 1985) of $777,039. These profits were derived from projects that ultimately resulted in losses to Madison Guaranty of approximately $9.3 million. In future years, Madison Guaranty would have to recognize $13.1 million in losses to turn these $3.8 million in gains into $9.3 million in losses. That process did not begin, however, until after the replacement of Frost & Company in 1986.

As noted, Madison Guaranty reported net income of $829,614 for the year ended December 31, 1985. Frost & Company agreed with that number and issued an unqualified opinion. After FHLBB examiners discovered that Frost & Company's engagement partner had borrowed money from Madison Guaranty during the engagement, KPMG Peat Marwick was hired to perform the 1986 audit. As part of its services, KPMG Peat Marwick also performed its own audit of Madison Guaranty's 1985 financial statements. Its conclusions were quite different.

Instead of net income of $829,614, KPMG Peat Marwick concluded that Madison Guaranty should have reported a net loss of $5,188,718. With this restatement, Madison Guaranty's regulatory net worth became a negative $4,776,427, approximately $8,600,000 below minimum capital requirements.

5. 1986-1987: More losses.

Madison Guaranty's assets did not grow substantially after 1985. Total assets grew marginally to $114,606,063 by the end of 1986, then shrank to $109,330,064 by the end of 1987.

Madison Guaranty lost $4,801,661 in 1986 and $3,674,129 in 1987. These losses included provisions for loan and real estate losses totaling $3,902,375. In total, KPMG Peat Marwick required $9,546,367 of loss provisions and gain reversals for 1985 through 1987.

Madison Guaranty's deficit regulatory net worth at December 31, 1987 was $12,186,000. According to RTC Investigations, later loan and real estate losses when combined with operating and liquidation costs would ultimately increase this deficit to approximately $60 million.

From an economic point of view, Madison Guaranty's failure was the result of almost no capital and reserves, thin interest margins and substantially unprofitable core operations combined with unsuccessful real estate speculation and questionable payments to insiders. The McDougals' real estate activities were gambles resulting from the need to find income to mask the thrift's core problems while at the same time funding the money they paid to their relatives, insiders and themselves. The gamble failed, but by the time it did, the deficit at Madison Guaranty had grown from a few hundred thousand dollars in 1982 to approximately $60 million today.

IV. RESULTS OF THE INVESTIGATION.

The results of the investigation are set forth in the five reports listed above on page 6. Those results should be read in light of the reports' discussions of the methodology employed in this investigation and its limitations.

Sam -

Madison Guaranty is in pretty serious trouble. Because of Bill's relationship w/ McDougal, we probably ought to talk about it. The meeting referred to in the attached letter has been moved up to July 11, 1986 and the FHLBB has asked me to be ~~at~~ at the meeting.

Please note that while all of the FHLBB restrictions in the letter are serious, #5 & 6 effectively put Madison out of business.

"Thank you for your support."

Faulk - opening comments
"will change today"

Chip - addresses net worth

- 1) short of requirement
- 2) rapid growth - 125% in 1983 - approx 30% net worth
- 3) effect of 5 major projects - institution may be insolvent at this time

Rolf - comments on projects

- 1) misallocation of cost
- 2) recognition of income - REO (profit not booked out)
- 3) auditor concerns - not independent

Chip - concerns about books and records

- 1.) lean underwriting standards - inadequate
- concerns about compensation
- 1.) inappropriate - especially Latham + McDougal's
10% override of net income

Rolf - expands on compensation

- 1.) discloses knowledge of CFO Young's contract - compensation based on income found on books net of audit adjustments

Faulk - asks Latham about Young's employee contract

Latham - not an employment contract more like a job description not a guarantee, more incentive

Selig - requests examiners give names of personnel employment contracts to be provided as provided previously

PRIVILEGED

Ch.p - addresses affiliated loans

Rolf - addresses 'excessive payments to insiders

- 2) purpose to generate cash to McDougals, Henley - Lathem
- 3) purpose not to run institution in profitable manner but to benefit individuals

* COMMENT - Latham made audible smirk.

- 4) land flip - added value
- 5) unsound judgment - not proper oversight by Boers
- 6) false, inaccurate, misleading information
- 7) limiting access to records
- 8) unprofitable operations - day to day
- 9) CFO Young's analysis of breakeven

Faulk - addresses Board's fiduciary responsibilities

- 1) needs to get true picture of institution
- 2) examiners not thorough with classification of assets
- 3) appears shop would be insolvent on 3 projects
- 4) shop will probably be insolvent after appraisals
- questions Selig - "are you counsel for McDougal."

Selig - Replies "No." - acting as counsel for Association
McDougals have own counsel

Faulk - addresses 1.) high rates on savings

- 2) FASB GG - not real net worth
- 3) "There will be a C+D."
- 4) "Love to see McDougal out of this business"
- 5) Can't understand management

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - asks Beverly Bassett if she wants to say anything
Bassett - "I" have no comment

* COMMENT - Strange Faulk asked for her comments as Bassett's silence interesting

Selig - wants to make sure this is not a temporary C.D.
Faulk - "no"

Selig - Board came in spirit of co-operation
Board has met and is trying to resolve problems
Requests to discuss recent actions of Board

Faulk - refuses to listen to Selig will listen later, not now wants answer (response to) C.D.

* COMMENT - Observe Latham sweating profusely and uncomfortable

Selig - continues to press for opportunity to state his case

Bruton - cuts off Selig
we appreciate what you're saying however, there will be no change in C.D.

ADJOURN MEETING to allow Board to review
C.D.

PRIVILEGED

Resume 11 30 am

* OBSERVATION - Latham again composed
Selg - Bruton absent

Faulk - asks for Board's comments on C/D

Cuffman - states they need more time for evaluation.
they didn't have a good opportunity to review it
I can't sign without knowing more about it

Faulk - "just tell me as a director what you think of this Association?" - asks Cuffman - notes fiduciary responsibility - "I'm sure you know what that means"

Cuffman - "I'm not an accountant"

Faulk - "I know you are an attorney."
likes to talk to Board, not Board's council directs "what do you think" question to Jack Owen

Owen - I'm in charge of Bradford, Augusta, McCreary branches
Has seen growth through branches - both CDs and demand dep
Spends 95% of his time in branches
Has been seeing growth of net worth
Opinion - we're doing O.K.

* OBSERVATION - Sarah Hawkins smiled at threat.
We have been losing deposits in White, Jackson + Woodruff Co.
Competition paying higher rates
Savings we had are now going out because we're not paying the rates

Faulk - to Owen "what about the projects?"

001399

PRIVILEGED

Owen - Board sat through discussions
 Feasibility studies - documented
 Appears to have fair return

Cuffman - has spent about 1 year on Board Board have all been active, have participated, were certainly well-intentioned
 Personally concerned about growth
 Impressed with net worth
 Didn't pay enough attention to the service corporation Service corp showed healthy profit - thought it was a good thing

Faulk - "Who did you rely on for information about the S.C."

Cuffman - "... Jim McDougal "

* COMMENT - Notable pause after Faulk's question.
 Cuffman appeared to hesitate before answering.

Cuffman - McDougal "clearly in charge of MFC."

Faulk - "Serah, what do you think?"

Hawkins - Look at Association from a regulatory standpoint
 Try to implement policies and procedures
 Try to hire qualified personnel - difficult to find in Little Rock area
 Now have staff we require - achieved in late '85
 Have been establishing procedures + controls
 Addresses regulatory requirements
 Business plans + subordinated debt consideration
 Trying to achieve net worth

* COMMENT - speech apparently rehearsed - too down pat to be spur of the moment - didn't really answer Faulk

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - how much direct involvement by Board w/ MFC

Cuffman - "not enough."

Faulk - Does the Board have a problem with the owners?

*COMMENT - No answer immediately.

Edwards - "... To this point, no reason to question it."

Owens - "I haven't."

Cuffman - My opinion developments were doing well. Finance appears to be stable.

*OBSERVATION - 11:40 B. Speed leaves room

Cuffman - Felt need to focus on savings and loan

Chip - directed to Cuffman - Were you aware of insider loans

Cuffman - not aware of insiders Has heard the words "straw men" used - don't agree *OBSERVATION - 11:43 B. Speed returns

Hawkins - What do you mean by straws? Are you talking about just major loans or small lot loans?

Chip - Both major and others. Seems to be a number of small loans but they are adding up to a substantial amount - appear to be "reaching for income"
Notes poor market

Faulk - makes comment to Latham - generally CEO taking the criticism in and does - seems to offer "sympathy"

001401

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - don't see insurances. Examiners brought a professional opinion down. We have a consensus between examiners, people in Washington and supervision in Dallas.

* COMMENT - Faulk seems to admonish Board wants to make it clear Supervision agrees with examiners.

* OBSERVATION - 11:47 Bruton and Selig enter

Bruton - are there any specific questions on the CTD?

Selig - have had time to only glance at it

Have some questions - sure a detailed reading will raise even more questions. Can't seem to understand this action. (Appears to be struggling for words)
Am not in a position at this time to advise the Board on CTD

Faulk - addresses asset quality. Board doesn't have an in-depth understanding of MFC

Selig - "2 to 3 day review of Association"

Authorized to address the ownership

Have met with the McDougals' and their attorneys

Have been informed they are willing to

1.) Terminate existing employment relationship with them

* COMMENT - Do they have an employment relationship?

Selig (cont) a) Jim McDougal is CEO of MFC

b) Neither Jim or Susan are directors

c) Are involved in real estate sales

Faulk - Who is on the Board of MFC?

Reply (by whom?) - Jim McDougal, Tom Latham, Craig Young

001402

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - propose to reconstitute MFC's Board.

Review existing Directors

Try to make directors of future, the directors of the McDougal should be entirely removed

Selig - McDougal proposed to stay on with consulting role and receive salary approved by the Board.

Faulk - its contribution - went home out

Selig - point 2) McDougals can't sell their stock at this time.
Propose to put stock in a voting trust, naming one or 2 independent trustees subject to approval by Dallas Stock will remain here until it can be sold or until net worth is 110% of regulatory requirements or direct investment within reg

Faulk - remove McDougal and Henley of any involvement

Selig - MFC has assets in land developments
Somebody has to sell

Faulk - can arrange compensation for sales, but not to Henley or McDougals must be subject to approval
Can the Board engage a real estate investment specialist for an analysis of the projects?

Selig - That's another thing we are prepared to do plus some kind of cash flow analysis.

*COMMENT - Selig seems to be babbling. Couldn't understand what point he was trying to make *OBSERVATION - Bassett frowning.

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - It is our opinion this is a FSUC shop. It's just a matter of time. -- will be insolvent

Need (1) a quality Board, (2) a competent and knowledgeable CEO and (3) an independent third party to make asset evaluation

System dictates we make changes

Must work together

What got this shop to this point?

If there's shenanigans, we will find out

What does the Board think?

* OBSERVATION - Faulk made very strong comments

Cutler smoking, appears nervous

Peacock kicked back, defensive, set frown

Hawkins sweating and concerned

Edwards reserved and concerned

Leatham sweating again, keeps looking to Selig

Selig (answering for Board)

Board is determined to take certain steps

Have no problems with third party reviews, but want to implement itself

Faulk - 3rd party must be a company approved by Dallas Has to meet certain specifications

Selig - Board intends to expand its membership by adding 2 independent directors - difficult to find

Faulk - remember your CEO will be gone, leaving another vacancy to fill

* OBSERVATION - Leatham nodding

Faulk - Do you have a vice chairman?

Answer - "No"

001404

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - Suggests Cuffman could possibly serve as interim Chairman and discuss members of committee to and from

Cuffman - "I suddenly feel very inadequate to the task"

Agrees to do it, do whatever is necessary

Concerned about the new CEO requirement

Questions whether they can find the person Dallas wants

Faulk - suggests they use a head hunter

Make best effort

Cuffman - deferring Latham

Can we retain John on the Board?

There may come a screening halt without him

Faulk - won't even try to discuss management succession

Feels no need to further discuss its inadequacy

Bruton through Faulk - Latham may remain for a

60 day transition period, not on the Board

Can not serve as CEO

Activity must be carefully monitored by committee

Bessett - asks for clarification

Faulk - no officer capacity - that's the swap

We can quibble after the meeting

Cuffman - supportive of 3rd party concept - verification

Wants to expand Board - difficult without Directors

Liability Insurance

Faulk - make good faith effort

Cuts off further discussion on matter

Bruton - when can I get an answer on the C-D
 *OBSERVATION - Letter visibly upset - trying to maintain tight control

Selig - not possible before Wednesday

Bruton - Fine. Will expect answer then. Call office here in Dallas to reach me. Make sure we have an understanding. May negotiate some time frames with the Supervision then

Faulk - Wednesday wants definite resolution of McDougal situation and report from 2 member committee on the CEO search, including name of 3rd party appraisal firm

Selig - brings out possible court alternative
 "This Board can't be bullied."

Bassett - Who is representing the McDougals?
 Answer: Tom Overby (Overheim) and Tim Dudley

Hawkins through Selig - wishes to discuss letter of June 17 sent by Supervision - prohibited activities *OBSERVATION - prepared statements

Hawkins + Selig
 1.) Item 4(c)

Wish to continue offering project loans at 5% down payment, 95% loan to value but with revised sales commission. Salesmen will receive only 1/2 of cash down payment as commission, the rest to be deferred and recognized as payments are received

001406

*OBSERVATION - could be making back entries - "reconciliation" new net sales advances on commissions, could be made up in other fees

PRIVILEGED

Faulk - Which project loans are you referring to?

Hawkins - mainly Timberline and Castle Grande

* COMMENT - Timberline commissions amount to little - future

Selig - pressing. What's wrong if purchaser is willing to put money down, is a good credit risk, assets has a satisfactory appraisal, etc?

* COMMENT - How do they define "good credit risk" & "appraisal"?

* OBSERVATION - Sarah Hawkins watching Jim Clark

* COMMENT - Uncertain of final resolution of this matter.

Chip - It was never our intention from preventing you from honoring legally binding commitments.

Hawkins - What about ~~Campobello~~?

Faulk - Clarified that they were allowing activity from letter of June 19 until meeting of July 11 because the examiners' findings were not complete

Questions title

Hawkins - Title has been conveyed already. We have a title policy

* COMMENT - Outright lie, based on examiners' review

Ford - Sarah, I asked you for the title policy and you said there wasn't any.

Hawkins - What you asked me about was a loan to Chris Wade.

What followed was an interchange with Ford, Clark and Hawkins. No agreement was reached.

Hawkins - There must be some misunderstanding.

PRIVILEGED

Bruton - Then there should be no problem with getting these deeds to Mr Clark first thing Monday morning, right?

Hawkins - O.K

Faulk - I understand there has been a problem with getting records. I need assurance there will no longer be a problem

Cutler - (snirk) Well, there are 2 sides to every story but you have our assurance.

Faulk - Is it agreeable to bring difficulty to the 2 member committee?

Clark - Asks for clarification. Submit our requests to the committee? (Confirmation) Yes, its agreeable

Hawkins - Examiners had full access to everyone in the Association from the first day. Caused confusion. We didn't know exactly what they wanted. Sometimes they didn't know themselves. We have not withheld any information

Selig - addresses Madison Marketing + Madison Real Estate

Bruton - not included in C+D, because we have been told they are d/b/a's of MFC

Answer: May continue business but no commissions to Henley or McDougals * OBSERVATION - Latham very uncomfortable. Applies Chapter:

PRIVILEGED

Hawkins - addresses Castle Sewer & Water

- * COMMENT - Confusion as to what Hawkins is trying to convey. Seems to be saying MFC has to contract with Castle Sewer.

Selig - MFC is currently ~~contracting~~ with Castle Sewer and Water to provide service to Castle Grande.

Clark - Why does MFC have to contract with them?

Selig - Purpose is to guarantee prices to Castle Grand purchasers

Faulk - Provide contract to examiners.

Wants to close meeting - was trying to hurry the Castle Sewer discussion

Hawkins - wishes to discuss one final point

Faulk - Fine, if she takes no more than 2 minutes.

Hawkins - What's the problem with the Wilson Co.?

Clark - explanation Wilson was former employee - had consulting agreement with Campobello - found check going to him

Hawkins - What check?

Faulk - absolutely cuts off further discussion. States she may discuss this matter with Clark any time she wishes

Hawkins - We'll have to look at this again. We'll discuss it with Mr Clark

INVESTIGATION OF WHITEWATER DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS

---

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1996

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WHITEWATER
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS,
Washington, DC.

The Committee met at 10:30 a.m., in room 216 of the Hart Senate Office Building, Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (Chairman of the Committee) presiding.

OPENING COMMENTS OF CHAIRMAN ALFONSE M. D'AMATO

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will come to order.

Would you stand for the purposes of taking the oath.

[Whereupon, Bobby J. Nash, Director of Presidential Personnel and Assistant to the President of the United States, Former Senior Executive Assistant for Economic Development, Little Rock, Arkansas; and Davis Fitzhugh, Former Vice President of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, Little Rock, Arkansas; were called as witnesses and, having first been duly sworn, were examined and testified as follows:]

The CHAIRMAN. Let me first of all thank the witnesses for being here. Mr. Nash if you have a statement that you would like to make to the Committee, we would be very pleased to receive it.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF BOBBY J. NASH DIRECTOR OF PRESIDENTIAL PERSONNEL AND ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES FORMER SENIOR EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Mr. NASH. Senator, I do not have a statement. I'll be very happy to answer the questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Fitzhugh, if you have an opening statement, we would be very pleased to receive it.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF DAVIS FITZHUGH FORMER VICE PRESIDENT OF MADISON GUARANTY SAVINGS & LOAN, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I have no statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Why don't we proceed then. We have two panels today.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Welcome.

Mr. Fitzhugh, in 1985, you joined Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have to pull the mike a little bit closer. What was your job?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I was primarily in real estate activities.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Again, let me just ask you to pull the mike a little closer.

Mr. FITZHUGH. All right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You say you were in real estate activities. Just briefly, what did that involve?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, Madison was in the process of renovating the street on which their building was located, South Banks Street. It was a very decrepit part of town. One of the things I was hired to work on was to purchase some of the buildings and make sure the renovations were going properly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Fitzhugh, were you aware of the way in which Mr. McDougal was raising funds within the savings and loan in order to get the money to increase the capital that the savings and loan had?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The main thing that I can recall, at this point in time, is that he tried to solicit large CD's from people say age 60 and over.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say "CD's," do you mean he tried to get people who were senior citizens to buy certificates of deposit at the savings and loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes. If they had one that was maturing, roll it over or in one way or another attract bulk sums of money from senior citizens.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, did he go out in the Rolls Royce and drive some of these senior citizens down to the savings and loan so that they could sign up for the CD's?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I know that there was a Bentley that was owned by the savings and loan, and that may have taken place. I'm not entirely sure, but it was at least talked about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you also aware from the time you started to work at the savings and loan that Mr. McDougal knew then-Governor Clinton?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I did not know that when I joined the savings and loan, but I learned that afterwards, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you learn that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I guess it became more or less just common knowledge to people working down there.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you present when Mr. McDougal had phone conversations with Governor Clinton?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you see Governor Clinton yourself?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, not in the savings and loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Not at the savings and loan, but it was common knowledge within the savings and loan that he had a relationship with Governor Clinton?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you familiar with a deal called the IDC or the Industrial Development Company deal that was carried out in the fall of 1985?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I am.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Briefly, and there's a map over there to your right, am I correct that this deal involved property that was on the outskirts of Little Rock both north and south of a road called 145th Street?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Very briefly, what did you understand was the involvement of the savings and loan and more particularly its underlying investment company, Madison Financial, in that deal?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, the IDC was a company that had done a lot of development for industrial parks in the Little Rock area, and I believe at the time their main parties were either in ill health or some of them I believe had recently died. So I believe the IDC property, perhaps, people knew it was on the market or just assumed it was on the market. My understanding is that Madison purchased the entire assets of the IDC; and that included some of this property as well as some other things located in the city of Little Rock.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So your understanding was that, in practical effect, what Madison did was purchased all of this tract of property being sold by the IDC; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. When you say "in practical effect," I think there was some knowledge that Seth Ward was involved and perhaps Seth owned part and Madison owned part. I think there was a differentiation between who technically owned what.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Isn't the way the deal went down that Seth Ward was the nominal owner or the straw man in whose name the northern part of the property was purchased and Madison Financial took in its own name the southern part, but your understanding was that in reality all the money was Madison's money?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I couldn't honestly say I understood who had all the money, because I just wasn't really privy to that sort of thing, but as far as what you talked about, Seth Ward owning the north side and Madison the south, that was my understanding.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And your understanding was that the actual purchase was split that way because Madison needed to keep the amount of property or the amount of investment in its own name below a certain amount to comply with State regulations; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I knew that Madison did have only a certain amount of assets that could be placed in what we called MFC, and I believe that—or I was told that was one of the reasons that this was split up that way, but that's secondhand knowledge to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Who told you that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know that anyone necessarily told me that, but that was just again kind of common knowledge at the savings and loan.

The CHAIRMAN. It was common knowledge?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It was to me.

The CHAIRMAN. So Seth Ward really was the nominal holder of these properties so that the bank would not be in violation of the law; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, not necessarily that part of it. Simply that if I had any dealings, I dealt with the savings and loan. I never dealt with Seth Ward on the purchase of my Levi Strauss building. I never dealt with Seth Ward.

The CHAIRMAN. OK, good.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, let's get to that. Because what happened was you yourself wound up becoming the purchaser of one of those pieces of property in the northern part of—above 145th Street; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you identify for us using the numbers on that map which property it is?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Number 1.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So number 1 is just north of that highway. How did you come to be a buyer of that piece of property? Was that known as the Levi Strauss building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you come to be an owner of the Levi Strauss building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, Mr. McDougal asked me to come up into his office and asked me if I had a real estate license. And at the time I had an Arkansas broker's license that was active, and I replied yes. I was then in one way or another, I don't know if I was told or it just came to be that I was going to buy that building.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't look to buy that building; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I had never seen the building.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't see the building before you bought it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But Mr. McDougal made you understand that you were going to buy the building; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you get the money to buy the building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I didn't need any money to buy the building.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's because someone let you have the money. Who was that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, the reason why I was asked if I had an Arkansas broker's license is that enabled the savings and loan to pay me a commission, which in turn became the downpayment; and the balance of the money was loaned to me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was loaned to you by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So just to make sure we understand the deal, Mr. McDougal came to you and you got the understanding from him that you were going to buy a piece of property you had never seen before; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You received the downpayment because he gave you a real estate commission on the sale of property that you yourself were buying; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then the purpose of getting that commission, in fact, the amount was specifically picked in order to give you the money to use as the downpayment for that purchase of the property; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And then the balance of the money came from a loan from Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't pull any money out of your pocket?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It wasn't a property you had ever seen before?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in terms of carrying the cost of the loan, it was supposed to be carried by the rent being generated by the building; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That was the idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So essentially the property was being parked or warehoused with you at Mr. McDougal's instructions?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's one way you could look at it. Now, of course, you may ask me later, it was a nonrecourse note. If you want to get into that later, we can.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm about to get to that right now. We've established that the money for this came from either this brokerage commission Mr. McDougal had you paid or by the loan which Mr. McDougal's savings and loan let you have. But you, I guess, pretty sensibly didn't want to be personally on the hook for this transaction; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I would not under any circumstances have done it without a nonrecourse note.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So Mr. McDougal or his people working with him agreed that in getting the loan from the savings and loan for the purchase price of the property, it would be nonrecourse, which means that if you didn't—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait, wait, wait. Let him tell us.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us what a nonrecourse note is.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Nonrecourse, in the simplest of terms, means that had I chosen not to repay the bank any of that money I signed the note for, then they could come and take that property from me, but other than that I would not have to pay them a dime. Their only recourse was for the mortgage on that property and that's it.

The CHAIRMAN. They could not sue you, you would not be personally liable?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No personal liability whatsoever.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the extent of what the bank would have or the savings and loan would have if you didn't make the payments was they could go and reclaim the property.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Exactly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you had no personal liability or exposure?

Mr. FITZHUGH. None.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So basically, the savings and loan—the downpayment came from the commission paid by Madison, the loan for the rest of the purchase came from Madison, and Madison agreed as part of this arrangement that if in fact the loan wasn't repaid, they wouldn't go against you personally, they would only go back and reclaim the property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct. I drafted the nonrecourse language and put it in the note myself.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And they signed it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, they agreed to it, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Also, there was supposed to be an appraisal of some sort in connection with this property that I think someone by the name of Betts made?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe that's right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is Mr. Betts?

Mr. FITZHUGH. All I know is that he's a real estate appraiser. I don't know that I've ever met the man.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you come to learn what he had appraised the property for?

Mr. FITZHUGH. At some point in time, and I don't know if it was before the purchase or after the purchase.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he appraise the property for?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I think it was like a million one or a million two. I'm not exactly sure but somewhere in that neighborhood.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it your understanding that that was anything like what the real value of the property was?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The property was leased at the time, so we knew what the cash flow was. And you could capitalize the cash flow and make a reasonable determination of what the value was of the building. I don't think you could come up with that high figure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Didn't you say, in fact, that the amount of the value of the building in your opinion was closer to about $300,000 or $400,000 than over a million?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That would be my opinion. You know, it's nice to buy things cheap if you can.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the appraisal that was part of this wonderful transaction here was, in your opinion, about double what the real value of the property was based upon the cash flow being generated from the property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that would be a fair assumption.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you didn't care about that because with a nonrecourse note, if it turns out that the property couldn't pay the bill on the loan, all that would happen is the savings and loan would take the property back and you wouldn't be on the hook?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct. And for the immediate future, there was enough money coming in from the payments from Levi to pay the insurance, pay the taxes, pay the note. So it was a situation that would neither cost nor make me any money for at least the immediate future.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What really happened is the bank or Madison Financial, which originally had the property, either in its own name or in Mr. Ward's name, and I think this piece of property actually came from the part in Mr. Ward's name, they didn't really shift the risk to you. I mean, you never actually were at risk in this transaction. All that happened is they moved this property off the books of, I guess, Seth Ward and they moved it into your ownership, but at no risk to you, with no money out of your pocket and the net result is to show a profit to Madison Financial or to Mr. Ward without you actually ever having assumed any personal liability on the transaction?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That would probably be the net effect from Madison's standpoint.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So essentially what they did was it was a way of warehousing this property to show a profit; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. From their standpoint that's probably correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Also while we are on this issue of Seth Ward and Madison Financial, I'm going to ask that we put up two documents and make sure you have them. It's 71997 and 71996, which are two warranty deeds that were used to convey this property to you on October 25, 1985. And I'm going to ask you if you have ever seen these before.

Mr. FITZHUGH. This is where Seth Ward deeded it to MFC?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know if I have seen them or not. I very well may have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that when you look at these two deeds together, what you see is that this piece of property you bought, this Levi Strauss building, the way you actually got title to the property or ownership of the property was Mr. Ward deeded it to Madison Financial and then Madison Financial directly turned around and deeded it to you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's certainly what it looks like. And I notice down here it says I prepared this document, so I imagine I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What we know now looking at these documents is that the Levi Strauss building which you originally bought under this arrangement with Mr. McDougal was held originally by Seth Ward, but the way you got the property was Seth Ward transferred it to Madison Financial and Madison Financial transferred it to you; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And of course, that is consistent with what we know about that original transaction in which Seth Ward took some of this property in his own name; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now let me ask you one other question before I turn to you, Mr. Nash. A question has arisen about Castle Grande. My understanding is that in your mind, Castle Grande related to the portion of this entire tract of property that was below 145th Street; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. To my mind, Castle Grande was a separate segment within the entire IDC purchase that is south of 145th Street.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But it is also true, is it not, that within the savings and loan, people referred to the northern part, including the building that you purchased, as part of the Castle Grande property; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, let me help you out a little bit. I want to put up a picture of a check, I don't think it has a Bates number, but we'll make sure you have a copy of it. It's November 1, 1985. It's for $50,000, which I think was your commission that was used as the downpayment, drawn on the Madison Real Estate Company Business Account. Is that the account that was used to pay the commission you used as the downpayment?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I recall getting this check and I sat down and signed it in the office of the chief financial officer at Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say that, you mean you endorsed it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I endorsed it. But I didn't pay any attention to what account it was written on or anything like that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, to go through it, on the back of the check which is lower down, you say, "Pay to the order of Madison Savings & Loan, Davis Fitzhugh"; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you took this brokerage fee check, and you turned it around and used it as the downpayment as evidenced by what you have on the back of the check; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now where it says "for" on the bottom, the notation, you didn't write that notation; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, that's not my handwriting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you can read it. It says, "Sale of building C, Castle Grande"; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I also want to show you a set of minutes which have Bates stamp 91 on them which we're going to put up on the Elmo. I believe this indicates minutes that relate to the purchase of the southern part of the property when the original IDC purchase took place, indicating that the acreage to the south was going to be called Castle Grande Estates and that that decision had been made as of September 12, 1985, as evidenced by the minutes of the Board of Directors of the Madison Financial Corporation. Do you see that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would agree with me that that's what these minutes say?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, what is your current position?

Mr. NASH. My current position is Director of Presidential Personnel and Assistant to the President.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew Bill Clinton as Governor of Arkansas?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hold a position with Governor Clinton in the 1980's in his administration in Arkansas?

Mr. NASH. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was that position?

Mr. NASH. I was Senior Executive Assistant for Economic Development.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, did there come a time in 1985 or 1986 that you were with Governor Clinton when he paid a visit to Jim McDougal?

Mr. NASH. Yes. I do not remember the year.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it in the mid-1980's?

Mr. NASH. I do not remember the specific year but sometime between 1985 and 1989.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And would you agree with me that it is more likely that it was around the 1985-1986 time period than the 1989 time period?

Mr. NASH. I couldn't say that, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you say that in your deposition?

Mr. NASH. I can't remember. I could have—if I was asked to guess about it, I may have guessed it was closer to 1985 than 1989, but I don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us how did you come to be with Governor Clinton when he paid this visit to Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. I was traveling with Governor Clinton to some event. I don't remember the particular event. And on the way back from the event to the office, we stopped at a trailer where Mr. McDougal was located.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that trailer in the vicinity of 145th Street?

Mr. NASH. Yes, I remember it being in that vicinity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say we stopped at the trailer, you were in a car with Governor Clinton?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there anybody else in the car?

Mr. NASH. There was a State trooper.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Whose idea was it to stop at this trailer?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember specifically whose idea it was to stop at the trailer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it seem to you that it was the trooper's idea?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember whose idea it was to stop at the trailer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it your idea?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. Yes, I did know Mr. McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you think of any reason why you would have wanted to stop and see him at his trailer office?

Mr. NASH. I can't think of a reason.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that leaves Governor Clinton; right?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember who suggested it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us what happened. Tell us about this visit to Mr. McDougal in the trailer.

Mr. NASH. On the way back from an event, I remember us looking for McDougal's office in this vicinity of 145th or south of Little Rock, and finding it and spending about 5 minutes, maybe 10 minutes, I can't remember exactly how long, talking with him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So someone in the car decided to make a stop to see Mr. McDougal at the trailer; right?

Mr. NASH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Whoever that person was knew that at that point Mr. McDougal had his office in the trailer; right?

Mr. NASH. I don't know that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Or knew he would be at the trailer?

Mr. NASH. I don't know that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You had no idea where Mr. McDougal had his office at the time that you paid this visit; is that fair to say?

Mr. NASH. I assumed he had an office in that area because he had a development in that area.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, he had a couple of developments there, but whoever in that car, you or the Governor or the trooper, who decided they wanted to pay this visit, they made a decision to stop at the trailer; right?

Mr. NASH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now describe the trailer.

Mr. NASH. It was a trailer that—a house trailer, I would call it, that people live in.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you and Governor Clinton got inside the trailer, what did you see?

Mr. NASH. When we got inside the trailer, Jim McDougal was standing in the trailer as you walked in the double-glass door, I think it was a double-glass door, I'm not sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the setup like in the trailer? Was it residential or like an office?

Mr. NASH. I remember it looking like an office.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there anybody else there?

Mr. NASH. Well, I remember seeing a lady down what looked like a hall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Like a secretary?

Mr. NASH. I don't know what her role was but I just remember seeing a lady sitting down the hall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the trooper come in with you?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember the trooper coming in at the beginning, but I think the trooper came in to say we needed to go. I vaguely remember that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So I guess we can conclude from that that the visit, whoever wanted to pay the visit, it wasn't the trooper since the trooper actually didn't go in to visit with Mr. McDougal. Is that a fair inference, you think?

Mr. NASH. The trooper did not go in the trailer when we first walked in.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you, the Governor, and McDougal sit down?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember that we sat down.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, what did you talk about? What was the conversation?

Mr. NASH. Casual conversation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. About what?

Mr. NASH. Oh, I remember, I think the weather was nice. I didn't have a coat on so I think it was nice. We talked about pleasantries. I remember we may have asked how his wife was doing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That would be Susan McDougal?

Mr. NASH. That was his wife.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Anything else?

Mr. NASH. I remember commenting about the blue jeans, I think, that Jim McDougal was wearing, I believe, vaguely.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the subject of blue jeans came up. Is that fair to say?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you familiar with the Levi Strauss building on that property?

Mr. NASH. I am familiar that there's a Levi Strauss plant out in that area in an industrial park.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You know Levi Strauss makes blue jeans?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In this discussion, in this meeting in which someone in the car decided that you all should stop and have on this particular day, did the subject of blue jeans come up?

Mr. NASH. I remember the fact that—I remember vaguely that Jim McDougal was wearing blue jeans, 501 blue jeans, I believe.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was discussed was what Jim McDougal was wearing?

Mr. NASH. I'm sorry?

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was discussed was what Jim McDougal was wearing?

Mr. NASH. I remember that subject coming up.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What prompted a discussion of blue jeans out at the trailer at 145th Street across the road from the Levi Strauss blue jeans building? Is there any connection in your mind between the two of those facts, both of those facts?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There was no discussion in this meeting about the fact that there was a Levi Strauss building on the property that Mr. McDougal wanted to sell?

Mr. NASH. I'm sorry, say that again?

Mr. CHERTOFF. There was no discussion at this trailer meeting that there was a Levi Strauss building on the property that Mr. McDougal wanted to sell?

Mr. NASH. No, I do not remember any discussion like that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The only thing you remember about blue jeans—was there a discussion about blue jeans generally?

Mr. NASH. I remember the discussion being that Jim McDougal was wearing 501 blue jeans, and we were in suits and the discussion may have been about that. It probably was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me read from your deposition at page 59.

The CHAIRMAN. Why don't you get out your deposition, have your counsel get it out for you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. On pages 59 and 61. We will take a moment to get that to you.

Mr. NASH. I'm sorry, would you refer me to the page?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Page 59 of your deposition.

Mr. NASH. Which part?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's start at line 4, page 59:

Question: Do you recall anything more about the discussions?

Answer: No, I do not.

Question: Just you have a vague recollection it had to do with this blue jeans plant?

Answer: It had to do with blue jeans, not the blue jean plant.

Question: It didn't have to do with the plant, just blue jeans generally?

Answer: Just like blue jeans generally.

Question: The manufacture of blue jeans?

Answer: I think the blue jeans may have been by Levis. The plant is Levi.

That's the plant on that property, right, you're referring to?

Mr. NASH. There is a Levi Strauss plant in that area.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Continuing on line 16—

Senator SARBANES. On the property?

The CHAIRMAN. Wait, Senator. You know, this is important. Let him continue and you'll have an opportunity to make your point.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chertoff said the plant on that property.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a second. Senator, I'm not going to quibble with you. Go ahead, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where was the blue jeans plant?

Mr. NASH. The blue jeans plant is in an industrial park outside of Little Rock.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it near here?

Mr. NASH. Near where?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Near this property at 145th Street where the trailer was?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember. I know it is in an industrial park outside of Little Rock.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now let's continue with your answer:

Answer: For some reason, blue jeans, maybe at that time blue jeans—Levi blue jeans were hot or something. I don't know. I don't know.

Question: So you don't even know whether it had to do with that particular Levi Strauss plant in Arkansas?

Answer: Oh, no, I don't remember that.

Let's go to page 61. Actually, 60, line 20.

Question: Is it fair to say that's what your best recollection is?

Answer: Let me say what my best recollection is, is that sometime between 1985 and 1989, it may have been closer to 1985 than 1989, I was at a trailer with Jim McDougal, Bill Clinton and I were talking for a short period of time. And I remember the discussion having to do with blue jeans but I don't remember how blue jeans came up. I remember that there were other pleasantries like hello, how are you and that kind of thing that you would normally do.

I remember the meeting being shorter rather than longer, I think earlier you said something about was it an hour, was it half hour. I'm thinking that it was maybe much shorter than that, like close to 5 or 10 minutes, and I remember that we stood up. I don't remember sitting down.

I remember that I saw a woman in the trailer who was not in the area where we were, but you could look back down through the trailer and there was a woman sitting at a desk who looked like she was, I don't know whether she was writing or typing, I can't remember. I don't remember who this woman was or I didn't recognize her.

There was a trooper who may or may not have gotten out of the car and come in to get us to go. I think I vaguely remember him getting out of the car because the troopers would always be pushing him to go because he would always be late and stop places that were not on his itinerary. That's what I remember.

So as of your deposition you didn't remember anything about this having been prompted merely by Mr. McDougal wearing 501 jeans; is that correct?

Mr. NASH. I'm sorry, ask the question once more, please.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The question is as of the deposition, which was taken about a month ago, you didn't remember how the blue jeans came up, and you didn't remember anything about 501 jeans that Mr. McDougal was wearing; correct?

Mr. NASH. I do not remember mentioning 501 blue jeans during the deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now this meeting which you have described as having to do with pleasantries and blue jeans came up again more recently; isn't that correct? Didn't Bruce Lindsey call you about it?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In 1993, Bruce Lindsey called you about it; right?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember exactly when it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, let's go to page 38.

Question: Do you recall when Mr. Lindsey asked you about any meetings you might have gone to with the Governor and Mr. McDougal?

Answer: Well, it's been probably—I remember it being when I was at Agriculture.

Question: Sometime in 1983—1993, excuse me?

Answer: Probably.

Were those the questions you were asked and the answers you gave in your deposition last month?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you find it odd that Mr. Lindsey would call you up and ask about this particular meeting?

Mr. NASH. No, I didn't find it odd.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that's not the only time he asked you about it, is it?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He asked you again after Thanksgiving; correct?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember exactly when it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, page 50, line 8, and just to put it in context, Mr. Lindsey was in to take a deposition and was asked about this very meeting on November 21, 1995. Now let's go to the deposition that you gave, line 8:

Question: A second conversation with Mr. Lindsey?

Answer: Yes. I want to say it was around Thanksgiving, either before Thanksgiving or after, I'm not real sure, this past Thanksgiving.

Question: Oh, 1995?

Answer: Yes.

Question: What did Mr. Lindsey say to you?

Answer: He had just asked me did I remember him asking me about a meeting that the Governor had in a trailer with me and McDougal, and I said yeah, I do remember that.

Does that refresh your memory that you had a second conversation with Mr. Lindsey?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This was just this last Thanksgiving; right?

Mr. NASH. This past Thanksgiving.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Lindsey tell you that he had been asked about this meeting in the Grand Jury?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you find it curious that this was the second time Mr. Lindsey had called you to ask about this meeting at the trailer at 145th Street with Governor Clinton and Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, I did not find it curious.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You frequently get inquiries like this from Mr. Lindsey?

Mr. NASH. Well, when you have these kinds of things going on, I assumed it related to all of this, but I didn't ask any questions about it. I answered his question.

Mr. CHERTOFF. From either time you had a conversation with Mr. Lindsey in 1993 or 1995 about this meeting that occurred at McDougal's trailer, did he ever tell you how he knew you had been present at a meeting with Governor Clinton and Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I mean, it wasn't something you had volunteered? He called you; you didn't call him to say by the way, I was at a meeting with McDougal and the Governor back in the 1980's?

Mr. NASH. No, I did not call him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Lindsey reached out for you?

Mr. NASH. He asked me was I at a meeting in a trailer with Mr. McDougal and Governor Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sorry, I know my time is up. I want to put up one last item to ask you to close this off. It's a piece of paper obtained from Mr. Lindsey, part of his notes. Midway down the page it says, "Spoke with Bob Nash. He was with BC when he went to trailer on 145th Street." Do you remember saying this—I think we'll give you a copy right now.

The CHAIRMAN. Excuse me just for a moment. The Ranking Member is insisting upon strict adherence to the time provisions. I think that for an orderly meeting, we should permit Counsel to conclude those areas that they are working on with witnesses, provided that the time does not extend extraordinarily. However, the Ranking Member insists upon this being carried out, and I will adhere to that. So we will suspend at this point and we will come back to this.

Senator Sarbanes.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I do insist upon it. It's exactly what the Resolution provided. Yesterday on occasions you went 10, 15, 20 minutes beyond the time provided in the Resolution for questioning. I just think it makes for a more orderly hearing if we stick to what the Resolution provided and then we don't have to have a back and forth about whether time is being unreasonably exceeded and so forth. We'll stop when we get the red light and I think the other side should stop when it gets the red light.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senator wants adherence to the Resolution, and I will make the observation that to break the flow of witnesses, I do not believe is in the best interest of the Committee. We have permitted this, obviously, with the indulgence of Members whose times we might be intruding upon, so as to attempt to get a full picture and attempt to move the proceeding, because we will come back to this, but it will just take more time to develop it.

The Senator is absolutely within his right. But I tell you this, understand that this goes two ways and we'll do it just by the book. I do not believe it's in the best interest of the Committee to operate in that fashion, but the Senator has his right to insist upon it, and that's what we will do.

Senator SARBANES. Well, what has happened is the process has slipped so badly that in my view it's being abused because the time has been extended and extended and extended. There are no limits on the number of rounds Members can come back. I understand that point.

The CHAIRMAN. This is on your time, Senator. If you want to do a filibuster, go ahead.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Point of inquiry, Mr. Chairman, relative to the time. It is 30 minutes for each side?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes and then 10 minutes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And then 10 minutes, and then there will be additional rounds if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, do all the Members get to question 10 minutes before it goes back to the 30 minutes?

Senator SARBANES. It doesn't go back to the 30 minutes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thirty minutes is over?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. The Resolution is very clear on this point. There's an initial 30 minutes on each side and then it goes 10 minutes on each side from then on. Now what's been happening is that those time limits have been in a sense virtually ignored so there's no form consistent with the provision in the Resolution with respect to the time. And it seems to me rather than hassle about it back and forth, we simply ought to follow what we laid down at the beginning on how we were going to alternate time.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, my question is still unanswered relative to second rounds. Does it go back to the—

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So everybody has 10 minutes after the first 30 minutes, including the Chairman and Ranking Member from then on? Because I have sat here from day to day and felt frustrated, but it seems to me it's been equal in allowing both sides to go over so I am not complaining, I just wanted to understand the rule. I understand the rule and I thank the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Yesterday, I think it would be fair to say that when the Minority had its points to make they went well over the time on a number of occasions, and the Chair permitted that because I think Members should be given an opportunity to make their views and to complete the questioning if it's not going to be an extraordinarily long period of time.

I think that the Committee works better in extending that kind of courtesy to the Members. However, the Ranking Member is well within his right to insisting to that limitation and that's the way we will operate.

So Senator, it is yours to examine.

Senator SARBANES. Well, let me just make this final point, Mr. Chairman. A number of Members have been inconvenienced and upset on occasions in the past because we haven't stuck to the time, I mean, even Senator Murkowski yesterday himself, on your side, but a number of my Members in the past have found themselves waiting and waiting and waiting well beyond the time period provided in the Resolution. So I think it would make for a more orderly functioning of the Committee if we didn't have this problem. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste. We'll stop when the clock goes red.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It's 3 minutes of 11.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste, the clock has been on and I don't need you to attempt to be a timekeeper and you are not running the Committee. You may think you are, but you're not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No, I'm not.

The CHAIRMAN. Now it's on your time and the clock is running.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I simply noted what time it is, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And I would simply note that this discussion has been on your time, and I said that right from the beginning.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Fitzhugh, this is not the first time that you have talked about the matters you have gone into this morning under oath, is it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In fact, this is kind of a déjà vu of your testimony which you gave 6 years ago; isn't that so?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The testimony that I am alluding to was given by you on May 31, 1990, in Little Rock, Arkansas, in the trial styled United States of America versus David Henley, Jim Henley, and James McDougal; is that correct, sir?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, this subject came up at that trial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were a witness at that trial and you testified fully and truthfully to the best of your ability at that time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And of course we have the benefit of that trial transcript, and we have the benefit of testimony you gave 2 years ago, or rather, an interview that you gave 2 years ago in 1994, before the RTC. You're familiar with the fact or you recall the fact that you were interviewed extensively at that time by the RTC?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I've talked to several groups of people on several occasions and no doubt that's one of them.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now there isn't anything new that you testified to this morning that you hadn't gone over or provided earlier?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, have you had the occasion to review the report issued to the RTC by the law firm of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro, your statements and testimony are referred to at pages 12 and 13 of the Pillsbury Report. I don't know whether you've had occasion to review that report, sir.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You are, are you not, an attorney licensed to practice in Arkansas?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go over some of the things that I think are relevant to your involvement with Madison. First, it is correct, is it not, that you discussed back in 1985 questions relating to the issuance of preferred stock by Madison in order to raise capital for Madison with employees of the Arkansas Securities Department?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct, I did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And indeed, we have and you have had the opportunity to review, I take it, and have before you notes reflecting Mr. Henley's conversation with you, as well as your memorandum to Mr. Latham, dated April 16, 1985?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I saw that a couple of weeks ago, but I really haven't reviewed it, but I know it's out there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You know that it's out there, and presumably that helps your recollection to some extent. I know it's 11 years ago and it's difficult to remember these things and we'll get to 11 years ago with you in a moment, Mr. Nash, but is it fair to say that at some point prior to the time that the Rose Law Firm was engaged by Madison, that you had occasion to discuss issues relating to the issuance of preferred stock with employees of the Arkansas Securities Department?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I really don't know about the timing, as far as who I talked to first and when, but that's certainly possible.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you accept that the references to your conversations reflected in the memoranda contemporaneously prepared by the individuals with whom you spoke, including your own memorandum, are accurate and were not backdated?

Mr. FITZHUGH. They were not backdated.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So accepting that these discussions occurred between you and representatives, I take it that it was Mr. Henley at the Arkansas Securities Department, you were making inquiries as an attorney, inside attorney, for Madison Savings & Loan at that time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know that I was making them as an attorney. I would have made the same inquiries if I was an attorney or if I wasn't. It was just a job duty that was assigned to me to do.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But you were an attorney and you were talking about essentially legal questions about the permissible activities of a savings and loan chartered by the State of Arkansas?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I think it concerned some Arkansas statute, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It didn't hurt matters the fact that you were trained as an attorney?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That brings to mind the deed that you had identified earlier, transferring property from the Wards back to the savings and loan and from the savings and loan to you. Indeed, you prepared those documents yourself, if I understand your testimony? These are the warranty deeds.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe I prepared one of them.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The other deed was prepared according to the legend appearing on it by John Latham, and John Latham was the President of Madison Savings & Loan at that time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So one was prepared by you and the other was prepared by Latham, but the point I think that is important to make is that they were not prepared by outside lawyers and specifically they were not prepared by anyone at the Rose Law Firm; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you regarded Castle Grande as sort of an entity or description within the IDC property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When for the first time was any residential unit located on that property in accordance with the development scheme?

Mr. FITZHUGH. To my knowledge, there was not any residential unit on that property at all until after Madison purchased it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. I have no reason to believe otherwise, but after that, how long a time elapsed until these wide trailers began rolling onto the property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't really know because I was not involved in the Castle Grande project per se, but if I had to guess, I would probably say 3, maybe 4 months, something like that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was there a point in time when funds began to be expended in any amount, significant amount to advertise this project, do you recall?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Castle Grande was advertised, I know that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. About when did that start?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I really don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was there a big billboard up there? What sort of advertising was there?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe Madison did purchase a billboard that you could see on Highway 67/167 and probably some other print or media, something like that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, do you remember, for example, whether there was any big television campaign?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I only remember the Maple Creek Farms. There probably was a Castle Grande.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Maple Creek Farms was an earlier project?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That project involved some sort of sensational or certainly talked-about advertising involving Mrs. McDougal as a participant in the advertising; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. She was riding a horse and sort of nontraditional rodeo garb, I guess?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And did that caused some discussion around in Little Rock?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I believe it did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Castle Grande was nothing like that, was it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So there was a billboard out there and maybe some print?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Do you happen to know what the whole advertising budget was for Castle Grande?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have absolutely no idea.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It wasn't the sort of thing that people talked about at cocktail parties in Little Rock, oh, Castle Grande, that's hot, the advertising is interesting or——

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And in connection with the subsequent transactions, were you aware of subsequent transactions relating to purchases and sales of the Castle Grande property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. When you say, "Castle Grande," are you referring to the what I call the IDC, the entire tract of land?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, I understand that it was known as IDC in terms of the entire tract of land. Let's talk about it as an entire entity. Yesterday, we heard testimony about various land flips and the inflated prices involving properties controlled either by the McDougals or Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. Were you familiar with those transactions?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I do know that Madison sold certainly other properties besides the Levi Strauss building that I purchased, so I do know that there were some other sales to other parties.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were a vice president of the savings and loan at that time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. At one point in time I was the vice president of the MFC, the financial corporation, and I think at another point in time I was a vice president of the savings and loan, and I don't know which was which or when so——

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But during the years 1985, 1986, 1987, you were involved in the management of Mr. McDougal's savings and loan/financial services company?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I think it would be a stretch to say I was involved in the management of it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were there?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I was there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. On a day-to-day basis?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were you aware that there were fraudulent transactions taking place with respect to inflated prices and insider dealings?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were there on a day-to-day basis?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And you're an attorney?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now let me go back to the question of the Rose Law Firm. Were you aware that the Rose Law Firm or any of its partners or its associates were involved in any of the transactions involving these land flips or inflated prices, insider trades?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I do not recall any involvement with the Rose Law Firm that I had anything to do with on IDC or Castle Grande.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Or any other matter, as far as you know?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The only thing I had anything to do with the Rose Law Firm concerned broker-dealer matters.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The broker-dealer matter that we began talking about where you made the inquiry to Mr. Handley at the Arkansas Department of Securities?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who did you have dealings with at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Rick Massey.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. As far as you know, did anyone other than Mr. Massey handle that matter on a day-to-day basis?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not that I'm aware of.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you have contact with anyone other than Rick Massey?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not that I recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You testified that you learned shortly after you became employed by Madison that Mr. McDougal had some relationship with Mr. Clinton.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It's well-known that, indeed, Mr. Clinton and Mr. McDougal had had a relationship in politics and we are most aware of the fact that they had a relationship in connection with the Whitewater Development. Did you know or did you observe whether Mr. McDougal was a person who liked to boast, who was boastful about his relationships?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe he was excessive in that regard, but perhaps to some extent.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me turn to you for a moment, Mr. Nash. In connection with the visit to Mr. McDougal's trailer, if I understand correctly, you were unsure of what year that was?

Mr. NASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have heard some testimony about another property controlled by Mr. McDougal prior to the time that they purchased the IDC property. Do you know what development that was that Mr. McDougal was involved in and about which Mrs. McDougal had some role in promoting the development?

Mr. NASH. I remember something called Maple Creek Farms being advertised on television.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Maple Creek Farms, do you recall what general area that was located in?

Mr. NASH. It was southeast of Little Rock.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was it far from the area that we are referring to here, at 145th Street?

Mr. NASH. I'm not sure I know which area you're referring to.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The area that has been referred to by Mr. Chertoff in his questioning that encompassed the IDC property.

Mr. NASH. I don't have any idea how far they are apart or how close they are.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We'll come back to that in a second. The issue of the Levi's factory in Arkansas was a matter of discussion, I take it, at your level with the Governor from time to time, what Levi was doing as an employer in the State?

Mr. NASH. I'm sorry, one more time, the question.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me break this down. There was some confusion and I think to a large measure you cleared that up. There was a suggestion that there was a factory on this property controlled by Madison and Ward. Was the factory that you were talking about, the Levi's factory, on this property or was it in some other place nearby?

Mr. NASH. What I know is there was a Levi Strauss manufacturing plant in an industrial park south or southeast of Little Rock, and it is a Levi Strauss plant. And that is in the general vicinity, I don't know how close it was to this meeting or visit at the trailer.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Mr. Fitzhugh, maybe you can help us out, since you were more involved in the IDC tract, and clear up this question. Was the Levi Strauss factory that Mr. Nash is talking about located on this IDC property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That's quite clearly different than the warehouse that you have been talking about?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Two totally different structures, completely non-related and noncontiguous.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you.

Senator SARBANES. Where was the factory?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The factory is visible from the 67/167 highway as you drive from Little Rock to Pine Bluff. It would be on your left, and it is a much larger building. And this, what you have marked as number 1 is at least a mile off the road, you could not possibly see it from the 67/167 highway, and it's purely a warehouse, no manufacturing facilities whatsoever.

Senator SARBANES. That's just a warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Correct.

Senator SARBANES. OK.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now much has been made, Mr. Nash, and I'm still trying to figure out the connection, about the conversation that you were present at where Mr. Clinton, then-Governor Clinton, dropped in on Mr. McDougal at this trailer somewhere in this general area, whether it was Maple Creek Farms or it was on the IDC property, I take it you have no ability to tell us right now.

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of the subject—how long did the visit last?

Mr. NASH. My best recollection is that it was in the neighborhood of 5 to 10 minutes, but I can't be sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now tell us if you will what your job was in the State of Arkansas during this period of time?

Mr. NASH. My job was to provide advice and counsel on the development of economic development programs to make Arkansas a better place to live and work.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When did you start?

Mr. NASH. I started to work for the Governor in 1983. I believe it was January or February of 1983.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you work continuously until the time that you left?

Mr. NASH. I worked there from 1982 until sometime in 1989.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. During that period from 1985 through 1987, let's say, right in the middle of this time period of your service for the State, tell us what the nature of your relationship was with the Governor?

Mr. NASH. 1985 to 1987. In 1985, there was a legislative session where a large number of economic development programs and policies were passed and were in the process of being implemented. And I spent a lot of time with the Governor as we were traveling around the State discussing these programs and educating the public and the business community and community groups about these programs.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So you traveled with the Governor frequently and met with him frequently during this period?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, I did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me ask you whether there was any other occasion that you can recall when the Governor met with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, I do not recall another occasion where Governor Clinton met with Mr. McDougal.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's now focus on this one visit. Your testimony is it took 5 to 10 minutes. You were present the whole time in the trailer with Mr. McDougal and Governor Clinton?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, I was present the whole time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did Mr. McDougal ask Mr. Clinton to do anything during that period of time?

Mr. NASH. No, I do not recall him asking him to do anything.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did Governor Clinton ask Mr. McDougal to do anything?

Mr. NASH. No, I do not recall him asking him, Mr. McDougal, to do anything.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did they do any business? Was there any deal discussed?

Mr. NASH. No, it was pleasantries.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If I understand your testimony, you were on your way from one place that passed by where Mr. McDougal's trailer was in general terms on your way back to Little Rock; is that correct?

Mr. NASH. Yes. As I remember it, we were—I don't know exactly where, but it seems like his trailer was between where the event we attended was and the State capitol.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, what do you remember about how you got to the trailer? Did Governor Clinton give explicit instructions on where to find this trailer, as you recall?

Mr. NASH. No, he did not. As I remember it, we were looking for the trailer trying to figure out where it was, and we drove around for a few minutes trying to find it. I remember that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So there was no indication given to you that Governor Clinton had been there before or had ever visited Mr. McDougal there before?

Mr. NASH. I had no indication that he had visited Mr. McDougal there before.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To the best of your knowledge, did anything untoward take place during that 5- or 10-minute conversation in the trailer with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I see the orange light is on, and I'll cede back the remaining minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, so I gather that, in fact, there was a little bit of difficulty in getting to this particular trailer, it wasn't just that you're driving down the road back from something and all of a sudden, the trailer is right there and somebody says, oh, let's stop at the trailer. Rather what happened is there was a specific decision to go and meet Mr. McDougal or try to find Mr. McDougal at the trailer; right?

Mr. NASH. That is correct. As I remember it, the trailer is not visible from the highway, which I believe is—I forget the number but it is not visible from the highway.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you would have looked for it?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to ask you, Mr. Fitzhugh, you mentioned this Levi Strauss factory. Where is that in relation to your building, the Levi Strauss warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It's not anywhere close. I mean, it's in the same general vicinity. It's on the same major highway there, but you can't see one building from the other, and it takes 4 or 5 minutes to drive from one to the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did Mr. McDougal have any interest or did Madison or any other one of Mr. McDougal's businesses, to your knowledge, have any business relationship or ownership interest in the Levi Strauss factory?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely none that I'm aware of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you are aware because you, in fact, were involved in the transaction that Mr. McDougal did have an interest of some kind, whether it be originally ownership or whether it be through the loan and the nonrecourse note, with the Levi Strauss warehouse; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in fact, it was part of the understanding that you had when you warehoused this piece of property that he was ultimately going to try to get this thing sold so he might make some money off of it; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I think the long-range picture ties back in with this broker-dealer, that that was one of the things I was hired to do was set up a broker-dealer at Madison. They were going to offer shares in various real estate projects and the Levi Strauss building was going to be one of the projects that was put into a limited partnership and sold. It never took place.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that was a building, that Levi Strauss building was something Mr. McDougal did have an interest in seeing sold at some point; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, I want to get back to the question about how blue jeans comes up here, because I want to be quite sure. Your testimony here is that now you recall blue jeans comes up in this meeting that you drove to at this trailer you tried to find, that this comes up because there was a comment on the Levi's jeans that Mr. McDougal was wearing?

Mr. NASH. That is what I remember, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, we can go back to the deposition of a month ago, page 34, line 18:

Question: And then what happened, what occurred during this meeting?

Answer: As I remember it, pleasantries were exchanged and I remember a discussion about blue jeans, blue jeans, because there was a blue jean factory close, Levi Strauss has a blue jean factory out there, and in some sort of way that subject came up. That's about the only thing specific I can remember.

Question: What do you recall about this blue jean factory? Anything more? Was McDougal interested in investing in the blue jean factory?

Answer: I don't know.

So it seems like in your deposition here you associated this issue of blue jeans coming up not because of what someone was wearing but because of the fact that there was a discussion of a blue jeans factory. Is that what—fair to say in your deposition?

Mr. NASH. That is not fair. I think later on—

Mr. CHERTOFF. The deposition is wrong?

Mr. NASH. Later on in the deposition I said the comment was about blue jeans and not a blue jeans factory.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I understand there was a comment about blue jeans. Do you dispute that in your answer in the deposition, you said, "I remember a discussion about blue jeans, because there was a blue jean factory close, Levi Strauss has a blue jean factory out there, and in some sort of way that subject came up." Is that the answer you gave?

Mr. NASH. That is one of the answers. But in the later answer I indicated that the subject was about blue jeans and not a blue jeans factory.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And it wasn't until today that you remembered or told us that the subject came up simply because someone was commenting on the pair of jeans that Mr. McDougal was wearing?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I thought about it a lot after the deposition. When you leave a deposition you think about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You thought about it a lot?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who did you speak to other than your attorney about the deposition after you left the deposition?

Mr. NASH. I reported to Jane Sherburne that—before I went that I was going to the deposition, and I think that's it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I beg your pardon?

Mr. NASH. I think that's it. I chose not to discuss it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You reported to her in what way?

Mr. NASH. That I just went to the deposition—that I was going to the deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then after you came out of the deposition you discussed it with no one but your own attorney?

Mr. NASH. My own attorney and my wife, I indicated to her that I went to the deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And did you talk to Jane Sherburne again afterwards?

Mr. NASH. No, other than saying I did a deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. After you came out, you told her what?

Mr. NASH. That I went to the deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you tell her what the subject was?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did she ask you?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What about Mr. Lindsey who had made the two calls, one to you in 1993 and one to you at Thanksgiving of 1995, did you call him back and tell him about the deposition?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In your thinking about this deposition, about this meeting and this encounter, did you wonder to yourself why Mr. Lindsey would have made two calls to you about this meeting, one in 1993 and one after his own deposition in 1995?

Mr. NASH. I would have assumed it was about all of this that's going on here today.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, in 1993 none of this was going on. Do you know why he brought it up in 1993?

Mr. NASH. I do not know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you indicated that you were at one meeting at the trailer with then-Governor Clinton and Mr. McDougal, and the evidence is that Mr. McDougal actually didn't move out to the trailer on 145th Street until February 1986. I want to be clear. During your visit, did Mr. McDougal take you and the Governor on a tour of the property?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. During your visit, did Mr. McDougal take you and the Governor to lunch?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You're positive about that?

Mr. NASH. I'm positive.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because then we have a second meeting, and this comes from the recorded statement of Sue Strayhorn, which we have from the RTC, at page 47, she describes what appears to be a second meeting at the trailer, and she says:

Bill Clinton, the only other time I remember seeing him was or even talking to him on the telephone, I mean he just—he didn't call a lot—but he was out at the Castle Grande sales office. He dropped in and—as I recall, I think they went up the street to the little plate lunch place and had lunch, and Jim said something about giving him a tour.

And I assume it was a commercial property because I think at the time there was a steel mill or steel firm was looking to come in and they were looking at the property out there, so I think he might have been interested in the industrial part of it. But that was kind of a nonevent thing too, you know.

Now, we have this other occasion that Ms. Strayhorn remembers out at this trailer, the Castle Grande sales trailer, which involves going to a lunch place and getting a tour and something about a steel mill. You were not at that visit?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your visit is separate from this other visit which we now have to conclude is a second visit; correct?

Mr. NASH. I don't know anything about the second visit. I know about the visit that I had.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But I want to close off any notion that your visit is the same one that she's talking about, because you didn't go to a lunch place and you didn't get a tour of the property?

Mr. NASH. I did not go to a lunch place and I did not get a tour of the property.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the visit she remembers is a separate second visit, as far as you know?

Mr. NASH. I don't know anything about her visit or her meeting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I want to ask you, Mr. Fitzhugh, because you were asked just briefly by Mr. Ben-Veniste about whether you were aware of fraudulent transactions and insider deals.

Your transaction was essentially a sham transaction devised to get some property off the books because it was expected that examiners would be coming in and would determine that there was too much investment property being held by Madison Guaranty; isn't that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, at the time that McDougal first discussed it with me and we were putting the numbers and papers together, I certainly never thought of it as being a sham transaction. I mean, I didn't know if the savings and loan was making money or losing money, and they had an in-house compliance officer, they had an attorney as president of the bank. As far as I knew, what they were doing was perfectly legitimate. I wasn't going to question what McDougal was doing in arranging the affairs of the bank.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You thought it was legitimate that you're going to take a commission, a sales commission as the broker for a piece of property you purchased, turn around and use that as the down-payment, then get a loan on a nonrecourse basis on an appraisal that you have described as being twice what the value of the property was really worth, on a piece of property you had never seen. You thought that was a regular, plain vanilla, just terrific transaction. Is that what you are telling us?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, that is not what I said. I didn't think that much about the transaction. And I believe the appraisal came up later. I didn't think it was my place to question McDougal and the others, when there's a whole bunch of other people, a loan committee, compliance officer, that's their job.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew this smelled, didn't you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I thought this is their transaction and if they want to put it together that way, that's their business. I didn't think it up.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So when you say you didn't know about other insider deals and stuff, can we assume that you took the same attitude to other things going on at the savings and loan that you took to this transaction you personally were involved in, namely, it was their business, you didn't want to know about it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, because there weren't that many things that I would have any reason to question or wonder about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We will come back to that the next round.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Nash, you don't know anything about this other second meeting that Mr. Chertoff has been asking about, I take it?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I do not.

Senator SARBANES. The only meeting you know about is the one, the 5- or 10-minute meeting that involved you and Mr. McDougal and the Governor?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Senator SARBANES. Involved you and Mr. McDougal and the Governor.

Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You don't know it to be a first or second, or any number meeting, I take it?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When you arrived at the trailer with the Governor, was Mr. McDougal expecting you?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I don't think he was because he seemed surprised when I walked in.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So basically Mr. Clinton was dropping in on Mr. McDougal, he knew he had a sales office or some kind of office in a trailer somewhere in this area, and he decided he would stop in on him?

Mr. NASH. I assumed he knew that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. As far as your recollection is concerned, the conversation was completely unremarkable and innocuous?

Mr. NASH. Yes, it was a typical drop-by as we would normally do when we are out on the road.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Quite clearly, Mr. David Hale was not present at the meeting, he was nowhere in the trailer or on the grounds or lurking about?

Mr. NASH. I did not see Mr. Hale at this meeting I attended in the trailer with Governor Clinton and Mr. McDougal.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, Mr. Fitzhugh, we have had this interesting questioning about the blue jeans and the blue jean plant and whether Mr. McDougal was wearing blue jeans, and so on and so forth, and so there is some relationship between some transaction and Governor Clinton.

Let me ask you directly. Did Governor Clinton have anything to do with the transaction in which you were involved, and about which you testified, to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely none that I am aware of.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At the time that the Rose Firm was engaged to represent Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan in connection with this preferred stock issue, who was the principal outside attorney for the savings and loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. At Madison?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't really know. I could guess, but I don't know if I would be correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, during your time there, prior to or subsequent to the time that the Rose Firm was engaged on the issues that you have talked about, were there other outside firms performing work for Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. There were other attorneys that I believe, did some work for Madison, but I don't know in what capacity they were hired and what work they did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who were the other law firms that you know about?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe the Mitchell law firm did some work for the bank.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Any others?

Mr. FITZHUGH. As far as law firms—the Arnold, Grobmyer law firm did some work on some of the syndications, at least, I believe that's who it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it correct that the Mitchell firm included now-Governor Tucker as a partner or a named partner of the firm?

Mr. FITZHUGH. At some point in time his name was added, but I don't know when. It could have been then, but I am not sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who is Mr. Selig?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Mr. John Selig is one of the—I believe he is a partner of the Mitchell law firm and I believe he did some work for the bank during the period of time I was there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it correct that in your interviews before the RTC, at page 6, more than 2 years ago, in 1994, you stated that, "Mr. Selig was kind of the outside counsel for the principal counsel for the bank, the S&L. I think that's what he was, I believe so. I believe that's correct."

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So, we have the fact that, to the best of your knowledge, the Rose Law Firm was not involved in any of the transactions that Mr. Chertoff has been talking about, and about which we heard so much testimony yesterday, involving the transfers of various properties. We know that from the billing records and the testimony of the partners of the Rose Firm that they were not so involved. We know from the Pillsbury Madison & Sutro Report that the Rose Firm was not so involved.

Do you have any other testimony from any source or evidence from any source that would suggest that there is additional information to be gotten, that the Rose Firm indeed was involved in some ways that the RTC and these other investigative agencies have not been able to uncover?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I have no information of that type at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And if I understand your testimony, it is quite clear that Governor Clinton and Mrs. Clinton and the Rose Firm had nothing to do with the transaction in which you have testified involving the purchase of this abandoned warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It wasn't abandoned, but absolutely nothing that I was aware of.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Sorry, it was not a Levi Strauss warehouse, was it, at the time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was at the time?

Ms. FITZHUGH. Yes, it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was not a manufacturing facility; that facility was elsewhere, a larger facility, obviously?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Bond.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CHRISTOPHER S. BOND

Senator BOND. Thank you very much, Senator Sarbanes.

Mr. Fitzhugh, you are a practicing lawyer, you have a law degree. Have you practiced law?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have a law degree, that's correct.

Senator BOND. Do you have an MBA?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Senator BOND. You worked at a well known, regional CPA firm in Little Rock, did you not?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. You also worked with a large real estate development firm based in New York?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. You went to work for Madison Financial, the service corporation of Madison Guaranty, back in March 1985; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Senator BOND. It was October 1985 that McDougal came to you with this deal, you were going to buy the Levi Strauss building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. As I understand it, you got a half-million dollar loan, you got a commission that became the downpayment, and it was a nonrecourse loan, so you weren't personally liable?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. That's a heck of a deal, is it not?

Mr. FITZHUGH. If I had made any money off of it, it might have been. Perhaps it had potential, but it didn't do anything for me.

Senator BOND. At some point you concluded that that was a sham transaction, or you were a straw party, did you not?

Mr. FITZHUGH. When I became aware of some of the other aspects of that transaction that I was not aware of in October 1985, then it became—yes, it became aware to me that it was not quite what I thought it was.

Senator BOND. What were the aspects of the transaction that convinced you it was a sham, or that you were a straw party? What parts tipped you off that this was somehow not on the up-and-up?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The commission that was paid to me, I, in turn, immediately gave it to the bank so I didn't make a nickel off that.

Senator BOND. You had to pay tax on it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I did, so I was actually in the hole. But I later became aware that, when that property was sold, two other people were paid 10 percent commissions or at least—I can't say that is true. That is what I understand is true. So on one transaction, there was $150,000 of commissions paid, which is certainly exorbitant.

Senator BOND. What about the appraisals? Did you learn that the appraisals had a wonderful way of going up on that property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I am not aware of more than one appraisal. When you say "going up," that means there is more than one——

Senator BOND. What appraisal was given on that property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The only one I ever saw was the one we talked about earlier that was like a million or a million one or two, something like that. That's the only one I am aware of.

Senator BOND. Mr. Betts made that appraisal?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. You had just bought the property for a half million dollars so that was a heck of a deal, was it not?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Had it been worth a million two, that would have been a heck of a deal.

Senator BOND. It seemed like it was going to be a heck of a deal, but there came a time when they came to you and said you have to sign a recourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. And you did that. What caused them to tell you that you had to sign a recourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It is my understanding that the bank examiners were coming and they would not look favorably upon a nonrecourse note. And it would be reclassified on the books of the savings and loan from one area to another that would, you know, be to the detriment of the savings and loan.

Senator BOND. In fact, with your legal and your real estate background, your work for a CPA, had the examiners known it was a nonrecourse loan, they should have classified it, should they not?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't really know that much about bank examining, but I can see why they might. Because the bank had some exposure there if I turned the property in, which I certainly had the option to do at any point I wanted.

Senator BOND. Interesting to me is how did they know the bank examiners were coming? Is that Arkansas practice, that the bank examiners or the savings and loan examiners, say, give a little tip-off that—get the books in order?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It was rumored for months, when I was down there, that the bank examiners are coming Monday. Then they wouldn't come and 2 weeks later the bank examiners are coming Monday, and they didn't come. I was not involved in any part of the bank that had anything to do with bank examiners, but it was just kind of a constant rumor, that they were coming.

Senator BOND. When did you sign the recourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I'm not entirely sure. I don't really remember.

Senator BOND. That was, in fact, near the time when the bank examiners did come?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Oh, I am sure it was. It could have been a week before, it could have been a month before, but it was certainly before that.

Senator BOND. But they knew at some point they had had this nonrecourse loan—how long did you have the nonrecourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know. I mean, I know when I signed it—

Senator BOND. Was it 6 months? Was it October 1985 you signed it? Or maybe February, when you had to sign the recourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know, but that's possible.

Senator BOND. Did you know anything else about the other activities at Madison or at Madison Financial? There was a weekend around February 28th when major activities were underway to clean up the books. Were you involved in any other preparations for the arrival of the bank examiners other than signing the recourse note?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I was not.

Senator BOND. With your experience, you saw by, I believe it was August 1987, that this was not on the up-and-up. What did you do and who did you talk to about it in August 1987?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe it was in August 1987, because I wasn't even working there any longer.

Senator BOND. When did you deed back the property to Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I am not sure. I mean, it is a public record. I just don't happen to know that date.

Senator BOND. OK. When did you leave Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe it was in July 1987.

Senator BOND. Did you deed the property back then?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I thought I had because I had several discussions with people prior to leaving about things that we had to do to kind of unwind the entire transaction. And I thought it was completed before I left. It is possible that the deeds were signed afterwards.

Senator BOND. With whom did you have those discussions?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Primarily Stephen Cuffman.

Senator BOND. Mr. Cuffman, and by that time you could explain to him that this transaction just didn't look right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Actually what happened was at some point in time I believe he was chairman of the bank. I knew Steve; and I called him up and said, "Steve, you may or may not know about this but let me tell you what has happened." And I explained it to him. He said, "Oh, my God, no, I did not know about that." And we both knew we had to straighten it out and basically unwind it.

Senator BOND. You deeded it back to Madison Financial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe so.

Senator BOND. Did you pay any money back or was there any consideration given for that deeding back?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, they didn't pay me and I didn't pay them. No money changed hands.

Senator BOND. So in effect, looking back on it, you were a straw party; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. It was a sham transaction?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, you keep saying "a sham transaction." At some point I did decide that it looked pretty bad, but when it was originally presented to me, if this thing had actually worked, if we had been able to syndicate the property, which was the original plan and that goes back to the broker-dealer, if there had been any profits to be made one of the things that Madison did was you got your salary. And if you were in a department or a project that made some money, you shared 10 percent of the profits. So if it had ever been profitable, I stood to make, not a large amount of money, but possibly some.

Senator BOND. You said that you had not seen the building before you purchased it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator BOND. Did you make any inquiry as to how Madison Financial had acquired it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I knew how they had acquired it.

Senator BOND. How had they acquired it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. By buying the assets of IDC.

Senator BOND. Do you know how much they paid for that property or how much IDC paid for it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely no idea what the basis was on that property.

Senator BOND. Do you know what a land flip is?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I do.

Senator BOND. Would you just describe what a land flip is and how a land flip involving nonrecourse loans can drain money out of a financial institution?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, that's kind of a complicated question. But basically a land flip is—

Senator BOND. Tell us what a land flip is.

Mr. FITZHUGH. A sells it to B for $1, and B sells it to C for $2, so B has made a profit of $1. That's a landflip. And C may sell it to D for $3.

Senator BOND. If all these are done with nonrecourse loans, everybody can walk away with a dollar, but all those dollars ultimately come out of the pocket of the financial institution, or in this instance, out of the savings and loan insurance fund; and then out of the taxpayers' pocket; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Ultimately, if people start defaulting, that's right. Whoever is loaned the money so that the last person, when the music stops, buys it, then that lending institution may wind up with the property and no money.

Senator BOND. And they did. Thank you, Mr. Fitzhugh.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Fitzhugh, I want to be clear on one thing about this commission that you received, when you went through this arrangement, actually you didn't keep it, you used it as the downpayment on the property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I never had possession of it other than to sit across the desk from a man who said, here, sign this, I signed it, handed it back to him, and that's the extent of that commission.

Senator SARBANES. OK. You did have to report it, though, as income and pay tax—

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I did report it as income, paid taxes on it.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Fitzhugh, let me go back again to the purchase by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan of this property, which you have identified as the IDC transaction. At the time this parcel of land was purchased, was it known by any other name other than IDC?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not that I am aware of, it was the IDC property.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. This concept of Castle Grande, the idea that a portion of land could be developed for residential use, having extra-wide trailer homes in this area, was something that came later, if I understand your testimony?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's my understanding, yes, that Castle Grande did not exist at the time the IDC property was purchased.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that nobody could have known the property as Castle Grande prior to or at the time of the closing of the IDC transaction?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's my understanding.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now it is quite clear in your mind, then, that IDC and Castle Grande are two different entities, or one entity within a second larger entity, subsequently developed, concocted, thought of, and created?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go again to the issue of the attorneys involved in making these deals. The transaction that you were involved in, that involved a no- or nonrecourse loan, who drew up the papers in connection with the nonrecourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No outside attorney, and specifically no one from the Rose Firm, and more specifically Mrs. Clinton, was not involved in that transaction?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I drew up all the papers.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The idea, the concept of a nonrecourse loan, was this something that you created?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And was the concept of nonrecourse something new, had you invented that as far as you knew?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I think it was rather a common practice. There was no way in the world I was going to buy that building unless I got nonrecourse money.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That is really what I was getting to. We tend to focus so narrowly here on these issues. The concept of a nonrecourse loan is something that wasn't new with this transaction. These kinds of loans had been made in thousands of savings and loans throughout the United States?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct. It is not all that unusual.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, indeed, the problem with the nonrecourse loan that occurs, the most serious problem that occurs is when the value of the land to which the lending institution must look for repayment of the loan, if it's a loan based on land, when that land goes down in value, as it did with the crash in real estate in the mid-1980's, then the savings and loan, then the lender is on the hook for the difference?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct. If the person stops making their note payments, then the only asset to back up the note and the mortgage is that piece of property, nothing else.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that, in thousands of savings and loans throughout the United States, these nonrecourse loans secured by real estate or other tangible property which declined in value since the time the loan was made was a substantial part of what became the savings and loan crisis; is that fair to say?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I am sure some portion of that was nonrecourse notes, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now in connection with the other transactions about which we have heard testimony involving the flips back and forth and I am not suggesting that anyone who had a nonrecourse loan at a savings and loan or other institution was engaged in some fraudulent transaction. The fraud that has been discussed here and alleged here has to do with inflated values, wrongful appraisals, and insider transactions that made it a sham. Would you accept that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct. I mean, the concept of a nonrecourse loan in itself is by no means something that's fraudulent.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that, in connection with the other transactions that were testified to here by the bank examiners who looked at them, and are set forth in much, much greater detail and clarity in the reports that we have received about Madison bank from the RTC and other institutions, indicate that Mr. McDougal was apparently involved in a number of transactions that were highly questionable.

My question to you is whether you have reason to believe that the papers documenting these transactions, such as the papering for your transaction, was prepared by anyone other than the insiders themselves?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, indeed, the improprieties that have been alleged here were, to a large extent, the subject of a criminal trial back in 1990 in which Mr. McDougal was prosecuted and acquitted; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes. There were several parts of that trial, and this Levi Strauss building was one of those, and he was acquitted.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were asked a question, I believe by the Senator from Alaska, about—I'm sorry, it may have been Senator Bond, I stand corrected—about the procedures in effect in Arkansas for the bank examination.

We are fortunate, Mr. Chairman, that we have something to help us in that regard. It is the interview by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro of Mr. Clark. Mr. Clark was the bank examiner from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, who provided this information on October 20, 1994, at page 20656651. And I will read from it:

But in the normal course what happens is a request letter for information is sent to the institution. In that letter it would tell them what date we expect to arrive. Normally, that request letter would have been sent out a few weeks, at least, in advance. That was sent out from the Little Rock offices, at least as far as I know, but they would have known we would have been coming to the institution, at least a few weeks ahead of time.

That was James Clark's statement. He was the bank examiner who performed the examination in 1986. Does that help clarify or refresh your recollection about the circumstances under which you knew that the examination was going to take place at or about a specific time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I imagine the savings and loan received a letter the nature you are talking about, and let people know that they were coming.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. So you hear the cops are coming, and somebody comes to you and says, hey, listen, you know that nonrecourse note, you have to sign something and make it so that we can show it to some people so that we can show they do have recourse. Did they come to you like that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. More or less like that, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So you knew——

Mr. FITZHUGH. They just said here, sign it.

The CHAIRMAN. They said here, sign it? You told us in the beginning that you would never sign anything like that. You wouldn't go into an agreement if you didn't know you could get off the hook at anytime and you didn't have any personal responsibilities; isn't that true?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. A guy comes in and says sign it, what did he tell you? He said because the bank examiners are coming.

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, but I think that was common knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you knew the bank examiners were coming. Did he say just sign it because I want you to sign it, or did he say sign it because the bank examiners are coming?

Mr. FITZHUGH. He just said sign it.

The CHAIRMAN. He said sign it. But you are a lawyer, you are astute, you are in real estate, you do all these things. He just said sign it and you just sign anything. You told us you wouldn't have signed that thing initially. Now they come, and it happens right before this bank's examination, and they say, here, sign this, now you are going to be personally on the hook. Why did you sign it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, because I knew it wouldn't stand up.

The CHAIRMAN. But you knew that it was going to be used, right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It bothered me, yes. I felt like they were going to do something with it, and, yes, that bothered me a lot.

The CHAIRMAN. That was improper, wasn't it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It was, for them to present that to me and say sign it, it was improper.

The CHAIRMAN. Why didn't you tell them I'm not going to sign?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I thought about that.

The CHAIRMAN. But you didn't do that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I didn't.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you take the $50,000 commission? You didn't do a darn thing to earn that, did you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I didn't benefit from it, either.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you do anything to earn that commission?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Grams.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR ROD GRAMS

Senator GRAMS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to follow up on that. Speaking about the loan, Mr. Fitzhugh, you received a $50,000 commission on this transaction.

If we can put up the slide dealing with the acquisition of property by David Fitzhugh, I just want to try to follow some of this money.

You received a $50,000 commission for a $500,000 purchase, yet also was a $475,000 loan. If you add all those together, there is a missing $25,000. You said you didn't benefit, so in other words, $25,000 didn't get skimmed off and get put into your account?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, it did not.

Senator GRAMS. Where did it go?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I think there were some operating expenses, we had to pay insurance and get a bond with the city of Little Rock, and we didn't want to have absolutely no money in that account in case something needed to be done.

Senator GRAMS. Whose account was this? Was it Mr. McDougal's, so did he benefit from this loan as well?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, it was my account.

Senator GRAMS. So all $25,000 was gone?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know at the time the note was closed if it was fully funded or not.

Senator GRAMS. But you had a $25,000 cushion in there to take carry of excessive expenses.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe I did.

Senator GRAMS. You said you had money in an account that was going to take care of these expenses?

Mr. FITZHUGH. But I don't know how much it was.

Senator GRAMS. Did you ever close out the account?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Senator GRAMS. It is still there?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, since that bank is really no longer in existence, I moved that account to another bank, but the account itself is basically still in existence.

Senator GRAMS. So there is still money in this account, under your name?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, from other sources.

Senator GRAMS. There is a chance that you did benefit something from this, you did have some money that was circulating that was put into this account?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I don't know what the trail of funds was, as far as when the loan was closed and where the money went. But as far as any financial benefit, I never received any.

Now, see, I got the rents from the Levi Strauss building and put that money into that account. I paid the bills and the taxes and everything else.

Senator GRAMS. Today, you can't account for all of that $25,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No. What I am saying is I don't know if I ever got it. I don't know if I got any of it or all of it.

Senator GRAMS. Doesn't that raise some questions? Now, I have been in some land deals where I have purchased properties like this and I have gone into these negotiations, and I have never had somebody put something like this on a plate and shove it in front of me and say, this is a pretty good deal, why don't you sign it. Did it look like a great opportunity to you, or didn't it have some kind of smell to it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, it looked like a possible opportunity, but of course, it's been 11 years and I am sure at the time that I knew where the money was and what was happening with it. But at this point in time I simply can't remember. But as far as making any money or getting any portion of the $50,000 commission, I did not.

Senator GRAMS. You were an employee of Madison and you said you were instructed to buy this parcel, Mr. McDougal told you to buy it. Did he explain why he wanted you to buy it? Again because he had to shift some notes or dollars away from Madison, they were overbooked, so to speak, on land and that they needed to move some of this land around, flip-flop, so to speak? Was that the way the instructions came to you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, it was well known at Madison at the time that because of this land purchase, they had more money—or not more money, more assets in the financial corporation than they should. And this Levi Strauss building was only one of many pieces of property that the savings and loan sold off. So I was not singled out to purchase something. It occurred with several other people and several other parcels.

Senator GRAMS. So there were other similar sweet deals, so to speak, that were being passed around on this property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know how similar they were, but I know there were other sales taking place.

Senator GRAMS. Now, you said you wouldn't have signed a nonrecourse loan, anything, or a recourse loan, but yet—so this is basically a wash, you said you collected rents from Levi, you put it into this so-called account and made the payments to the bank, so there were payments made on this loan at some time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It was never delinquent.

Senator GRAMS. You changed from a nonrecourse to a recourse loan. As the Chairman said, this note was put to you and you said you had to sign because the bank examiners were coming?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's right.

Senator GRAMS. Somebody had to say, because you were able to walk away from this in 1987, yet you said an even exchange, you didn't receive any money and Madison didn't receive any money. Was there some guarantee made to you as you were slipped this piece of paper for a recourse loan that said, don't worry about it, we will take care of this, and you will not be liable for anything in the future?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Senator GRAMS. So you gambled that you were going to take this property and that you were not going to be put on the hook for a $500,000 loan, or the balance?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I don't know that I would call it necessarily a gamble.

Senator GRAMS. But you said you made a call to someone who said we have to unwind this, they didn't realize the complexity of this. It was unwound and you were relieved, Madison took it back?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator GRAMS. But somewhere you had to unwind this, somebody must have told you that they would unwind this within a very short period of time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator GRAMS. So that was the deal you made when you signed the recourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Senator GRAMS. Were you relieved at all when this was all done? Did you walk out of there and say, whew, I am glad this is all over, that's a big loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Certainly I was glad to be done with it, yes.

Senator GRAMS. Mr. Nash, I want to ask you a couple of quick questions before my time runs out. Talking about the visit to Mr. McDougal's office at the trailer at Castle Grande, was there any reason that you would want to speak with Mr. McDougal at that time on the trip back from wherever you were at the event with then-Governor Clinton, on the way back to Little Rock? Do you have any reason why you wanted to stop and see Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. I can't think of a reason I would want to stop and see Mr. McDougal.

Senator GRAMS. Did you ever have any kind of a business relationship with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator GRAMS. A personal relationship with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator GRAMS. A State-type investment relation that the State was investing, or had any kind of relationship under your economic development authority?

Mr. NASH. Not that I am aware of.

Senator GRAMS. So you had no reason to stop, the trooper had no reason to stop, so again we have to assume that the third person in the car is the one who wanted to stop and talk with Mr. McDougal? I mean, rationally we could assume that?

Mr. NASH. Rationally, yes, sir, you could assume that.

Senator GRAMS. Now, you said it was just a visit to say hi and exchange pleasantries. You can remember blue jeans and Levi 501's, but you can't remember anything else about the conversation. And it just happened that there was a Levi's plant on the property, and that the whole conversation was just pleasantries?

Mr. NASH. What I remember is that the conversation was pleasantries. It was short, it was about the weather. We may have asked how his wife was doing. And I noticed in my deposition on page 60, where I do in fact refer to—the question was whether or not it may have been related to a certain type of blue jeans, and I think—I responded positively that it could have been, yes.

Senator GRAMS. You don't remember then-Governor Clinton asking any kind of a business-type question of Mr. McDougal involving any of his investments or any relationship with him?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I do not.

Senator GRAMS. When Mr. Lindsey called you, either in 1993 or in 1995, was he ever concerned or surprised by your lack of recollection of what happened at the meeting? He didn't question you further to ask you details about the meeting?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, he did not question me.

Senator GRAMS. So, it was a very short conversation with Mr. Lindsey?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, probably a few seconds.

Senator GRAMS. One last question. Mr. Fitzhugh, do you still owe any money at all on the loan dealing with this parcel with the Levi asked on it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I haven't since 1987.

Senator GRAMS. So you have nothing?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Nothing.

Senator GRAMS. What about any money in the account? Again, I want to go back to that. You can't say, or you can say, definitely that no money from this transaction remains in that account which you have now moved to another bank?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely no money remains in that account from this transaction, and I don't believe that loan was ever fully funded.

Senator GRAMS. But you still can't account for the $25,000 that moved around?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I am saying I don't believe it was ever fully funded, which means I never got it.

Senator GRAMS. All right, I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Gentlemen, I want to make sure we are clear on one thing. Senator Grams said it just happened there was a Levi plant on this property. That was a question he put to you, Mr. Nash. Now, my understanding, and we have gone over it more than once this morning, is that the Levi plant was not on this property; is that correct, Mr. Fitzhugh?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The Levi Strauss plant is not what is known as building number one, and was not part of the purchase from IDC.

Senator SARBANES. Right, it was in an entirely different location?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Entirely different location.

Senator SARBANES. What was on the IDC property was a warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct, a warehouse.

Senator SARBANES. I just wanted to be very clear about that because these questions keep being put as a premise of the question. That's not what the question is about. The question is about something else, but an assumption of the question is that there is a Levi plant on this IDC property. And as I understand it, there is no Levi plant on this IDC property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Is that your understanding, Mr. Nash, or you didn't know one way or the other?

Mr. NASH. I don't know one way or the other.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Fitzhugh, the circumstances under which you signed a recourse note making you personally liable for the loan were not pleasant for you, were they?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The notion that you would have changed your obligation from nonrecourse to recourse was not something which you had volunteered to do if you had not been encouraged to do so; is that fair to say?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely not. There is no incentive to do that and I would not do it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, indeed, you took that action under what you believed to be some duress?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, exactly.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The duress came from an individual associated in some way with the management or board of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it fair to say that you went into those circumstances in very great detail during the 1990 trial, 6 years ago, of Mr. McDougal and others?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, I did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were questioned extensively, you were cross-examined, and all of this was laid out in chapter and verse 6 years ago in connection with that trial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And essentially, was it your view that if you didn't sign this recourse loan that you would have been terminated from your employment?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Whether that suggestion was made to you directly or indirectly, that was the sense that you got, that unless this happened you were gone?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. By the same token, when you were strongly encouraged to revise the terms of that transaction, you understood that it was in the context of some bank examiners that were coming in to review the loans at the savings and loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So in all fairness, it is not off the mark to suggest that you recognized that this was fishy at the very least?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Absolutely, and I suppose in retrospect, I could say I should have taken the note and told them where to stick it, but I didn't do that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I understand that. And all of this, again, is information that was provided to the Federal authorities. It was the subject of a prosecution by the U.S. Attorney's Office in Little Rock, Arkansas. You did not hold back in any way, shape or form, as I understand it, at the time you gave that testimony then, nor are you doing so now?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct. I have told the exact same facts as they occurred every single time I have been questioned about this matter.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murkowski.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR FRANK H. MURKOWSKI

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fitzhugh, you were associated from 1985 to 1987 with Madison; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Could you give us a little detail on what your titles were during that time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe the only title I ever had was vice president.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Vice president of Madison S&L?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I believe it started out as Madison Financial Corporation, and then went to Madison Savings & Loan, and then went back to Madison Financial Corporation.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So you considered yourself, at least during some period of that time, a vice president of Madison S&L?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Only when I was employed or when my paycheck came from the S&L. They switched me around, but my duties and my work never really changed.

Senator MURKOWSKI. If we were looking at the annual report of Madison and we were looking at a list of its officers, the vice president is clearly an officer, would you have been included likely in the list of the officers?

Mr. FITZHUGH. For the savings and loan?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I doubt it. It depends upon—see, I don't know what period of time I worked for the savings and loan.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, who paid you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I got a check like everyone else did and—

Senator MURKOWSKI. It was drawn on an account at Madison S&L?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No. For awhile it was drawn on an account at what I call MFC, Madison Financial Corporation, and then for a period of time, it was switched and drawn on Madison Savings & Loan, for what reason I have no idea. But it was—

Senator MURKOWSKI. All right. You are a lawyer and, obviously, you know that the ascension of any officers in a corporation is sanctioned by the board of directors?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Would you repeat that?

Senator MURKOWSKI. You are a lawyer, and as a consequence, you know that any elevation to an officer status, which is what a vice president is, takes an action by the board of directors.

Mr. FITZHUGH. All right.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And you know of no action taken by the board of directors of the S&L or the financial corporation to make you an officer?

Mr. FITZHUGH. When I started working there, I started—

Senator MURKOWSKI. Where?

Mr. FITZHUGH. At Madison Financial Corporation, I was a vice president on the first day I went to work, so I assumed whatever needed to be done, took place before I got there. When they—

Senator MURKOWSKI. Just a minute now. During the time you signed correspondence, would you sign it as a vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Perhaps. I probably would, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You would. Vice president of what?

Mr. FITZHUGH. MFC, when I was working for MFC.

Senator MURKOWSKI. How about when you were working for Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. If I was working for the savings and loan, I would probably sign any letters Vice President, Madison Savings & Loan.

Senator MURKOWSKI. OK, now, being a lawyer and being a vice president of Madison Savings & Loan, sometime during that period of time of 1985 to 1987, can you tell us how you had no knowledge of the limitation on the S&L to loan more than 6 percent of its net worth to any one customer?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I did not take part in any loan committee meetings, any loans, and I was never asked my opinion about making any loans.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, what did you do, basically, at the institution when you were a vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I did a variety of things. One of the main things I did was work for them to put together a broker-dealer so that, in the event they ever had a product to sell, we would be set up to sell it. And I worked on some real estate projects up and down South Main Street.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You worked on real estate projects. Did you work on any that involved Seth Ward?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Pardon me?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Seth Ward.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Seth Ward bought the IDC but other than that, I didn't have anything to do with—

Senator MURKOWSKI. Other than that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You were aware of his role?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Only after he purchased IDC.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You weren't aware of it prior to that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. He didn't have any role?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not that I am aware of.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So that role came up when he purchased the IDC?

Mr. FITZHUGH. As far as I know, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Do you recall the IDC's transitioning into Castle Grande?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, not exactly.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What do you mean, "not exactly"?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, to me there was IDC and there was Castle Grande.

Senator MURKOWSKI. They are one and the same, aren't they?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What's different?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Castle Grande was a residential development of manufactured homes, and the IDC was a large tract of property that included Castle Grande.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But Castle Grande acquired the IDC over a period of time?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir—no, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Some of it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. None of it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Castle Grande did not acquire IDC.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Was there some activity that transferred land from IDC to Castle Grande?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Castle Grande was carved out of the IDC at some point in time.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So there was a transfer then, if Castle Grande was carved out?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know how any of that took place. I was not part of the purchase.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You had some activity in association with Seth Ward?

Mr. FITZHUGH. My only activity is, I knew he purchased IDC.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But you had no knowledge, as a vice president and a lawyer, in your association as a vice president of the S&L that there was any limitation on activity relating to the volume that was occurring in the sense of Madison funding Seth Ward for acquisition of land during this timeframe. How many vice presidents were there of the S&L?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Several; it was a——

Senator MURKOWSKI. "Several" is how many?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I would guess four or five.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did you ever communicate?

Mr. FITZHUGH. With the other vice presidents?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes. Did you ever go to a loan committee meeting?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Never.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Never went to one?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Never.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Not one at all?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not one.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did you ever go to one that associated itself with the Madison Financial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe there were any.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Were there minutes kept of any of the activities of Madison Financial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I wouldn't have any reason to know. I didn't go to any meetings where there was a secretary that would have kept meeting notes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. It is extraordinary that as a vice president, you would not have some function, as implied by the title of vice president. I find that very unusual.

But, so you didn't find anything suspicious about the activities, in discussions relative to these extraordinary land sales that were taking place, and you yourself made $50,000 in commissions for a transaction, without really doing anything, to earn it; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, when you say I made it, I mean, that implies I benefited from it and I don't consider myself to have benefited from it, but I did receive it.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Your net worth increased $50,000, didn't it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe so.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What did it do? It didn't decrease it, did it? You say you benefited by it, what do you mean, did or didn't? Did you get $50,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I turned the money over in less than 30 seconds to the savings and loan so they would make a loan to me. I never deposited it in my account.

Senator MURKOWSKI. How much was the loan to you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, the full principal amount was 525, but I do not know how much——

Senator MURKOWSKI. "525" means what?

Mr. FITZHUGH. $525,000.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So for turning over $50,000, you received a $525,000 loan; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That was used to purchase a building, so I never got any of that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And what was the interest rate that was charged on that loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Ten.

Senator MURKOWSKI. A 10 percent rate?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You paid the interest——

Mr. FITZHUGH. I paid——

Senator MURKOWSKI. —and the principal back?

Mr. FITZHUGH. —every month.

Senator MURKOWSKI. As an attorney, why would it be necessary that you get $50,000 in commission and have to turn it over to the bank. And then, in consideration for a loan, you usually go into a S&L and you put up collateral you get the loan or you don't, but here you basically turned your $50,000 commission over as consideration for a nonrecourse loan? As a lawyer do you consider that a questionable transaction and process?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, at the time that it was taking place, as I mentioned earlier, you know, I felt like it was not my position to question everything they were doing. Certainly it raised my eyebrows when he first said, do you have a brokers' license, you are going to purchase this building, certainly I was shocked——

Senator MURKOWSKI. You do not need a broker's license to purchase a building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, but I had to have a broker's license so that he could pay me the $50,000.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You didn't question the legitimacy of that? The fact that that isn't an everyday occurrence, when you go to your S&L to borrow money, that you get a commission for a transaction that you are involved in and you pay that back to the S&L? How much was the building—you borrowed $525,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, as I stated earlier, I believe that's the note amount. But as far as how much was advanced, I don't know.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You do not know what you paid for the building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe it was $500,000.

Senator MURKOWSKI. It was $500,000, and you were advanced $525,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What were you advanced?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I do not remember——

Senator MURKOWSKI. You don't know?

Mr. FITZHUGH. —what I was advanced. Probably $450,000, the $50,000 commission, and another $450 would make up $500.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So you got the $50,000, you paid it to the bank in consideration for a $450,000 loan, OK. And then you had to pay that $50 back, so you actually had to pay the bank back $500,000; is that right? But you don't know.

Mr. FITZHUGH. You are kind of losing me here on these——

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, I'm just trying to get—you don't know what you paid for the building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe the sales price was $500,000.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And you borrowed how much?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, the note was set up for $525. I believe at the time that note closed, I borrowed and was advanced $450,000, plus the $50 on the commission, would be $500 for the sales price of the building.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes, but the $50 on commission, was that part of the note? Was that added to the $450?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't really know.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And yet you say that they made a note for $525,000 and you got $450 or you got the $50 that was added back. I don't know, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't think the $50 was added back into what I borrowed, no.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Let's assume that you paid $500,000, but they advanced $525,000. What happened to the other $25,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe it was ever advanced.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You don't think it was ever advanced, OK. But you bought a building that you never saw, I guess, previous to buying it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Prior to purchasing it, that's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That causes me, for a lawyer and a banker, that's hardly a normal function when you are going to buy something. And then I gather you told us that McDougal told you he was in a hurry to process the transaction to clean up the Madison books. Did he know the examiners were coming?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't really know what his timeframe was, but you are correct, he was anxious to get it done.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But he didn't know the examiners were coming. Did you know the examiners were coming?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know what he knew. It was always a rumor, the examiners were——

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did you ever meet with the examiners?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator MURKOWSKI. They never questioned you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is extraordinary banking procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Fitzhugh, I am looking at the Federal Home Loan Bank Board Report of Examination, and they list a number of vice presidents for Madison S&L, senior vice president. In fact, they list one, two, three, four of them. Was that the situation? You were not the only vice president, I take it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't believe there was another male person there that was not a vice president. There may have been some but I do not recall who they were.

Senator SARBANES. Were you a senior vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Was there a distinction between vice president and senior vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Other than title. I mean, the titles were more or less meaningless.

Senator SARBANES. Was a senior vice president regarded as being of higher rank than a vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. There just wasn't any true rank per se. I understand what you are saying. Under normal circumstances, certainly that would have been the case.

Senator SARBANES. But everyone was a vice president? Not everyone, but a great number of people were vice presidents, right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. So the fact that you were a vice president is not like when there's only one vice president like of the United States; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, no, it's not quite as significant.

Senator SARBANES. I want to ask about this property that's up there on that board. Is that entire colored area the IDC property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, there was actually—I believe there's some property that was not out here that was actually owned by the IDC that was purchased at the same time and it was located in a different industrial park.

Senator SARBANES. OK. But the reference to the IDC property encompassed certainly all of that property and it may have encompassed other property. This was the property acquired by Madison from the Industrial Development Commission; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Industrial Development Company, yes.

Senator SARBANES. Company, sorry. Now, Castle Grande was a portion of this IDC property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Castle Grande was where they were going to do the so-called trailer park? Actually, I think they had a more upscale name for it than that.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes. It really wasn't a trailer park because there were large tracts of land that had manufactured housing on it.

Senator SARBANES. Now other parts of the IDC property were to be used for commercial and industrial development; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. And also other forms of residential development as well?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe the only plans for residential development were south of 145th Street, which is that light blue color up on your chart.

Senator SARBANES. But that's different from the Castle Grande property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Castle Grande is part of that. Castle Grande is where the blue is.

Senator SARBANES. Was all of that blue or just part of it, the manufactured home section?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I don't know how much ever became manufactured homes, but primarily it was the land right next to 145th Street, right on it.

Senator SARBANES. OK. When this property was first acquired, I take it, it was referenced as the IDC property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir, as far as I know.

Senator SARBANES. That's how you knew it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's exactly how I knew it.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me pick up on the questioning of the Senator from Alaska. There isn't any question but that there were extraordinary banking practices that went on at Madison Savings & Loan during the timeframe that we're talking about, isn't that so?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Correct. Also, it was before the RTC existed, it was before the big savings and loan scandal, and people were not walking around constantly thinking, is this bank doing something illegal? You know, today that may be in the back of everyone's head, but 10 or 11 years ago it wasn't. You didn't question what everyone did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But in fact, with all deference to you and the extent of your knowledge, there were other transactions that went on and they rose to the level where a Federal Grand Jury sitting in Little Rock returned an indictment against Mr. James McDougal and others?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. McDougal and others stood trial before a jury, there was an extensive trial in which you testified, these extraordinary practices were all laid out and that case resulted in an acquittal?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But there were hundreds of trials around the country involving operators of savings and loans who were charged with having engaged in improper or fraudulent transactions?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that all grew out of the same basic situation where funds were loaned and could not be repaid and that caused the savings and loans to collapse or to be taken over and substantial costs incurred by Federal insurance and regulatory agencies. We are not inventing something new here; this savings and loan crisis has been the subject of very considerable discussion. We have seen in the index to the reports literally dozens of monographs written about the causes of savings and loans collapsing in this country.

But let me ask you, in connection with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board examination which occurred in 1986, did anyone from the Rose Law Firm come over to prepare you for that examination?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, no one from the Rose Law Firm spoke with me, and I was not part of that examination.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, to the best of your knowledge, no one from the Rose Firm had anything to do with that examination?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Not that I'm aware of, no, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Faircloth.

OPENING STATEMENT OF SENATOR LAUCH FAIRCLOTH

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just a brief statement, Mr. Chairman. As you know, there has been a growing pressure from some Democrats to end the hearings at the end of February; and there have been suggestions that the hearings are political. Last night I watched ABC News and I learned that the White House put out a negative press package against Chairman D'Amato. It would seem to me that the hearings would be over a lot quicker if the White House put its time and attention to answering our document requests, such as E-mails, then having tax dollars and Government-paid lawyers prepare hit pieces against this Committee, particularly the Chairman. We already know they use the White House legal counsel for personal legal work.

What it comes down to, Mr. Chairman, is that the people who are clamoring this is political are the very same people engaged in some of the most blatant of politics to try to end the hearings.

I think it has become pretty clear that the White House is trying to end the hearings, and it suggests to me that they are afraid we will find something. For that very reason, I think that's the best reason I can think of to keep the hearings going and continue them after February.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have been dealing in land—buying and selling real estate—or buying mostly for the last 50 years. I heard your testimony and I have never ever ran into such things as you are talking about doing. Let me ask you, did you ever make from Madison a legal, properly collateralized loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I was not on the loan committee and I do not know what type of loans they made or to whom they were made. I was not part of the loan process at that savings and loan.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. I've been listening to you. What did you do?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I worked on their broker-dealer, setting up a broker-dealer for them, and I worked on some of their real estate projects. And it was not—you know, let me say this: It was not a job where I was busy completely 8 hours a day. I feel like they were looking for things for me to do.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Well, it certainly would appear that way. The attorney for the other side keeps referring to them as unusual loans or unusual lending practices. If that isn't a euphemism for crookedness, I never heard it. But that certainly seems to be what these loans were.

Anyway, Mr. Nash, you know Bruce Lindsey, of course?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, I do.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You had a call from him in 1993, asking you about the meeting in the trailer?

Mr. NASH. He called me, I believe it was in 1993 when I was at USDA and asked me did I remember being in a trailer, meeting with Mr. McDougal and Governor Clinton; and I said yes, I do remember a meeting. I didn't characterize it as a meeting. I characterized it as a visit or a drive-by.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Did you ask him why he wanted to know?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You had another call from him on the same thing in November 1995?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, approximately that time.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. What did he ask you about then?

Mr. NASH. The same thing, did I remember him asking me earlier had I been in a meeting; and I said yes, I do remember you asking me earlier.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Did you ask him why he wanted to know?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. And you didn't have any curiosity as to why Bruce Lindsey would be asking you about a meeting with Bill Clinton, you rolled with it and didn't ask him why he wanted to know?

Mr. NASH. I assumed that he wanted to know because of all that has been going on here and before.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. This was November 1995. Give me a little detail of that conversation.

Mr. NASH. I just did. That was the extent of it.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You didn't find it perked your curiosity alot that Mr. Lindsey was wanting to know about a meeting in a trailer between Governor Clinton and McDougal?

Mr. NASH. Senator, I made an assumption that it was about the activity going on here today and before.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Nash, you are head of Presidential Personnel at the White House now?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. It is my understanding that last week, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission appointed Mr. John Tull as interim head of this agency, a longtime friend of the Clintons from Arkansas.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, that's not within the scope of this inquiry. I mean, no way, shape or form that's within the scope of this inquiry.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. It's not a question. It's a statement.

Senator SARBANES. Pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, I give great latitude to all of the Senators, Republicans and Democrats. If the Chair sees this going off, the Senator has a right to make his statements and we're going to proceed. Continue, Senator.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. It is my understanding that last week the Commodity Futures Trading Commission appointed John Tull. I have heard that the White House is considering nominating a close friend of Hillary Clinton's, someone without a background in the area, to run the CFTC permanently. Have you heard that?

Senator SARBANES. That is outside the scope of this inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say this to you.

Senator SARBANES. Well, it clearly is.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say that the Senator asked a question. If Mr. Nash wants to answer or has an answer or knows or doesn't know, he can answer.

Senator SARBANES. Well, I don't think Mr. Nash would be put in the position of having to decide whether to answer or not if the question is improper as being outside the scope of this inquiry, to begin with.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your observation, counselor? Why don't you sit down and when I say "sit down," I mean, take a chair there and pull it over to that microphone.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I only would raise an objection that that question is totally outside of what we understood Mr. Nash was going to be asked about. He hasn't had a chance to be prepared on that. I think it's unfair to go into an area that's not within the Resolution and without notice.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. What I'm getting to, and I can get there real quick. We are still going with these friends of Hillary. We appointed—I opposed Ricki Tigert for FDIC because I said it was going to be right back where we are today, she would be making judgments on Mrs. Clinton, which is exactly where we are with the RTC, folded into the FDIC. Ricki Tigert is making judgments on what was described as her favorite hanging-out pal, Mrs. Clinton.

Now, we are getting ready to appoint another lady or talking about doing it and getting into the same trap, and I'm going to say we ought to stop it before we start it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman takes note of Senator Faircloth's statements. I think, obviously, we've talked about issues that come here, we've talked outside of them, but I don't think that Mr. Nash really should be required to answer that. Certainly the Senator makes his comment, and I don't think that this is really the time to take that up; that's on the Senate Floor or in that Committee, et cetera. I don't think it comes before this Committee even as a Banking Committee, but Senator—

Senator FAIRCLOTH. That's all, I'm through.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

We have a few minutes left, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Fitzhugh, I just want to step back and focus on this entire set of transactions. In the fall of 1985, your understanding was that this IDC tract, this entire piece of property, the whole thing, was being bought by Madison Financial but that it was split between Seth Ward and Madison Financial on paper so that Ward could warehouse the property to avoid limitations on the amount of property Madison Financial could show on its books; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe I was aware that the property had been purchased and there was a division of ownership right down 145th Street, and that one side was purchased by Madison and one side was purchased by Seth Ward. Now as far as the particulars of what you're talking about, that Seth Ward was warehousing that, you know, at this point in time, I'm aware of that because it's been in the news so much and I may have found out about that back then, but it was not something that was talked about on a regular basis that that's what was occurring, but that is what happened.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that Madison Financial controlled Seth Ward's property and that he would do with the property what they wanted him to; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, when you say I knew that, I guess that was kind of an understanding that that would take place.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If I can have one moment, I would like to put up MG 797.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to address the comments by Senator Faircloth about a growing pressure to end the hearings, and to simply say that's absolutely not the case. What is at work is an effort to intensify the hearings in order to complete our work as provided by in the Senate Resolution.

Yesterday, the Committee heard testimony from two bank examiners, James Clark and Dawn Pulcer, about their work 10 years ago on an examination of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. Both Mr. Clark and Ms. Pulcer gave extensive public testimony just last summer on August 7th, on these very same matters before the House Banking Committee. In fact, Mr. Clark and Ms. Pulcer testified for several hours at the House hearings and the transcript of that testimony is some 200 pages long. Mr. Clark also testified fully about these matters in the RTC investigation of Madison Guaranty conducted by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro. The report of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro to the RTC has now been made public.

The Committee spent an entire day obtaining testimony from Mr. Clark and Ms. Pulcer. That testimony essentially covered the same ground as the prior House hearings and the Pillsbury Report. It was asserted that the House did not touch on Castle Grande and reference was made to one exchange on that subject. An examination of the RTC investigation by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro indicates that there was extensive discussion of that subject and it, in fact, is included at some length in the Pillsbury Madison & Sutro Report.

I think it was clear yesterday at the hearing that the personal knowledge of Mr. Clark and Ms. Pulcer on Madison Guaranty transactions was less specific and complete than the information that had previously been made public in the Pillsbury Report and elsewhere.

Now, my view is that this hearing was not an efficient or productive use of the Committee's time. The Committee has a number of witnesses that it can hear from who can contribute more to developing a hearing record than yesterday's witnesses, since they have already developed a public hearing record in two fora.

Obviously, if the Committee does not take care to avoid needlessly repeating matters that already have been fully explored and made public, these hearings could go on indefinitely. They, indeed, could go on forever.

It is my strongly held view, as I indicated in the report to the Senate, that if that happens, the public perception that this is a political exercise will increase and the credibility of the Committee and the Senate will suffer; and I hope we can avoid that and that's why we've pressed hard to intensify the hearing schedule and the number of people coming before us.

Now on that point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask about David Hale. In March 1994, Hale entered into a plea agreement with the Independent Counsel, providing that he "will not be further prosecuted for any crimes related to his participation in the conduct of the affairs of Capital Management Services, Diversified Capital, Inc. and Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and any other crimes to the extent David Hale has disclosed such criminal activity to this office as of the date of this agreement." That's the agreement between Hale and the Independent Counsel, in effect, giving him immunity from any crimes related to those matters which I enunciate.

In October of last year, you and I wrote to Kenneth Starr, the Independent Counsel, and advised him that the Committee intended to proceed with this investigation, notwithstanding Starr's concerns about the effect the Committee's hearings might have on his investigation because of the Committee's strong interest in concluding its work by February 29, 1996, as provided for in Senate Resolution 120, which authorized this Special Committee and set out the parameters within which we would function.

Mr. Chairman, you stated that the Committee should receive testimony from Hale, and in fact at a hearing in November said, and

I quote, "I would like to bring him in sooner rather than later so that he can testify and so that he can be examined."

On December 7, after a meeting with Independent Counsel Starr, who, of course, has interposed objections to us hearing from a number of witnesses, the Chairman asked Minority Counsel to work with Majority Counsel to arrange for Hale's deposition. Throughout December our Counsel, in fact, urged the Majority Counsel to begin the process of arranging for Hale's testimony. And we pointed out in early January that no document subpoena or deposition notice had been sent to Hale.

We were then advised by the Majority Counsel after a document subpoena had been drafted and submitted to them for review that Mr. Hale's new counsel, Theodore B. Olson of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, had two Supreme Court arguments in January and that the Majority had agreed to wait until after those arguments to send Hale a document subpoena.

Now those arguments, as I understand it, have taken place, they have come and gone, the basis on which a document request was not made at the time in a timely way to Mr. Hale. I don't know, but I am led to understand that the Chairman and the Majority staff have had discussions with Hale's new attorney, Mr. Olson, about Hale's availability. If those discussions have taken place, the Minority was not included in them. I don't know whether there have been discussions with the Independent Counsel about this matter. If so, the Minority has not been included in them.

So, I guess my first inquiry is in regard to the discussions with Mr. Olson and Mr. Starr. What is the Chairman's current understanding of Hale's availability as a witness?

Second, I would say to the Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to say to my colleague if you think that I'm going to answer a series of questions, you're mistaken, number one. Number two, if you want to put them all out on the record, you certainly have a right to do that, but I think that to pose these questions without discussing them with me, and you have ample opportunity, or with Counsel, because we have had discussions with respect to this, is highly unusual. But if you choose to conduct yourself in that manner, that's your business and it's on your time, so continue. It's on your time.

Senator SARBANES. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. Right.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, we have repeatedly discussed them with you and with Majority Counsel. There have been repeated discussions between Majority and Minority Counsel about these matters. The last time we had an extended discussion, we were told that the Majority had apparently had a discussion with Mr. Hale's new attorney, I think Mr. Olson had just been brought in, and that Mr. Olson had cases pending in the Supreme Court, that were to be argued in mid-January. And you were deferring to that and intended to pursue this matter, as I understood it, immediately thereafter.

Now, we have not, as I understand it, issued a subpoena for the Hale documents, we have not made any arrangements to take the Hale deposition, despite efforts to do so beginning well back in the fall. I'm at a loss to understand why there hasn't been some follow-up on this matter, and I've put it on the public record because repeated efforts to explore this matter with the Majority have been unsuccessful. We were told, well, we need to ascertain this and then we will move forward. The Chairman himself had indicated earlier his intention to move forward on this matter. And, you know, I think we should have proceeded on it, and I don't think that the Hale matter ought to, in the end, then, turn out to be another assertion of why the Committee has to continue its work when at least we have pressed continuously to try to get both a document request out and a deposition request out.

Mr. Chairman, the red light has gone on and therefore I will—

The CHAIRMAN. Before I recognize Senator Grams, the Senator is absolutely correct as it relates to our intention that I have stated publicly and that we have discussed on numerous occasions, both through our Counsels and together, and also together with the Special Prosecutor. Obviously, Mr. Hale and his testimony will be an important part of the considerations that this Committee has to give as it collects the various evidence and statements and attempts to get the facts, and that's what we are trying to do, to get the facts. So that's important.

Now, the Senator is absolutely correct, we did contact Mr. Hale's new attorney, Mr. Olson. Mr. Olson advised us that he was not in the position to begin to consider bringing Mr. Hale in, inasmuch as he had two Supreme Court cases that he had to argue the end of January and that he would not consider that nor could he take the time until he had disposed of these matters, that he was pre-occupied and was not prepared to bring his client in.

This Committee is very aware, as I am sure my learned colleague is, as well as his distinguished counsel and co-counsels, that there are any number of things, if we are to press this matter in a way that did not meet with Mr. Hale's attorney, that he could do.

He could assert that he would, if subpoenaed, raise the defense of the Fifth Amendment, that he would assert that privilege. If he did that, we would not be able to bring him in, not unless the entire Senate was ready to vote to give him immunity. I do not want to be accused, nor do I think the Committee wants to be accused, of creating a situation where we specifically dealt with that in the Resolution as it relates that we would not grant immunity unless we have, very specifically, the approval of the Special Counsel, because there have been problems in the past with Congressional Committees granting immunity and arguments as it related to them thereby impeding prosecutions where there was a Special Prosecutor. The Senate was quite explicit with respect to that.

So that, my friend and colleague, is our reason for handling this matter in what I think is an absolutely appropriate manner.

Now as it relates to Mr. Olson indicating that he had two Supreme Court arguments at the end of January that he had to deal with, January 17th, my colleague tells me. The fact of the matter is that one of those, in a most unusual occurrence, was postponed to sometime in February. That almost never, never, never takes place. It is extraordinary when an argument before the Supreme Court is put over, and the reason was one of the reasons that this Committee even delayed at the request of the Minority our putting our reports out and answering, was the snowstorm.

One of his clients or co-counsel, I am not sure which, this was reported to me by my Counsel, could not get into DC for that argument. I don't know where they were trapped but the Court took this extraordinary action of moving the case over. So when we contacted Mr. Olson thereafter, we were told I am sorry, this case is put over, I have not had an opportunity to give to Mr. Hale the attention necessary to decide what our position will be. And we are in this situation.

We've discussed this before. This Committee and this Chairman have no reason not to want to hear Mr. Hale and to get his testimony. So I'm sorry that I had to take the time to explain it in this manner, and I'm equally sorry that my colleague felt the necessity of attempting, I think, to put this in a manner, and I note that I did not interrupt, and I would hope that we have the same courtesy, to put this in a manner that would attempt to embarrass the Chairman or attempt to cast doubts on the sincerity that we have in bringing key witnesses before this Committee. It's wrong, it's counterproductive, but I'm going to say it again. We're going to continue to seek the facts. We would like to handle as many witnesses as we possibly can.

It seems to me that if my colleagues would help in attempting to get facts, we could move this process. There have been cases where we have had extended reviews of documents that we heard read into the record 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 times from Members on the Minority side, and that does not aid the process. So if it's to wear us out by trying to make the hearings less than factfinding, to make it difficult, to impede it, to slow it down, to cause maybe the media to lose interest in it, I have to tell you, others may lose interest in it, but we're going to proceed. We're going to get the facts, and we're going to attempt to be as fair as we possibly can be, to everybody. And we recognize that you can't have total recall in situations, so we're going to continue to proceed.

Senator Grams.

Senator GRAMS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fitzhugh, I have a couple of quick questions that I would like to go back over with you again to try to straighten out some of these questions that I have about this missing $25,000, and I'm just going to put this back up on the Elmo again and go through the transactions.

I know you received a $50,000 commission and a $475,000 loan. Now a couple of minutes ago when Senator Murkowski was talking or questioning you, you brought up a $450,000 loan. I think the records show that it was a $475,000 loan. So what we can assume from this is that from your $50,000 commission, you put $25,000 cash into the $500,000 deal plus the $475,000 loan. Now, you did say you had another account that was to cover outside expenses dealing with the closing of this property. Are you familiar with a closing statement? I'm sure you are. A closing statement—

Mr. FITZHUGH. A closing statement, yes. I haven't seen the one on this property for awhile.

Senator GRAMS. We saw the deeds from Madison to Seth Ward to you. Now on the closing statement it would detail the price of the property, the amount of money you would put in, the amount of money of the loan. It would also detail all the expenses, State deed taxes, transfer taxes, appraisal fees. Everything else would be listed. It would also say who would pay these fees, whether it would be the seller or the buyer. It would come down to a bottom line of what were your liabilities.

So from that we could say that the $25,000 was to cover this. You said it was put into an account which was also the account you used to make the payments to the bank after receiving rents from Levi. So if you have that, is there a way we can get a record to find out exactly what the closing costs were and where this other $25,000 went?

Mr. FITZHUGH. When you say that $25,000 was put into my account, I know that wasn't true. I never had a $25,000—

Senator GRAMS. I thought that's what you said.

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir. I said I'm not sure if this loan had ever been fully funded.

Senator GRAMS. Well, the transaction said it was and that's why a closing statement would say that. And if you gave back a $50,000 check, we should know where that $50,000 went and what it was credited to.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I would suspect it would show up as earnest money and that there would be a line on the settlement statement that would say, "First mortgage, $450,000."

Senator GRAMS. We have it here, $475,000 is the first mortgage according to the records.

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, that may be true that the mortgage—sometimes a mortgage is filed for an amount higher than the amount funded. That's rather common.

Senator GRAMS. All right. And the financial statement would show that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The closing statement.

Senator GRAMS. The closing statement. You're familiar then, too, with the financial statement, your net worth?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Mine? Yes, sir.

Senator GRAMS. You say you didn't gain from this, but you know if you put this money down, say $25 or even the $50,000 against a $500,000 purchase, it would show a net worth gain to you of $50,000?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator GRAMS. It could also show a net gain of a half million if we use Mr. Betts' appraisal of $1 million?

Mr. FITZHUGH. If I chose to use that, that's correct.

Senator GRAMS. It could give you leverage so there was some benefits, whether—

Mr. FITZHUGH. I never altered my financial statement based upon the purchase of this building.

Senator GRAMS. But it would also encumber you as far as other future loans—

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Senator GRAMS. —because you would be exposed financially, so it could be either a plus or minus?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, yes, sir, you're right.

Senator GRAMS. What I am trying to get at is there is a lot of things that you should have or maybe did consider when you agreed to sign these papers to assume this portion of the property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. It happened rather quickly. I didn't sit around and think about this for a month or two. It was probably a span of certainly less than a week between when it was proposed and when all the papers were dated and so forth, and I'm sure there are little things, you know, you could think about if you had the time, but you're absolutely right.

Senator GRAMS. I would just like to ask the Chairman if there's any way we could get a look at the closing statements. I don't know if that's proper to ask or——

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know what statements, if any, might be available. But I'll certainly ask the Committee and Counsels to see if they can come up with any. I don't think they exist, at this point in time, but let's take a look and see if we can get them, if the RTC, anybody else has them.

Senator GRAMS. I think that would help to clear up a lot of the questions. I want to thank the witness.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I would yield the remainder of my time to Senator Murkowski.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you very much, Senator Grams.

I would like to point out for Senator Sarbanes' consideration that he puts a lot of credibility in the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan report done by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro.

As a former banker, I put less credibility in this for a number of reasons. First of all, you rely on the actual examination and the statements of the examination as signed by the examiners. That's really the constituted effort of those that are on top of the specific legality associated with the operation of the lending function and the internal workings of the institution. I would also add one more important thing that I think the Senator from Maryland has overlooked, is that this does not contain any of the information associated with the Rose billing records, which were not available when this report was done and had they been available, Mr. Chairman, I can assure you there would have been different conclusions and certainly different insinuations associated in this report. I think it's important that the Committee reflect on that.

Let me just run through a couple of things as I understand it, Mr. Fitzhugh. You knew the loan portfolios were in disarray and you indicated that you knew there was an examination at some time in the future?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You knew that the Rose Law Firm was on a retainer for Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. If I knew that, it was because of hearsay down at the bank, but yes, I probably knew that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And Mr. Fitzhugh, you knew that Seth Ward was used as a purchaser of land on behalf of Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I knew he purchased the land but his exact deal with McDougal, I was not privy to the details.

Senator MURKOWSKI. All right. And you indicated that McDougal ordered you to take an insider loan to purchase part of the Castle Grande property and he wanted to do it in a hurry to get the property off the books?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's not exactly what I said but that's close.

Senator MURKOWSKI. OK. As a vice president and officer, could you contract for Madison?

Mr. FITZHUGH. For instance, contract in what sense?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, as an officer, could you bind the corporation?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I would suspect that there would need to be a corporate resolution. Depends upon what you're talking about.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You are an officer. Could you bind the corporation? You are an agent of the corporation. Could you bind it as an officer and vice president?

Mr. FITZHUGH. If it was within my authority, I probably could.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You do not know what your authority was?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, it was never specifically spelled out.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Now, the examiners yesterday told us that Madison S&L was listed for special supervisory attention——

The CHAIRMAN. If I might, Senator——

Senator MURKOWSKI. I'll be very brief. I have about 1½ minutes and I'm through.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Senator Sarbanes is insisting on strict adherence——

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, then I'll insist that I have the opportunity to finish.

Senator SARBANES. You'll have another round.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That's fine, that's fine.

Senator SARBANES. Fine.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That's fine. I'm ready for another round.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say this because the situation is not a healthy one when we conduct ourselves in this manner. If the Minority insists on it, we will do that, but understand that brings into play the Majority insisting on strict adherence on many things. I'd hope that we could avoid that. The Chairman could point out that, indeed, Senator Murkowski has an additional 5 minutes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I don't have that long, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. No, no, bear with me, if you might.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. I make the observation that under the rules and procedure of this Committee, when there are less than five Senators, we can give up to 15 minutes to the Senator.

Senator SARBANES. Well, the Chairman is right and if he wishes to invoke that, then Senator Murkowski should proceed. I have absolutely no objection. I don't know how much time has been used.

Senator MURKOWSKI. We're running most of it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, proceed, we will get an extra 4 minutes. An additional 4 to bring it to the 15.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

My question is relative to the testimony yesterday where the examiners advised us that Madison S&L was listed for special attention and that was late in 1984. They were listed for special attention. The institution had agreed to provide a compliance report back to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board because there was concern expressed in an 1984 examination over the condition of the institution. Now those compliance terms are quite stringent. You were not aware that there was any compliance or mandatory reporting associated with the activities of Madison S&L during the tenure that you were there?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Sir, at the time I took a job with Madison, I was told by a friend of mine that they were looking for someone in their real estate department so I called them. I had never heard of Madison Savings & Loan, I didn't know who Jim McDougal was or John Latham. I was not aware of any compliance agreement or any restrictions they were under at the time I started work down there. I didn't even know where the place was.

Senator MURKOWSKI. When you worked there, you certainly conversed with the other officers and had occasion over coffee or other things to discuss the institution that paid you, didn't you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. There came a period of time, and I don't know if it was 1 month or 6 months or 12 months or what, that I did find out that Madison was under some kind of orders about what they could and couldn't do, but I never knew what they were, I just knew they were out there.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And as a lawyer, that didn't cause you to question activities in the daily occurrence of your duties to insure that there would not be any criticism relative to unusual financial dealings which you yourself took part in and received $50,000 consideration for a half million dollar loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I was not making any loans to any parties.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You never made a loan in your life?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But you accepted a loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And you, at that time, indicated that you knew that the S&L was under some kind of a compliance order?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, no, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Just a minute. You said you didn't know it before but you learned of it when you were working with the institution. You just told the Committee that.

Mr. FITZHUGH. At some point in time, but I don't remember exactly when.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But during the time you were employed by them, you would have this Committee believe that in conversing with officers in the bank, that you had no knowledge that the S&L was under direct orders from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to clean up its act or there would be hell to pay?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I did not know that until a later time, and I do not know the time.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I just find it extremely disturbing that the witness was involved in transactions and tells this Committee that he was somewhat of an innocent bystander where he was clearly involved by accepting a loan and that the circumstances of that loan in financial circles are absolutely uncalled for. How can you as a lawyer, I understand you have an MBA and work in an association, accept checks in payment and overlook the irregularities and almost the generalization of corrupt activities associated with that. How any lawyer involved in real estate transactions would not have some idea of what's going on is beyond me.

Mr. Fitzhugh did the Bar Association in Arkansas ever look into any of these activities, to your knowledge?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say I don't know what he was holding up from Pillsbury Madison & Sutro——

Senator MURKOWSKI. It's dated December 28.

Senator SARBANES. Well, these are the reports of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro [indicating]. And there is, as I understand it, extensive background material which takes up a number of drawers and file cabinets—apparently four file cabinets, which include all the backup material to this, their interviews, and so forth and so on. This study cost the Government $3.8 million, as I understand it.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I would ask the Senator from Maryland if the study covers the discovery of the billing records of the Rose Law Firm, which obviously, the information the Senator from Alaska has, it does not. And I think that would shed an entirely different light on certain generalizations. Does it or doesn't it, I would ask my good friend from Maryland.

Senator SARBANES. Well, the billing records, as I understand it, came after the report, apparently they are now looking at the billing records as well. I don't agree with the premise that it would fundamentally alter their conclusions but we will see.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I will certainly look forward to that examination jointly with the Ranking Member.

Senator SARBANES. We're perfectly happy to see that, but they do discuss extensively the representation of Madison by the Rose Law Firm. And some of it touches, in effect, on that issue, and I assume they will develop it further.

Second, I think the Senator stated that you rely on the examiner's report. Well, of course, the study took the examiner's reports and analyzed them, so they are encompassed within the study, and if you were——

Senator MURKOWSKI. I wouldn't necessarily draw that conclusion, Senator, that this is an interpretation by a competent law firm of a lot of information that it had, and opinions associated with drawing some generalizations surrounding that. It does not take the place of the actual examination of the on-site individuals who specialize and see one institution after the other, and I would suggest to you, probably have a hell of a lot more knowledge than lawyers who are simply contracted to do an evaluation of a lot of information, including examinations.

I assure you, these Federal examiners know their business and that's not necessarily to assume that a group of lawyers are better at assimilating that information and communicating it in a report.

So I'll stand by my statement. I would much rather depend on the accuracy of Federal examiners than a group of contract lawyers who give it to junior partners in the back room.

Senator SARBANES. It should be very clear that Pillsbury Madison & Sutro examined the reports and, in fact, interviewed the examiners——

Senator MURKOWSKI. So?

Senator SARBANES. —at great length, at great length.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That proves absolutely nothing. It's just a group of opinions put together in a report, but it doesn't necessarily displace the value of the examination by the examiners who were there and specifically looking at the details associated with the individual issues at hand, as opposed to the Sutro effort, which tried to bring it all together, had additional information, which I am sure is quite valuable, but for the specifics, you want to depend on the examination.

Senator SARBANES. Well, this is their interview of Clark right here. I mean, this is the length of the interview with Clark, and obviously to do a good job, they needed to interview Clark, examine the reports, assimilate all of the other information and material that was available to them and bring the report.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I think Clark did a pretty good job yesterday of stating that for an extended period of time, in his opinion, the S&L was out of compliance with the agreement, that it exceeded its 6 percent for an extended period of time, and I don't know whether you are going to get that in the Sutro Report, but that's what the examiner said. And, you know, he has to stand behind that because he examined the institution.

Senator SARBANES. That's right, and he's been interviewed extensively by them in the course of preparing their report and that interview is available. It's right here.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, so is his testimony available, and I would suggest to you, Senator, that if you examine the testimony yesterday and you examine the report, you won't find in the report the same conclusion that the organization was out of compliance over the 6 percent of the net worth for an extended period of time, practically the entire time, as a matter of fact, prior to the time they were shut down. So I think we're arguing over interpretations here. I'll stand by the examiner's report rather than——

Senator SARBANES. It's all interpretation. You have the examiner's report and you have the Pillsbury Report. It's obviously got to be interpreted. I mean, I don't quarrel with the necessity of interpretation.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Then we are both entitled to interpret it our own way.

Senator SARBANES. That's the point I'm making.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That's fair enough.

Senator SARBANES. But I'm challenging the putting forth of one interpretation as representing the definitive one, that's all.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I challenge you for continually bringing up the legitimacy of one report, namely, the Sutro Report over the individual examinations, which unfortunately we don't have the availability of, to the detail I would like to, but I wish we could have the examinations in front of us in the detail that would be necessary to communicate back to some of the witnesses.

So what we're looking at here is, you know——

Senator SARBANES. Actually they're consistent with one another, that's the point I'm trying to make to the Senator.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, I think that's subject to interpretation, too. So let's leave it at that.

Senator SARBANES. I will leave it at that but they are consistent with one another, and I invite my colleague to examine them and reach a judgment in that regard.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Let's see what Sutro says when they have an opportunity to examine the billing records.

Senator SARBANES. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the Hale matter, it's not clear to me why a subpoena for documents could not be issued. If we're going to move ahead on the Hale matter, why we could not issue a subpoena for documents now, and the question of his own testimony—

The CHAIRMAN. I am not going to—

Senator SARBANES. Let me finish if I can make the other point.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now let me say something to you. Everyone is entitled to make whatever statements he or she wants to make, Senator, to pose whatever questions, but you don't have a right to examine another Senator. That is not the purpose of these hearings, and I'm not going to engage you simply because you feel like attempting to divert attention from what we're trying to do.

There's a manner and a time in which to raise these questions. If you wish to do it publicly, put them out on the record, but we're going to continue these hearings as best we can. This is your time, so you go ahead and do that. I thought that I had answered the two questions that you put to us. I attempted to explain why we have this problem. We have kept you informed. Now the fact that the argument was postponed, let's check the record. If you don't believe that, then, let Mr. Ben-Veniste call Mr. Olson and ascertain for himself.

I gave you a status report. I can't do any more. Again, we want to bring Mr. Hale in, we want to bring in other witnesses, and I have no purpose whatsoever—for what reason would the Chairman not want to bring Mr. Hale in sooner rather than later? So, again, I attempted to spell it out to you, but you go ahead and you proceed and you make your statements.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, it's quite correct that earlier on you said we were going to get Mr. Hale. We haven't gotten him. No subpoena has been issued for the documents, no subpoena has been issued for Hale to come and provide a deposition, both of which are important steps in this matter.

He's been given immunity by the Independent Counsel. Whether he will assert that before the Committee, I don't know, but I am strongly inclined to believe that the only way we're going to find out is by issuing a subpoena for him to come before the Committee. In the meantime, there's no reason whatever that I can ascertain why a subpoena for the Hale documents should not have been issued quite some time ago.

That's the situation. We've raised this issue and pressed it repeatedly. No action has been taken. I gather there have been communications by Majority Counsel with Hale's lawyer, and I take it with the Independent Counsel as well in which we have not been involved or included, and I just feel that if it's the intention not to proceed, then I think we ought to know that, but I think that we ought to move ahead and we ought to have a subpoena for the Hale documents and a subpoena for his deposition and then we'll see how Mr. Hale and his attorney react to that request from the Committee. We've been seeking that now for months, literally months, and haven't gotten anywhere with it. I see my time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZHUGH. I want to turn to something we have not covered yet, but it was brought up, I think, by Counsel on the other side, and that has to do with your observation that the legal work on the transaction where you were the purchaser for the Levi Strauss building was all done in-house. Do you remember being asked about that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The deeds, you're referring to the deeds?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes. And I guess your testimony was that to the extent you were involved in some of these transactions, the legal work that was done on the paper was done in-house at the bank; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir, on these deeds, I believe these were prepared in-house by us.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you were not involved, I take it, in the Castle Sewer & Water sale; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I was not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't know anything about the work that was done at the Rose Law Firm in connection with that transaction; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But what you do know is that in general, your experience was that the paperwork on these, moving the property back and forth, was done by people inside the savings and loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I really just have knowledge about this one transaction, and in that case it was done by people inside the savings and loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me see if you know about another set of transactions which are right at the heart of this entire scheme. I want to go back to this issue of the original purchase of the property, and I don't want to quibble with you about this being a straw man or warehouse deal, because I am going to read you your own testimony at page 55 of your deposition, which I think you have before you. Where it says:

Question: And are you aware that during the initial transaction, about $600,000 worth of land or 400 acres went to Madison Financial Corporation, and the other portion of the land, which was acreage north of 145th Street, went to Mr. Ward personally?

Answer: I knew there was a split, and I guess now that you mention it, I do recall it had something to do with the highway. The north went one way and the south went the other. I thought it had to do with the fact that Madison could only have so much money in their service corporation, and they were trying to stay within the guidelines.

Question: So to stay within the guidelines, they set up Mr. Ward as a kind of the purchaser to warehouse the land; is that your recollection?

Answer: I guess that's what happened. I really didn't remember the fact that they split it until you mentioned it right now. I do remember something about that.

So what we have is this. This deal to start out with in October, and it's in the record, it's established up and down and the examiner says Ward is in there as a nominee, a straw man purchaser to make it look on paper to the examiners as if Madison Financial really is only owning part of the property when in reality, economically in terms of the risk, they really are the owner of the whole property.

Part of that deal had to do with getting Seth Ward, who is the straw man, some money or some payoff for agreeing to be in this deal. There's a document dated September 24th, but the evidence developed in the course of these investigations indicates that it was actually backdated and prepared later, that sets forth the agreement between Ward and the bank this whole sham transaction. I want to ask how much of this you know and you were aware of?

It appears that one of those letters, one draft of that letter was prepared around September 24th, inside the bank and typed by Mr. McDougal's secretary. Did you know that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The first time that I knew about the IDC whole picture, I believe it had already taken place, it had already been purchased.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to put up SW1-005. This is the second version of the September 24th agreement. There is evidence which has developed in the investigations and we're going to hear about it in the next few days, that indicates this was prepared later than September 24th. Mr. Ward, in fact, himself testified to that at a trial in Arkansas under oath, that it was backdated. Have you ever seen this document?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The one you just handed me?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This document, the evidence indicates, was typed in the Rose Law Firm. Can you explain why they would have taken this document relating to the agreement between the straw man and the bank and had that typed at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that as Mr. Ward continued on in his part in this transaction, getting rid of property, starting to sell the property off, as he did with your property, exactly the same thing but which he did with other parcels, did you know there came a time that he was involved in an option agreement with Madison Financial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that this option involved the possibility of purchasing by Madison Financial a certain piece of this property within this entire set of land? Did you know about that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Who was going—who had the option to purchase?

Mr. CHERTOFF. That the bank was going to pay for an option to purchase back from Ward some of this land which Ward originally took as a straw man. Did you know about that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, no, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that that option was prepared not by any of the bank's inside lawyers?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I don't know—I haven't seen the option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you asked as an attorney at the bank to work on any option involving the repurchase from Ward of property by Madison Financial?

Mr. FITZHUGH. My repurchase?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No. Were you asked as an attorney at the bank to work on drafting an option that would allow Madison Financial to repurchase some of Ward's property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to give it to you, let's put it up. It's PLS 3774. This option which you're going to look at we now know, due to billing records as well as a notation on the document, was prepared by Hillary Clinton. Did you know she was working on any part of this, any element of this deal involving IDC?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I had no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know why, of all the documents that you have told us to your understanding, you know, the documents you were involved in preparing at the bank, do you know why Mr. McDougal went outside the bank and went to Mrs. Clinton to have her prepare this option document?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you think of any reason based on your bird's-eye view inside that savings and loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Why McDougal would have wanted someone outside of the bank to prepare an option agreement?

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in particular why he went to Hillary Clinton to have her draft that option agreement?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I don't know why he would pick Hillary as opposed to someone else, and I guess he either didn't want us to know about it or thought we were incapable of doing it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me go back to something else, Mr. Fitzhugh, because for some reason if there's any doubt in anybody's mind about the activities of what went on in this bank, I think we ought to be clear about it.

I understand you came into the bank in 1985 not knowing what you would find there, but you would agree with me that as of February 1986, when you learned about that weekend where they were—people from the bank were in the savings and loan, making up appraisals, putting documents in the file, by then you understood there was something phony about how this savings and loan was being operated?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was after you had the experience of having someone come to you in the savings and loan and ask you to sign a recourse note for your purchase of the property to put in the file in place of the nonrecourse note; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that the reason for this was because they wanted to show the examiners or fool the examiners into believing your purchase and your loan was a recourse loan where you were personally liable rather than a nonrecourse loan?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, at some point, yes, I put the whole picture together and I figured out what they were doing, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the point of having you sign this document was to fool the examiners about the actual condition of what had gone on with respect to the sale of this piece of property?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe their intent in having me sign that note would be so that the examiners would look at the file and think it was a recourse note as opposed to a nonrecourse. I believe that was the whole point in having me sign a different note.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You also know that you're not the only person who had one of these transactions, one of these sales with the savings and loan where essentially Madison put up the money or lent the money to allow an insider to buy the property so that it would be moved off the books of Madison Financial and would appear to be held in someone else's hands? You know there were others; is that right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I know there were others but I don't know the details as far as whether they were recourse or nonrecourse. I know there were other sales.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You know Larry Kuca had a deal very similar to yours?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe his took place right before mine.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was the same kind of deal you had with respect to the Levi Strauss building; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I do not know if his is recourse or nonrecourse, but other than that, I believe it's pretty much the same deal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Finally, Mr. Nash, I want to get to you and this conversation you had with Mr. Lindsey just this past Thanksgiving.

Mr. NASH. May I make a statement? I want to clarify something if I could. Someone said earlier that there were two telephone conversations. The second conversation I had with Mr. Lindsey was in person, in person at the White House when I was working there, not a telephone conversation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK, well, I didn't know that, so then in that case I want to make sure that we don't miss anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask Counsel to suspend because I think you're going to take some time and the little yellow light is on, so rather than to get into one of these things that my time is up, we'll go to Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, how long do you intend to continue with this panel?

The CHAIRMAN. I think probably another 10 minutes or so.

Senator SARBANES. Then what's the Chairman's intention?

The CHAIRMAN. Then I would like to get the other panel started before we take a short break, and I think we will take a break about 2:30 p.m.

Senator SARBANES. Why don't we break in between the panels?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you know something, Senator?

Senator SARBANES. All right. We will do it your way, fine, fine.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, you can't have it two ways. You can't at one time say we are dragging it out, we are not moving, and then at the other time, suggest that we do this. Now, we are going to keep pushing.

Senator SARBANES. Fine, then we will continue straight through.

The CHAIRMAN. Again let me say, I'm attempting to do the work of the Committee. I would note that we could move it much faster, we could have had some of our Members answer their questions, they may have gone another 2 or 3 minutes instead of having to come back and have them lay the groundwork again, but the Senator insists on certain rules and we are going to comply with them.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I yield our time.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, this meeting at the White House, this second conversation with Mr. Lindsey, how did this start? He came to your office?

Mr. NASH. No, we were, I think, in a hall in the White House.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he say to you?

Mr. NASH. He said, do you remember my asking you a question about whether Clinton, Governor Clinton at that time, was in a meeting or visited with Jim McDougal in a trailer?

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you say?

Mr. NASH. I said, yes, I remember you asking me that question.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he say?

Mr. NASH. He didn't say anything like OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This occurred either right before or right after Thanksgiving?

Mr. NASH. I remember it was in that neighborhood, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know if it was after he had testified at a deposition here on November 21 of last year about this meeting?

Mr. NASH. I do not know whether it was before or after that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that he said in the deposition that he didn't know whether his first call with you in 1993 had been at his instigation or at your instigation?

Mr. NASH. No, I do not know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But what you do know is that that call in 1993 came from Mr. Lindsey?

Mr. NASH. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It wasn't you calling Mr. Lindsey in 1993, about this meeting at the trailer, it was Mr. Lindsey calling you?

Mr. NASH. That's what I remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The reason this is important, and the reason it was brought up at the deposition last November, is because that naturally raises the question about—one of the questions—I don't want to be cagey with you. Obviously here is a meeting which you have described to us as pleasantries, and yet, for a meeting that, as we hear it from you, is the most casual kind of meeting, albeit a meeting that occurs after the people in the car have to find the trailer, there is a lot of attention being focused on it. In 1993, out of the blue—and to my knowledge, it didn't just appear in the press or anything—Mr. Lindsey calls you; and naturally the question would arise, why was it memorable enough to somebody to have Mr. Lindsey reach out for you and ask you about the meeting.

Now, we have established through your testimony, you have been firm on this, it is not that you remembered this and called Mr. Lindsey, it is that Mr. Lindsey had some reason to call you about it; and that's logical.

There were only four people who were in that meeting. There is the trooper, who actually didn't even come into the meeting. There is Mr. McDougal, who in 1993, as far as we know, is not a person who is in and out of the White House. There is you, and you didn't bring the subject up. And there is, of course, Mr. Clinton who was at the meeting. So the question would have arisen, maybe the secretary—but the secretary is not at the White House either—so naturally the question arises whether the President somehow had a memory of this meeting and directed Mr. Lindsey to find out what you remembered about it. Can you shed any light on that?

Mr. NASH. I have no idea. I do know that it was not an unusual occurrence for the Governor to stop—an unscheduled stop—at a farmer's shed, a grocery store, a restaurant to stop and chat with people. That was a normal occurrence for him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. On the way?

Mr. NASH. Pardon?

Mr. CHERTOFF. While he was—

Mr. NASH. On the way or coming back.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But in this case, to be quite precise about this, this trailer wasn't on the highway. You all had to get off the road and specifically go to this trailer?

Mr. NASH. We did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And so Mr. Lindsey gives a deposition about this, it comes up in the deposition, we see the note which apparently must have been his note of his 1993 conversation with you, which he evidently felt was important enough in 1993 to memorialize in a note. If you look at the subject matter of the rest of the note—we can put it up on the Elmo again. It is in the context of a whole series of notes regarding some interesting issues that he kind of is covering together involving the fundraiser, "Something BC set up with Jim McDougal." There is Betsey Wright's telephone number at the top. It says, "Whitewater to Webb, given to Webb 1½ boxes."

Then the next thing in order is he memorializes his 1993 conversation with you, that you were with Bill Clinton when he went to the trailer at 145th Street. And that's why it is so interesting that it comes up again after he is deposed last November.

I am trying to see if there is anything else we can plumb from your memory of what happened 2 months ago, when you saw Mr.—did he stop you in the hall?

Mr. NASH. We ran into each other in the hall. He must have stopped me, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He said do you remember my asking you a couple of years ago about the meeting you had in the trailer with Governor Clinton and McDougal? That's what he said to you?

Mr. NASH. No, I have already stated what he said. You said something about a couple of years? I don't remember it being a couple of years.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's get it straight. In 1993 you had a conversation with Mr. Lindsey about this trailer meeting; right?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now a couple of months ago, in 1995, he brings it up again in the hall; right?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He stops you.

Mr. NASH. I remember him stopping me, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He says to you, what?

Mr. NASH. Do you remember my asking you whether you were at a meeting in a trailer where McDougal was and the Governor was; and I said, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And then he says?

Mr. NASH. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't say why, why are you asking me?

Mr. NASH. Mr. Chertoff, no, I had no need to ask at all.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he ask you anything about that, anything—again, here in 1995, in November, did he ask you again to give him an account of what had happened at that meeting in the trailer?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He just wanted to know whether you remembered his having asked you about this in 1993?

Mr. NASH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Fitzhugh, I just want to go back and address finally this issue about Castle Grande and IDC. There is no doubt in your mind that Castle Grande, what became that development, was a portion of the original tract that was purchased and then split between Madison Financial and Seth Ward; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's always been my understanding.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So Castle Grande was a part of the IDC property; if that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to put up again, so we are clear on this, the check I showed that was made out to you that was your commission, so to speak, for the purchase by you of this Levi Strauss property which was north of 145th Street. Do you recognize this as the actual check that came for the purchase of property, the Levi Strauss building, north of 145th Street; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I recognize my signature on the back, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have no doubt that this is the check that represented this commission for your own purchase; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, all I can say is that's certainly my signature on the back.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Look, please, you are not going to dispute—

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I am not. I have no reason to think it is not, none whatsoever.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It says, "Sale of building C, Castle Grande." When you got this check and you saw that, were you puzzled, did it seem to you—this is a check written November 1, 1985, right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I can't see the date, but that would be about right, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you say what's this about?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I knew what the check was for.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, when we are talking about closing real estates transactions even at an institution like Madison Guaranty, there still is a requirement that people be—are pretty careful about what the checks are for. I mean, this is a $50,000 check. It is important to know, for the record, that the check relates to a commission for a sale of a particular building. You had a particular interest in making sure that that was precise because it was money that was going to come to you and you were going to have to turn over for the downpayment; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't raise a fuss or raise an objection to the characterization on that check for the Levi Strauss building north of 145th Street when it says, "Sale of building C, Castle Grande"?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, I apparently didn't think that was significant.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't have a problem identifying that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I don't have anything more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Did you even notice this item on this check that Mr. Chertoff's been asking about?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I don't know, because it has been 11 years, if I noticed it or not. I certainly knew what the check was for. It could have said for sale of Levi Strauss building, sale of Castle Grande, sale of IDC property. It would have not really made any difference to me.

Senator SARBANES. Now, your understanding at the time—I was just reading your deposition—actually some of this seemed, to me, topical here because at one point a question was put to you. And you said, “I’m confused, too, I am not sure what you are asking me.” Then the questioner said, “I forget my question at this point.”

In your deposition, you stated that this was the IDC property, that’s how you understood it; right? In fact, I think you said, “I don’t think Castle Grande existed when Madison purchased IDC?”

Mr. FITZHUGH. That’s my belief, yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Then Castle Grande was a portion of the IDC property; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That’s correct.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Just a couple of things, Mr. Fitzhugh.

First, when Mr. Chertoff said that the document was typed in the Rose office, the September 24th backdated document, I think we ought to be clear about what the source of that information is so that there will be no misunderstanding. It is my understanding that information comes from Mr. Hubbell’s former secretary who said she identified the similarity in the typeface between the type in that document and what she used on her typewriter at the Rose Law Firm. This is Mr. Hubbell’s secretary. And of course, you would have no reason to have seen that document, as I believe you have testified; is that correct?

Mr. FITZHUGH. That’s correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Second, there was an assumption in the question that was put to you that Mr. McDougal went to Mrs. Clinton to type the option agreement that was prepared in May 1986. I take it you have no personal knowledge of that agreement or its purposes or how it was prepared?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I have no knowledge.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And you have no knowledge, I take it, about who drafted it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But I would like to clarify the record, and this addresses to some extent the Senator from Alaska’s point, with respect to the conclusions of the Pillsbury Report.

I quote from the December 28, 1995 report at page 77, which said, “The only solid evidence tying the Rose Law Firm to this acquisition is evidence of the innocent activity of participating in the drafting of the purchase agreement. While some evidence suggests that Hubbell could have had a role in the drafting of the September 24, 1985 letter between McDougal and Ward”—and I think that’s what Mr. Chertoff was referring to earlier—“nothing proves he did, much less that he did so knowing it to be wrong. Similarly, while Mrs. Clinton seems to have had some role in drafting the May 1, 1986 option”—now this is the conclusion that is reached by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro prior to the discovery of the billing records.

They are assuming in their conclusion that Mrs. Clinton played a role in drafting the option agreement because the document itself has a computer key to it that leads to Mrs. Clinton's then-secretary at the time. So they drew the conclusion or the inference that Mrs. Clinton had a role in the preparation of the option agreement. But they say, similarly, "While Mrs. Clinton seems to have had some role in drafting the May 1, 1986 option, nothing proves she did so knowing it to be wrong, and the theories that tie this option to wrongdoing or to the straw-man arrangements are strained at best." So this is the Pillsbury Report, and again, you have no reason to conclude that their conclusion is erroneous?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No, sir, I have—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You simply have no personal knowledge about this matter at all?

Mr. FITZHUGH. None.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Nash, let me ask you something that troubles me. You have this casual drop-in, it is not unusual for the Governor to drop-in to see constituents at a store, whatever. As you describe it, you don't know who, but you didn't suggest a drop-in at McDougal's trailer; indeed, you didn't even know that he had a trailer there; right?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember suggesting it, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Nash, now wait, I understand you can't have total recall, but we have been over this thing a number of times now. You didn't even know McDougal had a trailer there at that point in time?

Mr. NASH. I knew that there was Maple Creek Farms out in that direction—

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, but you didn't know he had a trailer there?

Mr. NASH. No, sir—

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't know he was there?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I didn't.

The CHAIRMAN. And it wasn't your suggestion?

Mr. NASH. I don't remember it being my suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you never met Mr. McDougal, you didn't know him, did you? You testified before you didn't know him. Now don't attempt to say to us that maybe you suggested that you stopped there?

Mr. NASH. I did not say that I never met Mr. McDougal. I don't remember saying I'd never met him.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you saying there is a possibility that you may have suggested that we stop to see Jim McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, sir. I have on occasion suggested that we stop at different places while we were on trips, which is why I am saying that I do not remember whether I did or not. I would also note Mr. McDougal—

The CHAIRMAN. You are now saying you may have suggested that we stop to see Jim McDougal?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you suggest that you stop to see McDougal? Pardon me?

Mr. NASH. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember suggesting we stop.

The CHAIRMAN. If you had suggested that stop, wouldn't you remember?

Mr. NASH. Well, it has been quite a few years ago, Senator, and I may or may not have.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. So you stopped to see Mr. McDougal and you describe the manner in which you and the Governor go in, and you are talking to him and it was totally casual; is that true?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. No business?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. No business about the Levi Strauss warehouse or factory?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody talks about that?

Mr. NASH. Pardon?

The CHAIRMAN. No one talks about that?

Mr. NASH. No, sir—at this meeting you are referring to?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But at some point, you mention in your deposition, Levi Strauss factory, and then thereafter, and you go on a little bit and you say, well, it was really Levi 501 pants that we were talking about.

Now, you see that chart up there?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. I think it's the red one, Mr. Fitzhugh. The red one, was that the Levi Strauss building?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir, that's it.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the Levi Strauss warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. The warehouse, not the factory.

The CHAIRMAN. When was this?

Mr. FITZHUGH. 1985.

The CHAIRMAN. You had just purchased this facility—right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. October 1985.

The CHAIRMAN. From Mr. McDougal, from the bank?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McDougal, he ran it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean, he ran everything, he was the loan committee, wasn't he?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I—I mean——

The CHAIRMAN. As a practical matter, who ran this place?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I believe Mr. McDougal did.

The CHAIRMAN. He made all the decisions? He was the boss?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who could give you a 10 percent commission on a phony deal like that? I mean, he is the guy that did it? No board of directors approved that?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the same time he came to you and said, hey, this is what we are going to do; and the same day you did it, didn't you?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Within a day or so, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He was the boss. That is the factory, now where is the trailer? The trailer—it is the Levi Strauss warehouse, let's get it, this is the warehouse. Now where is the trailer? It is in pretty close proximity to that, isn't it? Do you remember where the trailer was, Mr. Fitzhugh?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Well, I can't say it is directly across the street from number one, but it is somewhere right along—

The CHAIRMAN. Right in the neighborhood?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Nash, you heard of the transaction that Mr. Fitzhugh had entered into, you have no reason of knowing it back then. Mr. Fitzhugh didn't tell you he had just bought the Levi Strauss facility, did he? Did you know Mr. Fitzhugh then?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So, he didn't tell you about this, did he?

Mr. NASH. He didn't tell me about what, Senator?

The CHAIRMAN. He didn't tell you that there was a sale that was consummated with respect to Levi Strauss?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. No, no. Isn't it strange that right at about the same time that he buys this property, you decide to make a call—not you, the Governor, on Mr. McDougal and the subject of Levi comes up. Now, you see what's tough. It is tough to believe that the Governor would go and you had to find it, it wasn't right there, that trailer, you had to take some time to find it, to do a drop-in, and guess what we discussed? Not the Levi Strauss warehouse which Mr. McDougal had just parked with Mr. Fitzhugh, no. We discussed Levi pants, 501 pants.

Mr. Nash, it is not reasonable. Let me tell you why it is not reasonable to believe it. Because 8 years later, Mr. Lindsey calls you. This meeting is on his mind. He has notes written down. You really expect us to believe that you discussed with the Governor and Mr. McDougal the fact that he wore Levi 501 pants as opposed to discussing the Levi Strauss warehouse? Which he was involved in, up to his ear, and over? I mean—and he just called you.

Now let's go to the phone call. You remember the phone call?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He called you; right?

Mr. NASH. I remember him calling me.

The CHAIRMAN. So Bruce Lindsey called you in 1993, and what did he say?

Mr. NASH. He said, do I remember being in a trailer, McDougal's trailer, when the Governor was there and I was there. And I said, yes, I do remember that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what else did he ask you?

Mr. NASH. He didn't ask me anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. He didn't ask you what you discussed?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He didn't ask you who was there?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He didn't ask you about anything else, he just said to you—what's your first name?

Mr. NASH. Bob, Bobby.

The CHAIRMAN. Bobby. He calls you Bobby?

Mr. NASH. Well, my name—they call me Bob.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, you obviously know Mr. Lindsey, and he calls you up in 1993 and he says to you, Bob, do you remember stopping at a trailer to see Jim McDougal with the Governor in 1985 or thereabouts, and you said, yes. Then he didn't ask you anything else? He didn't ask you who was there? He didn't ask you what you discussed? He didn't ask you anything? Are we supposed to believe that?

Mr. NASH. Pardon?

The CHAIRMAN. Are we supposed to believe that?

Mr. NASH. That is what happened, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. But you do understand why we have difficulty—Mr. Lindsey, he is an important man. He just out of the blue—did he tell you why he called you to find out?

Mr. NASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then 2 years later, 2 years later, he just stops you in the hall on or about Thanksgiving, just so happens he is testifying before this Committee by way of deposition. His notes have been turned over, the note which indicates that he called you. Would it be so maybe you would not say that it was with respect to the Levi factory or warehouse or facility that Mr. McDougal was involved in, and that the Governor was speaking to him, or that Mr. McDougal was speaking to him about that? And then you concoct this thing, as it relates to a pair of Levi pants.

Why would he be interested if you had a meeting to discuss a pair of Levi pants? You see, it doesn't make sense. He would be interested, though, if it was a meeting where the subject of the Levi Strauss facility which Mr. Fitzhugh had purchased had come up. That's what I think, Mr. Nash. As it relates to your testimony and deposition, the inconsistencies in it where you first talk about a Levi factory and, yes, it is a warehouse, we know the factory, you can't see it, as opposed to your finally settling on a recollection that it was about Levi pants. I suggest I have some difficulty with that.

Mr. NASH. My deposition indicates that, in the interchange with the person doing the deposition, that we did talk about it was a certain type of blue jeans, but the meeting was not about blue jeans, it was a casual drop-by.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I understand that. But I say I believe that your initial getting into it with respect to the Levi factory is probably a more accurate account. But that's at least what I think most reasonable people would have to conclude. I think it is absolutely absurd to suggest that the President's assistant would be concerned about a meeting, a casual drop-by, where the subject was Levi pants as opposed to the Levi facility. Isn't it an incredible coincidence? What a coincidence. The Levi jeans and the Levi factory. It is quite inventive, creative.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Well, Mr. Nash, I think we ought to, for your sake, address this assertion just here at the end by the Chairman, that it was quite creative. I don't think that's fair to you, frankly, since the distinction you made was made at your deposition. It is not as though it is a distinction you came up with here today before the Committee.

As I read your deposition, earlier, apparently there had been some confusion. You said I remember a discussion about blue jeans because there is a blue jean factory close. But then later, in the same deposition, you then said, the question was, "Just you have a vague recollection it had to do with this blue jeans plant?" And your answer, "Yes, it had do with blue jeans, not the blue jeans plant." That's what you said at your deposition; right?

Mr. NASH. I remember that, yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. All right. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Fitzhugh, at—

Senator SARBANES. Actually, I don't see why it matters all that much. They could have had discussions about the employment at the Levi Strauss blue jean factory, about whether people were being laid off or being hired on, or anything else of that sort. So I don't really see where the questioning takes you, even if there had been discussions about blue jean factories. But I think for your sake, here before the Committee, it is important to point out this deposition testimony, in lieu of that last comment, and that's why I wanted to underscore it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Whether there was a conversation about the blue jeans that Mr. McDougal was wearing or the factory that was nearby, is there any suggestion, Mr. Fitzhugh, that the Governor of Arkansas was somehow involved in or concerned about the purchase of the Levi warehouse?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have no indication of that whatsoever.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Have you ever read anywhere or heard any assertion that somehow the Governor of Arkansas inserted himself into this transaction, or was interested in some way in it?

Mr. FITZHUGH. Today is the first time there has been any vague insinuation about that that I have ever heard of.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And in terms of any connection between these two events, I will put to Mr. Nash, whether in fact the interest in a meeting in a trailer was not the interest spurred by Mr. Hale, who claimed that he had a meeting with Governor Clinton and Mr. McDougal in a trailer. That's why this whole matter was gone into. And that's why Mr. Gerth was questioning Mr. Lindsey, and Mr. Lindsey was asking you. It had nothing to do with the blue jeans plant or warehouse, or any other such thing.

Mr. NASH. I am not aware of—I have stated already the reasons that we were talking about blue jeans is because I thought he had on, I remember him having on 501 blue jeans.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But in terms of the interest in the meeting, according to Mr. Lindsey's interest in a meeting in a trailer, that was because Mr. Gerth had gotten this allegation from Mr. Hale, who was on the verge of being prosecuted in Little Rock, who claimed to have had a meeting in a trailer with Governor Clinton. That's what all this is about, not whether Mr. Clinton was interested in participating somehow in the transaction involving the sale of this warehouse. I have nothing further to add to this.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Hale wasn't at that meeting, was he, Mr. Nash?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, Mr. Hale was not at that meeting.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Just a couple of minutes, Mr. Fitzhugh, in relation to the last set of questions you were asked by Mr. Ben-Veniste. You have already acknowledged to us when I asked you questions about the option and why Mrs. Clinton was the one who drafted the option that perhaps that was something Mr. McDougal didn't want you to know about, he wanted to take it outside the bank. I take it Mr. McDougal kept a lot of things close to the vest, at least as far as you were able to see; right?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I've found that out since I have left that savings and loan, yes, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you don't want to put yourself in the position here of vouching one way or the other as to what Mr. McDougal had going with Governor Clinton because you don't really know?

Mr. FITZHUGH. I have absolutely no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't know, for example, about Whitewater?

Mr. FITZHUGH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nash, let me ask you, in fairness to you, I want to see if you will agree with me on this point. In your mind, at the time you went to this meeting with the Governor and Mr. McDougal, you didn't know anything about IDC or the Levi Strauss buildings, or any of that stuff; right?

Mr. NASH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't even know about Whitewater?

Mr. NASH. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So, I mean, from your position as a bystander, someone who is literally coming along for the ride on this, it is fair to say that this particular meeting did not assume any great significance in your mind?

Mr. NASH. "Any great significance"?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, this event was not something that was memorable to you or a significant event, this meeting with McDougal and the Governor, back in 1985, 1986?

Mr. NASH. Yes, it's significant in that it was the first time I had visited this trailer or an office where Jim McDougal was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Oh, that was significant to you?

Mr. NASH. Yes, that was the first time I had done that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you telling us now that in 1986, when you went to this trailer, it had some significance to you? You made note of it?

Mr. NASH. I didn't make note of it. My point was it is significant that it was the first time I had visited Jim McDougal's office in this trailer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Had you been at that office in the trailer any other times afterwards?

Mr. NASH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it is the only time you were there?

Mr. NASH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in your mind, the conversation in 1986, to the best of your recollection, is, as you've described it, casual; right?

Mr. NASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But it was significant enough, this event, this meeting, the fact that you and the Governor were together with Mr. McDougal, it was significant enough in someone's mind to lead to Mr. Lindsey calling you about it in 1993; right?

Mr. NASH. Oh, I wouldn't know about anybody else's mind.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. So all we can do is we will ask you for your knowledge of your own mind, but you will agree with me, that in terms of why Mr. Lindsey chose to call you in 1993, why he chose to write a memo down about what you told him about the visit, and why he felt it was again necessary to talk to you about it in 1995, those are matters that you could only speculate about?

Mr. NASH. I am not sure I understand the question, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me make it even more simple. In 1993, it was Bruce Lindsey who felt there was some reason he had to reach out for you to ask you about this trailer meeting; right?

Mr. NASH. He called me in 1993 to ask me was I at the meeting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was Mr. Lindsey who made the decision that your answer to that was important enough to write down in his notes; right?

Mr. NASH. I don't know that, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, you saw the notes. You have no reason to doubt that it is Mr. Lindsey's handwriting, do you?

Mr. NASH. I am not sure I would recognize his handwriting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I will represent to you Mr. Lindsey produced them and identified them as his handwriting. And again, in 1995, it was Mr. Lindsey who came to you and approached you about this issue of this meeting in the trailer; right?

Mr. NASH. It was Mr. Lindsey, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And whatever significance you attribute to this in your own mind, you don't really know the significance it had in Mr. Lindsey's mind or whoever asked Mr. Lindsey to reach out for you on any of these occasions; right?

Mr. NASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I observed when Mr. Lindsey was here, he testified those notes were made in the course of responding to and preparing for press inquiries about the allegations that Hale was making, and he went through a process of trying to, as it were, run down the various Hale allegations about Governor Clinton.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senator makes a very valid observation, but I would also indicate that, certainly in 1995, there was reason to question why Mr. Lindsey would once again, it seems to me, approach Mr. Nash.

We have exhausted the various aspects and I want to thank the witnesses for being here. As a matter of fact, I'm sorry that we did not offer to accommodate you with some kind of a small break. We will adjourn until 3 p.m., at which time we will see if we can't finish the witnesses as expeditiously as possible.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I thought you indicated we were going to go straight through.

The CHAIRMAN. I think there are a lot of people here, including the Chairman, who want to take a break.

We stand in recess until 3 p.m.

[Whereupon, the hearing was recessed, to be reconvened at 3 p.m. this same day.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. Starting with Mr. Dover, then Mr. Donovan, and Mr. Thrash, do you have any statement you would like to make or give to the Committee?

SWORN TESTIMONY OF DARRELL D. DOVER
ATTORNEY, HOUSE, WALLACE, NELSON & JEWELL
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

REPRESENTED INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY [IDC]

Mr. DOVER. No, Mr. Chairman.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF RICHARD T. DONOVAN
ATTORNEY, ROSE LAW FIRM, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Mr. DONOVAN. No, Mr. Chairman.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF THOMAS P. THRASH
ATTORNEY, ROSE LAW FIRM, LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Counselor.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Good afternoon.

Mr. Thrash, in 1985 and 1986, you performed some legal services for Madison Guaranty; correct?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At that time you had just become a partner at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. THRASH. I had become a partner in February 1985, yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you performed some legal services for Madison Guaranty in 1985 and 1986; am I correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You were a young associate at that time?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could just put up on the Elmo the Williams to Foster memo. Now, Mr. Thrash, do you know approximately the extent of Rose's billing to Madison in 1985 and 1986?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, do you know?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I don't.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is a memorandum from Mr. David Williams to Mr. Vincent Foster, Jr., dated November 20, 1986, and the "re" is FSLIC Representation, and the memorandum concerns certain representations that the firm had to decline in order to represent FSLIC. On page 3, if I could just read it into the record, it says, "Due to our representation of FSLIC, we have withdrawn from representation of Madison, which had been a previous client of ours generating estimated annual fees to the firm of approximately $40,000." Do you know anything about that, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. About the number?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes, do you know whether that's accurate?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I don't know.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, do you know if that's accurate?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, you were involved in the actual transaction involving the sale of that real estate parcel that's displayed on the map, the 145th Street real estate parcel, or the IDC project?

Mr. THRASH. I had limited involvement in a transaction involving the IDC and Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial, yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you have any recollection, other than from looking at records, of the extent of your work on that project?

Mr. THRASH. I do not, Mr. Giuffra, I do not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now in regard to recording time, you try to be very accurate; am I right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The firm might have some sort of legal liability if you were inaccurate in recording your time?

Mr. THRASH. I try to record my time accurately, Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you also try to record your time accurately?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. With regard to the IDC matter, would you agree, Mr. Thrash, that the Rose Law Firm billing records are the best evidence of the extent of Rose's work on that matter?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, would you agree that the Rose Law Firm billing records are the best evidence of the extent of Rose's work on the IDC matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, I would agree with that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, am I right that the Rose Law Firm has been looking for the billing records that were found at the White House on January 4, 1996, for approximately 2 years?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Giuffra, I am really not certain about that. Mr. Ron Clark, our Chief Operating Officer, would know more about that than I.

Mr. GIUFFRA. OK. These records indicate that Rose represented Madison on the IDC transaction. Do you know whether the Rose Firm represented Mr. Ward in connection with that transaction?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not believe we did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know whether any other firm was involved in representing Madison in connection with the IDC transaction?

Mr. THRASH. You are referring to the acquisition of the IDC property by Madison?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Correct.

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I think—

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was strictly handled by the Rose Law Firm on behalf of Madison?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, I believe I was the attorney, along with Dave Thomas, that may have worked on that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up on the Elmo the Rose Law Firm billing record 29011.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you should have it in your packet. It will be easier for you.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We will be asking a number of questions from the billing records and you can get the identifications down in the lower right-hand corner. The page number is 29011.

The CHAIRMAN. We have some additional copies here. Counsel, why don't you take these and we will save some time. Bob, will you be asking Mr. Donovan any questions with respect to this?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes, I will.

The CHAIRMAN. So why don't we see that Mr. Donovan has a copy as well. No, that's Mr. Dover, OK, good, and Mr. Donovan.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, am I correct that this sort of a billing memorandum would set forth the extent of the Rose Firm's work for a particular client, the amount of time billed by each lawyer?

Mr. THRASH. This is a computer-generated report that would reflect the amount of time that was entered by a certain date into our computer system.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, I would observe that, with regard to the IDC matter, the Committee has identified bills for September 29, 1985 and October 30, 1985, but we have not been able to locate the billing memoranda for those bills. Normally, is there a billing memorandum that would go with a bill?

Mr. THRASH. Something similar to what you are showing me here?

Mr. GIUFFRA. No, an invoice, similar to the document that bears Bates number 29010, let's focus on that one.

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Giuffra, 29010 is an invoice that would go to a client.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Then normally, in preparing the invoice that goes to the client, you rely on the billing memorandum; correct?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct, in most situations, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put the billing memorandum back on, which is 29011. This billing memorandum indicates that Mrs. Clinton, between December 6, 1985 and December 24, 1985, had seven phone calls with Seth Ward. Mr. Thrash, do you know Seth Ward?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, I know who he is.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Who is Seth Ward?

Mr. THRASH. Seth Ward was the father-in-law of Webster Hubbell. He was also a representative of Madison Financial Corporation, I believe, or an employee.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In connection with this IDC transaction?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you have any idea as to why Mrs. Clinton was speaking to Mr. Ward?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not. My involvement would have ceased approximately on October 8th, I believe, or October 7th, somewhere in there.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, do you have any idea why Mrs. Clinton was having telephone conferences with Mr. Ward?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, I don't know, but—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Also billing for that time?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't know, but it appears the most likely reason was that she was talking with Mr. Ward about the possibility of constructing a brewery on the IDC property because it leads up to my research on that issue, which began, as I see from the billing memo, on 12/30/85.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Dover, if I could call your attention, there is a phone call at 12/6/85, for a little less than a third of an hour, involving yourself, and then there is another call on the 10th for about a half-hour, and there is a conference with D. Dover. Do you know why you might have been speaking to Mrs. Clinton on 12/6 or 12/10/1985?

Mr. DOVER. No, I don't. The transaction closed, I believe, on October 4th or 5th of that year.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall that those calls covered anything to do with a brewery?

Mr. DOVER. Oh, no, I don't think so. Frankly, I don't ever remember talking with Mrs. Clinton on this transaction. I talked with Mr. Thrash a number of times, but I really don't recall talking to Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you have no reason to dispute the accuracy of these billing records?

Mr. DOVER. Except that I don't recall it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you can't be absolutely certain as to why Mrs. Clinton was speaking to Mr. Ward because you weren't on the telephone calls?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, there is a time summary entry on the bottom of the bill, and there is an entry where it says, "amount to bill," and Mrs. Clinton's amount to bill is $2,700—$2,731.25. Do you see that?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The standard value which is based on her hourly rate at 7.30 hours comes out to $912 and the increase is exactly $1,118.75, which is triple.

Now, Mr. Clark testified, when he was here, your managing partner, he thought this might reflect additional work that Mrs. Clinton had done on this matter. Would that be your best estimate as to what this additional time would reflect?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, that would be consistent with the billing memorandum that you have here and the timing of it. At this point in time, this is a January 21st billing memorandum, at this point in time, our year end, our fiscal year end is January 31st. We try to get all our bills out by that time and get them paid. And we are trying to get all our time in.

A lot of times we will put time down and it will not be in the computer and we will try to get that out, and put in it a bill. Once you put it in a bill, you wouldn't want to go back and put it on the computer because then you would have two time entries, and you would have billed for it twice. So this might be time she had that had not gotten into the billing memorandum yet.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now the simple math would be that Mrs. Clinton appears to have billed for approximately 14.5 hours at her rate of $125 and that gets you to $1,818. So there would be an additional 14 hours in addition to the 7.30 hours for a total of approximately 21½, 22 hours of work on this January bill. Does that seem correct to you, sir?

Mr. THRASH. I haven't done your math, but I wouldn't dispute it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up the summary chart we prepared for the January 30, 1986 IDC bill on the Elmo. Now this summary chart reflects, going across the top, Mrs. Clinton's time at standard value which would be 7.3 hours at $125 an hour gets you to $912.50. Then this additional $1,818 gets you another 14 hours for a total of approximately 22 hours. And then Mr. Clark testified that the September and October bills were folded into the January bill to get a total of $4,651 which was the amount of the actual bill.

If we could put up on the Elmo the next chart which we prepared and it is a summary of Mrs. Clinton's IDC billings. What we have done here is we have added up Mrs. Clinton's time for the IDC matter. We have included, across the right-hand side, it says, "account billed." There are a number of instances in which Mrs. Clinton billed for telephone calls with Mr. Ward, and billed the time to either the general account, the stock offering account, or the limited partnership account—IDC partnership account.

For example, on May 1, 1986, Mrs. Clinton billed 2 hours, and her billing entries reflect work on an option agreement and a teleconference with Mr. Ward. And we now know that that option agreement had to do with IDC.

Now in terms of the actual time that Mrs. Clinton had worked on this matter, in terms of hours that we can account for, we have identified 15 hours, for which she billed $1,956. Then there is this unknown category of 14.5 hours for which Mrs. Clinton billed $1,818.75. Do you see that? For a total of 29.5 hours of work by Mrs. Clinton related to IDC?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Giuffra, which document are you referring to? Yes, sir, I see that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't know the nature of the work that Mrs. Clinton performed for this 14.5 hours; right?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't know when she might have billed that time, other than to guess it might have happened sometime prior to the end of your fiscal year in January 1986?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put the next chart on the Elmo. Do you have this it is entitled, "Rose Law Firm IDC Billings"?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I have it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, is it your understanding that you billed approximately 12.4 hours to the IDC matter?

Senator SARBANES. Could I ask whose document this is?

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is something, Senator, we prepared based on documents that we've received.

Senator SARBANES. It is a document prepared by Majority staff?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. OK.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, you billed 12.4 hours on IDC; is that your best estimate?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you billed 22.7 hours, is that your best estimate?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Your billing rate in 1986 was what, $65 an hour?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sounds right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So the total amount that would have been billed to you would have been $1,475.50; is that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. That sounds correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, what was your billing rate in 1985?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Giuffra, I don't recall.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Approximately $90 an hour?

Mr. THRASH. If you have taken that from the documents, I would not dispute that, but I don't recall.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This document indicates that Mrs. Clinton billed 29.5 hours and that she was responsible for more than 50 percent of the total Rose billings with respect to the IDC matter. Mr. Thrash, do you have any reason to dispute that calculation?

Mr. THRASH. When you are referring to the 52 percent, you are referring to the dollar amount, not the hours worked; correct?

Mr. GIUFFRA. You have no reason to dispute the figures that we have compiled from the firm's billing records which are reflected in this document?

Mr. THRASH. I haven't check it. I know my hours are correct on here.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, are your hours correct as well?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You joined Rose as an associate in 1983, and you became a partner in 1989; correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In 1985 and 1986, you were the only associate in the litigation department?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think that's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you were often asked to do discreet research projects?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In 1985 and 1986, you did some discreet research for Mrs. Clinton related to Madison?

Mr. DONOVAN. I did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you have any recollection of this research until you saw the actual memos that you had prepared?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I did not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Is it normally the case in your experience that an associate will bill far more time in preparing a legal research memorandum than the partner on the matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, not necessarily. I don't think that's a general statement that I would agree with.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Excuse me?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I don't agree with that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So you would say sometimes the partner will spend more time than the associate with regard to the preparation of the legal memorandum?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I am saying with regard to a matter, particularly when an associate is doing discreet research, it is not unusual for the partner to have the contact with the client, speaking with the client about what the associate—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Just in terms of preparing the legal memorandum that you would send to the client, normally the associate would do the bulk of the work; isn't that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's probably a fair statement.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And the partner will spend less time, just sort of reviewing the memo and making sure it is up to snuff?

Mr. DONOVAN. Maybe.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up Mrs. Clinton's Supplemental Interrogatory by the RTC. This will be her answer to number 64. Let's focus on pages 12 and 13 of the interrogatories. The question had to do with Madison Guaranty matter No. 5, and the interrogator asks Mrs. Clinton to "Describe the work you performed with respect to Madison Guaranty matter No. 5." Mr. Thrash, matter No. 5 was the IDC project; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mrs. Clinton in her interrogatory states in part: "I believe that the work I did on this matter consisted primarily of supervising research concerning legal issues, such as whether it would be legal to open a tasting room for a proposed brewery, in light of the fact that the land was, arguably, located in what had once been a 'dry' township, and other questions relating to the provision of water and sewer service by a utility which was located within the IDC property."

Mr. DONOVAN, we have identified four memos that you prepared for Mrs. Clinton relating to Madison Guaranty and we will go through them on the second round. There was a January 3, 1986 memo and a January 23, 1986 memo on the brewery issue. Then there were two other memos, one February 17 and one March 4, 1986, on the so-called utility issue. Do you recall those memos?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now the Rose Firm billing records that we have obtained don't reflect time by Mrs. Clinton, doing legal research in connection with those memos. Are you aware of whether she did any legal research in connection with those memos?

Mr. DONOVAN. I am not aware of any.

Mr. GIUFFRA. They do not reflect that Mrs. Clinton spent time drafting the memos or revising the memos. Do you recall whether she spent time drafting or revising the memos?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Giuffra, I do not recall that. The time records would be the best—

Mr. GIUFFRA. The best way to figure out what Mrs. Clinton did?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think so.

Mr. GIUFFRA. As best we can tell, Mrs. Clinton spent several hours reviewing your memos and in terms of meeting with clients that can be directly traced to the memos, and that's about all we can find. Now if she did 29.35 hours of work, you don't know what the other 27½ hours of work involved, do you?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think they are set forth in the billing records.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But, for example, you billed 22.7 hours on this legal research, yet Mrs. Clinton, at least according to the Rose Law Firm billing records, billed 29.5 hours on Madison matters relating to IDC. Do you have any explanation for the difference between the fact that you billed less time than Mrs. Clinton did, yet Mrs. Clinton's interrogatory indicates that what she did was mostly related to the legal research that you were involved in?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, as I said before, it is not unusual when an associate does research for a partner, for the partner to have the contact with the client. I notice that she says in her response to her interrogatory that she conferred with Mr. Ward on several occasions, who was an employee of the client at that time. And so that is not unusual to me at all.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would it have been normal for Mrs. Clinton to have spent 27 hours conferring with Mr. Ward about a legal research memorandum that you had prepared?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't see that as being out of the ordinary, no, I don't. I mean, I think she's had—clearly she had all kinds of conversations with him, he was employed by the client and she had to speak with him about the legal research, so no.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, Mr. Ward, in various statements that he has submitted to various investigatory bodies in connection with this matter has indicated that he never spoke with Mrs. Clinton with regard to the brewery issue. So do you have any other explanation for how Mrs. Clinton might have spent her time with regard to the IDC matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, like I said, I think the billing records speak for themselves and I think she, apparently from the billing records, had spent time, not only reviewing my research, having meetings with me, but also speaking with the client, so I think the records probably speak for themselves in that regard.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why don't we just quickly put on the Elmo your January 3rd memo. This is a short, one-page memo that you wrote to Mrs. Clinton regarding this issue of the brewery. And if we could put up again the Rose billing record 29011.

In just trying to piece this together, it indicates that on January 2nd, you billed 3 hours to the so-called wet/dry issue, and then on December 30th and 31st, you billed another hour and a half, both days, to that issue. Then on the 14th, you spoke with Mrs. Clinton, at least according to your records, for a quarter of an hour; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, Mrs. Clinton, on the same day, bills an hour of time for a conference with J. Birch, K. Shemin, and R. Donovan. Do you see that?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Were Birch and Shemin involved in the brewery issue as far as you know?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Giuffra, I don't recall much, if anything, about this research, other than looking at the memos, these many years afterwards. And it appears from the billing records that they were, so I don't—

Mr. GIUFFRA. But they don't bill any time to the matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, that's not unusual if—for instance, if an attorney is called in to ask a question or two, to have a conference with that attorney and he is not involved in the day-to-day activities of that matter, for him not to record his time while the attorney who is in charge of that matter would record his or her time.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Is it possible that Mrs. Clinton had separate meetings with Mr. Birch and Mr. Sheman? Is that why, for example, you are only billing a quarter of an hour and she is billing an hour?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes. Sure.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up the February 7, 1986 memo from Mr. McDougal to Mr. Tucker which indicates that, "Attached is a legal opinion that Seth got from his attorney." Now as far as you knew, it appears, at least from this memo, that Mr. McDougal thought that Rose was representing Mr. Ward. Is that consistent with your understanding?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, Mr. Ward was not our client in this matter, Madison Guaranty was. And certainly I don't know what Mr. McDougal was thinking, but he paid our bills for that work.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put on the Elmo the note of Mrs. Clinton to Mr. Donovan. This appears to be a handwritten note in which Mrs.

Clinton indicates that, "I visited with Seth Ward and gave him a copy of your memo, and with Ken Shemin. Please see Ken about a strategy to approach the ABC to argue the 'dissolved township' theory. Thanks, Hillary. Charge Madison Guaranty IDC." Now, you never spoke to Mr. Ward in connection with this matter; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't recall it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put the February 17 memo on the Elmo. This is the memo you prepared, this is a rather long memo, 12 pages, and the research has to do with the sale of water by the utility that was located on the property, something that's known as Castle Sewer & Water, outside of the project; is that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't believe that I referred to it as Castle Sewer & Water.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But we now know that's the name of the utility?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not know at the time I wrote this memo whether or not that was the name of the utility. I understand that, at some point in time, that was the name of the utility that was out there, but at the time I really don't know.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know whether Mrs. Clinton had any role in preparing this particular memo?

Mr. DONOVAN. No. She reviewed the work, but I don't know—

Mr. GIUFFRA. But the drafting would have been done by you and the research?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up Rose billing record 29013. This billing record indicates that on February 11, 12, and 13, you had billed time to prepare this memo, and there is no indication that Mrs. Clinton did any work in connection with preparing this memo.

If we could put up another record which is 29016. Again, you bill 1.25 hours in connection with the memo, but there is no time that Mrs. Clinton is billing with regard to this memo.

Now if we could put up the March 4 memo that was prepared by Mr. Donovan. This is also on the same sewer issue. This is a 4-page memo. You have seen this before?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall Mrs. Clinton being heavily involved in preparing this particular memo?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I don't recall her being involved in the preparation of the memo. We discussed it, I am sure we discussed it. I'm sure she reviewed the work.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put Rose billing record 29016. This billing record indicates that on March 4, you billed 3 hours to prepare this 4-page memo, dated March 4, same day?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Then Mrs. Clinton on, it appears to be, March 10th, bills .30 of an hour, a little bit over 15 minutes, to review the memo; is that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So when you actually go through the memos and you try to trace Mrs. Clinton's billings, it doesn't appear Mrs. Clinton was very involved in the actual drafting, minimal time reviewing the memos, but no time in either doing research or drafting of these memos?

Mr. DONOVAN. Like I said, I think that the billing records are the best record of what she did and did not do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. It also indicates that conversations with the clients that Mrs. Clinton had were all in December and January, and not in the later period, when you were doing most of your work; isn't that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't know, Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you prepared the memos subsequent to the time Mrs. Clinton was having the conversations with Seth Ward?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, I don't know that. If the billing records show that, the billing records would be the best evidence of that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me start with an issue that has come and gone and come and gone and I am pleased that it has been addressed at least in the questioning, in terms of consistency with the records. And that is, what the attorneys at the Rose Firm referred to when they were referring to this piece of property that was the subject of this research. Mr. Donovan, how was it referred to?

Mr. DONOVAN. IDC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Thrash, how was it referred to when you were involved in the matters that you have testified about?

Mr. THRASH. It was referred to as IDC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Dover, how was it referred to by you in connection with all aspects relating to the sale of the property to Madison?

Mr. DOVER. IDC stands for Industrial Development Company, which was a client of my law firm, and I was representing Industrial Development Company, or IDC, as the seller. In my shop, I referred to it as Little Rock South District because it was the second industrial district that that particular client had set up.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And it made perfect sense, so far as you were concerned, for the people on the other side of the transaction, in referring to the matter, refer to the name of the company that owned the parcel?

Mr. DOVER. Sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At any time, Mr. Donovan, Mr. Thrash, was this parcel referred to within the Rose Law Firm as Castle Grande?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir.

Mr. THRASH. Not to my knowledge. The first time that I heard of Castle Grande was in the media reports, probably during the campaign.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So now we have heard the testimony of Mr. Massey, Mr. Clark, you, Mr. Donovan, and you, Mr. Thrash, that no one at the Rose Law Firm, to the best of your knowledge, referred to this matter as Castle Grande.

Let me turn to a piece of old business that is referred to in your letter to this Committee, to Chairman D'Amato and Ranking Member Sarbanes, dated January 31, 1996, wherein you make reference to a letter from Mr. Clark to the Committee. But it makes reference to a document which the Chairman referred to and I think the confusion that resulted from that document—and let's put it up on the Elmo so we know what we are talking about. It does not appear to have a Bates stamp number, but it has voucher 4391 on the top of it.

Now apparently, according to the letter that we have received from you, this document which the Chairman, in his questioning, made reference to, has the initials CG on it, which could well refer to Castle Grande. However, as you point out in your letter today, this is not a document which was made or maintained by the Rose Law Firm; is that correct, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that apparently what has occurred is that a Rose Law Firm document was superimposed or rather, this document was superimposed on top after a Rose Law Firm document and turned over by the RTC to us as being a Rose Law Firm document. Is that your understanding of what likely occurred?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, Mr. Ben-Veniste. What appears—this voucher is an internal Madison Guaranty document and they stapled it to a Rose Law Firm bill. And I think you can see the staple mark on top, and then it was simply placed on the Xerox machine and copied like that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's put up the other version of this. We have the clean version of it here. The other version that we were working from, I think, has underneath, the bottom part of the Rose document that you can see underneath. And it would appear that this was all one document, whereas, as you say, it appears that a photocopy was made, superimposing this internal Madison document on top of a Rose document?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And therefore, it was somewhat confusing and the implication was that the document we were looking at was prepared by the Rose Law Firm; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that now looking at it, you can testify under oath that this is not something which was prepared by the Rose Law Firm and therefore the reference to CG, insofar as that may allude to Castle Grande, was not your reference?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now similarly, with respect to the way your billing records were kept and your memoranda, and we can go through this to some extent, you referred to this matter as the IDC matter; is that correct, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And is that correct, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Dover, perhaps you can answer a preliminary question—and please don't take offense by the asking of the question—but was there any chicanery involved or any fraud or misrepresentation, to the best of your knowledge, involved in the acquisition of this property from your client?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That is not to suggest there is any evidence anywhere to so suggest, but I wanted to give you the benefit of responding to that question, and clarifying the record as we—

Mr. DOVER. Let's be clear. Are you talking about chicanery on the part of the purchaser?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That's right, in connection with the purchase price which was, I take it, set on the basis of an arms-length negotiation?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, sir, that was very hotly debated and negotiated.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There isn't any question but that the purchase price for this property was resolved as the result of a bona fide arms-length negotiation?

Mr. DOVER. Beyond any question. I see a statement I had given to a RTC examiner is in the file, and it alludes to the fact that this was sort of a three-cornered transaction, which I think probably added to the arms-lengthiness, because IDC, Industrial Development Company, was very much in debt to the downtown Little Rock banks. They had a role in approving the sales price because this was the largest asset that IDC had left to pay those banks, and they were very much interested in what that sales price was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. These are financial institutions, again so that we are clear, separate and apart from Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. DOVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. So when you say a three-part transaction, your clients—lenders were very interested in your client maximizing the amount that he could or it could obtain as a result of the sale of this parcel?

Mr. DOVER. Absolutely, because that was going to be their principal source of payment, just about their total source of payment, and they were looking at a situation where they weren't going to come out on the thing.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now in terms of your response earlier to the question that was put to you about whether a reference in a billing record maintained by the Rose Law Firm about Mrs. Clinton's contacts refreshed your recollection, I take it it is your position that, 11 years or so after the fact, that this reference does not refresh your recollection as to whether you had such a conversation?

Mr. DOVER. That's true, it does not. I have no present recollection of that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You will not simply satisfy someone's interest in having you give an affirmative answer, provide an affirmative answer if you did not have a recollection?

Mr. DOVER. In other words, your question is would I say I had a recollection when I didn't, the answer is I would not say I had a recollection when I didn't.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me turn back now to the gentleman from the Rose Law Firm. With respect to the so-called wet/dry issue, Mr. Donovan, is it correct to say that, at the Rose Firm, you were primarily involved in doing the research on that issue?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have a memorandum, Madison Guaranty 000555, which is a memo to Seth Ward from Jim McDougal, dated November 20, 1985. And it talks about essentially a Mr. Bill Lyon relocating a brewery operation on the property that you were referring to as IDC; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. McDougal, in his memorandum, seemed a lot more positive about the possibility of Mr. Lyon moving than Mr. Lyon did when he appeared before this Committee. Mr. Lyon said that he was basically humoring Mr. McDougal at that point because Mr. McDougal was a substantial creditor of his at the savings and loan. And once he heard Mr. McDougal's proposition about who would be responsible for the financing of the project, he, in his own mind, was not interested. But I take it you, on the basis of contact with the client, and Mrs. Clinton, regarded this as a viable possibility, were instructed to do the research on the issue, and complied with that request?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, I think that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Could you explain what the issue was?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes. Where the brewery, which would have a tasting room in it, was to be located was in a township that was wet. However, earlier that township had been—other smaller townships had been included in that township. One of those smaller townships that no longer existed had, at some point in time, voted dry under Arkansas' what we call the local option laws. And the question was, was the fact that the smaller dry township being incorporated into the larger wet township, did it retain its dry status or did it become wet.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you say whether this project of doing this research, which I guess included some historical digging as well as legal research, involved any fraud or chicanery, was this trying to put something over on somebody or defraud somebody out of something?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, it was a very straightforward issue.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, were there any strings pulled with any regulatory agencies or any favors requested, or any such thing done, to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. DONOVAN. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What happened as you progressed with this research?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, I think that—reviewing the memoranda, I came to the conclusion that, first of all, there was no Arkansas law on point and so I went to other jurisdictions and determined that the smaller township would have retained its dry status. There was a minority position, I think, from some State that held the opposite; that is, that the smaller township would lose its dry status when it was incorporated into a wet township.

But my conclusion was that was the minority position; the majority position was it would retain its dry status. And if you wanted to put a brewery with a tasting room there, you had to either convince the ABC, which is the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, to adopt the minority position, or to cause an election to be held in that smaller geographic area that used to be the township to vote to become wet.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you were shown a memorandum, I think, a short memorandum, of one page, "Issue presented in conclusion." Did you prepare a more extensive memorandum on that subject?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, this was—I think that you are referring to the January 3rd memorandum, “Issue presented in conclusion.”

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes. There is more pages to that. This is just the cover—the first page.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Lest there be any confusion, and perhaps I wasn't paying attention, but it seemed like the implication was that this first page was the full extent of your work on the subject. Indeed, and I apologize if I am drawing the wrong inference from what was put in front of you. But I have here 6 additional pages of detailed research and case citations that you provided. And that has been marked document—several different agencies have put their imprimatur on this. But it is 7 pages. The last of which is Rose Law Firm 298.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Does that comport with your document?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, that is the document I have in front of me.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now after you provided that document in January, Mrs. Clinton advised you that she had discussed it with Mr. Ward, according to that note?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If we look at the billing records, we see that most of the telephone conversations with Mr. Ward that are aluded to occurred in December and then again on January 14?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Does that comport with your present recollection that Mrs. Clinton was the person to deal with Mr. Ward?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes. And as I said before, you know, I wasn't privy to these conversations but I believe that they had to do with this issue, particularly if you will look at the entry for Mrs. Clinton on, I think it is December 20th. She says, “Telephone conference with S. Ward, search for map,” which—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Does that refresh your recollection as to a particular—

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, that that would be consistent with their discussion of can we build a brewery there, is it wet, is it dry? The first thing one would do is find a map, what township is located—under Arkansas' local option laws, a entity as small as a township even within a city can vote to become wet or dry. So if you are doing research on this area you have to have a map because you have to figure out where the townships are.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To the best of your knowledge, at the time Mr. Ward was either an officer or employee of Madison?

Mr. DONOVAN. At that time he was, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We know that he is Webb Hubbell's father-in-law, so I take it he was a man in his 60's—well, you tell me how old he was at the time?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would say mid-60's, mid-to-late 60's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Had you met him sometime during all this?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't think I ever met him. I knew who he was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. How old were you at the time?

Mr. DONOVAN. I was much younger. I was in my 20's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were you a partner at this time?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I was an associate.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Being that Mrs. Clinton was a partner in the firm, Mr. Ward was in his 60's at the time, and you were a young associate, did you find it unusual that the client contact between the employee of Madison and the Rose Firm was through a partner of the firm?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, that would have been the standard operating procedure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now that you are a partner in the firm, would that be your operating procedure?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's usually the case.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Out of deference to a client, particularly one of mature years, it would not strike you as being unusual or unreasonable, or in some way untoward, for a partner in the firm to be the one to have the contact with the client?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, not at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Again, by "client," I am referring to Madison through its employee.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Beyond that—and I don't want to appear to be critical in any way of Mr. Ward, I haven't met him. But by reports, he would seem to have been, at that time, a man somewhat set in his ways and somewhat opinionated. Did you have that view or was that a prevailing view at the firm?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, he was brusque.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Thrash, you are smiling. Perhaps you can shed a little light on that.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I think you are correct in your description.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So he could be somewhat brusque or prickly, and again the type of client representative that one would expect a partner would deal with rather than subjecting a young associate to that experience?

Mr. DONOVAN. Thankfully so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So again, that is another reason why it did not strike you as unusual that Mrs. Clinton would be the person talking to Mr. Ward.

Do you know whether, as a result of reviewing these records, these time records, the telephone contact was instigated by Mrs. Clinton or by Mr. Ward?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir, I can't tell that from the records.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Thrash, do you have any view about whether Mr. Ward was the type of person who was hesitant about picking up the phone and asking for a progress report or asking questions?

Mr. THRASH. No, I think he would probably be fairly demanding.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So, for all we know, on the basis of looking at this—and again I recognize this is 11 years ago—most of these, if not all of these, telephone conferences could have been conferences instigated by Mr. Ward on the progress of this matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now in addition to the wet/dry matter, I do want to go into the question of the acquisition of the property itself. And Mr. Thrash, I take it you were the person most knowledgeable about that?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Rather than ask you a series of questions, why don't you lay out in narrative form your recollection of how this matter originated and your involvement.

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Ben-Veniste, my involvement in this transaction was very limited. When I first got involved, I looked at an agreement that Mr. Dover had prepared, I made a few changes on it. I believe I went to an IDC board meeting. This was in early August. I prepared some corporate resolutions that authorized Madison Financial Corporation to purchase the entire tract of property for $1,750,000. That was on August 20th, I believe.

From that point on, I had no further involvement in it until closing. I was not involved in the negotiations of the ultimate agreement that was signed. I was not involved in participating with the Abstract Company and getting that started, and having the Abstract Company commence preparing the title commitments. I was not involved in that. I was not involved in the preparation of the deeds. I was not involved in preparation of the closing documents.

I simply went to closing sometime, I believe, October 4th. Prior to the closing, I did review the title commitment, and then went to closing. And that basically was, in a nutshell, the extent of my involvement in the acquisition.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Again, all of the documents that you saw referred to, other than the technical descriptions of the land, referred to the IDC property?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And specifically not Castle Grande?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have RTC documents 66 and 67, if we could show those to the witnesses and put them up, just to nail down this point. Looking first at RTC 66, which is a memo relating to dated 2/17/86, and again simply for the way that this property was referred to, it is referred to as Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan/IDC; is that correct? That's February 1986.

Mr. DONOVAN. That's my memo, and that is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And with respect to RTC 67, similarly that document, which is now into March 1986, refers to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan/IDC; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ultimately, Mr. Thrash, do you know how many residential lots were ever sold on this IDC property?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not. After the acquisition, I had no further involvement in the development of this property.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. According to the B&H report at page 45, it is our information that a total of 30 residential lots were sold, in total. And that would be a very small fraction, would it not, of the 1,050 acres on IDC?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, it sure would be.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. August 20 to September 30, 1985, are you able to tell, Mr. Thrash, whether you did any work with respect to this matter?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir. I reviewed my time records, and I had no involvement in this transaction from August 20 until September 30, 1985.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the September 3, 1985 letter from Mr. McDougal to Ward, which was summarizing an agreement to divide the IDC property, was not something that was shown to you?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Similarly, the September 12, 1985 Madison Financial Corporation board minutes were not something that you were privy to?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct. I had no involvement in this transaction from August 20 through September 30.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And most importantly, the September 24, 1985 agreement between McDougal and Ward, either the typed version or the handwritten version, you pick them, I take it you were not privy to those as well?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The Pillsbury Madison & Sutro Report, page 79 stated, "The theory that Ward or McDougal wanted to have the Rose Law Firm document the terms that [arguably] make Ward a straw man is hard to reconcile with the fact that in other respects, McDougal and Ward seemed to have resorted to self-help rather than the advice of counsel." Do you agree with that conclusion?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And supporting that conclusion are the documents that I've alluded to, and there are more in that interim time period, that were neither drafted by you or shown to you?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Finally—I see my time is about to expire—is it correct, Mr. Thrash, that the division of the property between Mr. Ward and Madison Bank/McDougal or Madison Savings & Loan/McDougal was something which was unknown to you at the time, contemporaneously?

Mr. THRASH. I'm not sure I understand your question.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The agreement that Mr. Ward had with Mr. McDougal was not made known to you contemporaneous with the closing?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Nothing further.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a second. I know you are anxious. We are going to recognize Mr. Giuffra for several minutes and then go to Senator Bond.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, in Mrs. Clinton's interrogatory, she indicated that her primary work on the IDC matter was supervising your legal research. Now the billing records indicate that Mrs. Clinton billed 29.5 hours to IDC and there's 14.5 hours that are unaccounted for. You billed 22.7 hours to IDC, which is a little less than 7 hours—Mrs. Clinton billed 7 hours more than you did.

You indicated that one possible explanation for this discrepancy is the fact that Mrs. Clinton was dealing with Mr. Ward and communicating with Mr. Ward with regard to the legal research that you were doing; is that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So you believe that Mrs. Clinton's telephone calls with Mr. Ward had to do with your legal research on the subject that you were researching?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, the subject, and that is—for instance, the proposal to build the brewery on this property, and all the myriad issues that go along with that, not specifically my legal research.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But the issue of the brewery would be your best guess as to the explanation for how Mrs. Clinton spent the 29 hours that she billed to the IDC matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, that along with the utility issue.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But both of those legal research issues would be your best guess as to what Mrs. Clinton did for the 29.5 hours?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would call them the issues. The legal research was part of that matter.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And the conversations with Seth Ward related to the legal research?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, I don't know what it was, but that's my best guess.

Mr. GIUFFRA. OK. We have a copy of an interview that Mr. Ward gave to the RTC IG. I think we gave you a copy of it. Do you have a copy? The date of this interview is September 29, 1994, and if I could just read—and it actually was sworn to by Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward states on page 3, "I have no knowledge of ever discussing at all any issues concerning a brewery, liquor licenses or a question of whether a particular jurisdiction was wet or dry." Does that cause you to rethink your explanation for how Mrs. Clinton spent her time?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, but I still think that is the most logical explanation.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But that's not what Mr. Ward says.

Mr. DONOVAN. Apparently so.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Bond.

Senator BOND. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thrash, you prepared the documents for the closing on the sale of the IDC property on October 4th; is that correct?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator BOND. Who did that?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Dover did. Mr. Dover would have prepared the deeds. Beach Abstract would have prepared the closing statement, the settlement statements.

Senator BOND. Were you involved in that transaction?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I don't recall my involvement, but based upon my billing records and my time, yes, I was at that closing.

Senator BOND. We have the billing records beginning October 18th, but we don't have any of the billing records prior to that time. Do you know what happened to the billing records of the Rose Law Firm for that period?

Mr. THRASH. Well, Senator, you have all of my billing records that show the time that I spent from August 6th in detail per day.

Senator BOND. What we're asking about is the Rose Law Firm—do you have any idea of what happened to the Rose Law Firm records which would show the time billed by all attorneys?

Mr. THRASH. Are you referring to the computer printout?

Senator BOND. The computer printout.

Mr. THRASH. Those are maintained by the firm for a period, I believe, of about 3 years, and then they're destroyed. I would not anticipate those would be available for that period of time. The reason my timesheets were available is simply because I had put them in my closed files and I never destroyed them.

Senator BOND. Did you have any other files on the closing other than your time records in that closed file?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator BOND. At the time of the transfer, Madison Guaranty/Madison Financial was your client?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Senator BOND. Did you know of the regulations limiting the amount of assets that Madison Financial could have involved in any one real estate transaction?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator BOND. Did you know that part of that land was transferred to Seth Ward?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir. At the closing I would have learned that Mr. Ward acquired a portion of that property and Madison Financial acquired a portion of it.

Senator BOND. Did you know that Madison Financial made a loan to Mr. Ward to enable him to acquire that property?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

Senator BOND. Was there another attorney who was representing Madison or Madison Financial?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. I was the attorney representing Madison Financial.

Senator BOND. Do you not have some responsibility to learn, when you go to a closing, whether there is compliance with the regulations in the acquisition of property?

Mr. THRASH. Well, Senator, I think that would depend upon the scope of my engagement with the client. I had not represented savings and loans before, this is my first transaction involving a savings and loan, although I had represented banks in the past. When I represented a bank, I would not go and determine whether—and I would not be expected to determine whether the bank was in compliance with whatever regulations and requirements that would be subject to the bank. I would not do that. So I don't believe I was expected to do that, Senator.

Senator BOND. Was the billing partner in charge of this account Mrs. Clinton at the time, in charge of—

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I would not have known that.

Senator BOND. You were the only one who was doing work for Madison Financial/Madison Guaranty in that operation?

Mr. THRASH. On this particular transaction, I was the only one that did work other than Dave Thomas. Dave Thomas did about 1.2 hours back in August.

Senator BOND. Was it regarded as your client?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Senator BOND. Whose client was it, then?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I did not have a relationship with Madison where they would have called me and asked me to work on this transaction. Someone in our firm would have contacted me and said, would you go handle this or would you work on this. I do not have a recollection of who that was that contacted me.

Senator BOND. When you completed that transaction, would you normally do a memorandum to the billing partner recounting that the matter had been closed?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Senator BOND. You just assume that if the partner in charge doesn't hear back from you, they assume that it has been handled properly?

Mr. THRASH. Well, Senator, I believe I probably was the partner in charge of that IDC transaction. Someone in the firm asked me to work on it. I don't think I was supervised. I think I was the attorney representing Madison Financial in that transaction, and I don't think I was reporting to anyone, at least not based upon my billing records and the documents that I've been able to look at.

Senator BOND. Did you, Mr. Thrash, or you, Mr. Donovan, do any work or have any conversations with Mrs. Clinton about the 1986 option for Seth Ward to Madison Financial? Did you do any work on that transaction?

Mr. DONOVAN. I did not.

Mr. THRASH. I did not, Senator.

Senator BOND. If you were preparing an option for a transaction, would you in the normal course of your work as an attorney have to find out who owned it? In other words, you would have to know who had the title and whether there was a mortgage on it, would you not?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. I don't think you would need to do that, no.

Senator BOND. To prepare an option for real estate?

Mr. THRASH. If a client came in and asked me would you prepare an option on this property, I wouldn't go do a title search to see if the client owned it. I would prepare the option as he requested.

Senator BOND. Mr. Donovan, you didn't have to—would you prepare—make any search of any title?

Mr. DONOVAN. Senator, I am a trial lawyer. If I even dabbled in real estate, it would be malpractice waiting to happen. I wouldn't venture an opinion.

Senator BOND. Mr. Dover, you were involved in real estate transactions. If you prepare a real estate transaction document, is it customary to find out who owned the property, who has a mortgage on it?

Mr. DOVER. Senator, I think it would be if you were representing the purchaser. I think maybe Mr. Thrash took your question to be, were you representing the seller would you go behind the seller's own knowledge that he owned the property and go do a title check behind his representation to you that he did own it. If I was representing the purchaser, I would certainly recommend strongly to the client that we find out who owned the property before we paid for an option on it.

Senator BOND. Well, in this instance, the best we can tell, they seemed to be representing both sides. We do not know whether Mr. Ward had any other counsel. Was Rose Law Firm representing both Mr. Ward and Madison Financial?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I don't think so. I would assume we were representing Madison Financial.

Senator BOND. And they would be purchasing property held by Mr. Ward; right? That would be an option to purchase?

Mr. THRASH. That was the option you're referring to?

Senator BOND. Yes.

Mr. THRASH. The option you are referring to, Senator, I believe has a $1,000 option price, and I don't think we would have gone and spent several thousand dollars to determine title on a $1,000 option price. I don't think that would have happened, I really don't.

Senator BOND. Mr. Thrash, if you were the billing partner on the initial transaction, do you have any idea how the responsibility for that account shifted from you to Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I don't believe I was the billing partner.

Senator BOND. You were the responsible—

Mr. THRASH. I was the responsible party but I was not the billing partner.

Senator BOND. Mr. Donovan, you have described to us the legal research you did. Mrs. Clinton was the billing partner, supervised your work, you did memoranda to her and provided her information. It appears that she exercised the customary role of the partner responsible or billing partner. Is that fair?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's fair.

Senator BOND. To try to, as an alternative, to shed some light on this billing, the billing or the standard value was $912 for Mrs. Clinton's time, she billed some $2,700. It looks very possible to me that there was a success fee, or completion fee, or a reward for extraordinary legal talent. It's just about three times the standard value. Did the Rose Law Firm to your knowledge, either of you, include success fees for conclusion of a transaction where the billing partner may not have put in the time but because of the responsibility, the oversight, and perhaps strategies involved, that there would be an enhanced billing? Has the Rose Law Firm ever done that to your knowledge?

Mr. DONOVAN. Not without approval of the client.

Mr. THRASH. I think that would be correct.

Senator BOND. But that is possible; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. I suppose it would be possible if a billing arrangement was approved by the client and with the client's consent.

Senator BOND. Under the practices of the Rose Law Firm, does the collection of or the amount of fees collected by the partner who brings in the billing or is responsible, is that reflected in the partner's compensation in any way?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, we have a compensation scheme that takes into consideration how many fees are brought in the door, but it's much more complicated than that.

Senator BOND. But that is one factor?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's one factor.

Senator BOND. If you bill it out and you get paid, there is a financial reward for the partner who is in charge?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, but in this case that amount would be so minimal as to not affect the percentage of the profits of the firm that Mrs. Clinton would have been entitled to.

Senator BOND. At what point did either of you learn that there were fraudulent transactions or there were sham transactions described in the testimony earlier today by Mr. Fitzhugh regarding this property and the use of straw parties to transfer the property back and forth? When was your first knowledge, Mr. Donovan, and when was yours, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I cannot say that I have acquired that knowledge. I didn't listen to the testimony this morning, and I have not made any conclusions or assumptions, and I don't think I have got to that point, Senator.

Senator BOND. Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. Senator, I don't know that I would buy into that entire characterization. I will say that I became familiar with these transactions later on in the representation of the RTC in the Frost matter.

Senator GRAMS. Senator Bond, your time has expired.

Senator BOND. Thank you.

Senator GRAMS. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me just elaborate on the points that have been made here with respect to the option agreement. In terms of simply drafting an option agreement, Mr. Thrash, one would not expect to do any sort of title search even if there was a substantial amount of compensation involved, until it came time to execute on the option; wouldn't that be fair to say?

Mr. THRASH. It depends on when the option price was paid. If the option price was paid, a substantial option price was paid with the execution of the agreement, then certainly you would want to do some title work there, but if the option price was not paid until you were ready to acquire title, then you would not do so until you acquired title.

Senator SARBANES. The option price here was $1,000; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, that's my recollection.

Senator SARBANES. The suggestion that this various title work should have been done ahead of the option would have cost far more than $1,000; is that correct?

Mr. THRASH. That's possible, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, the parties to the option agreement were both parties that were intimately familiar with the property involved at any event?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct. And title policies had already been issued on the property to those individuals.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now the 6 percent Direct Investment Rule has been something that has been brought up here, not brought up by my friend, so I'll initiate the discussion of that. That is the contention that in order to evade a regulatory limit on the amount of investment a savings and loan chartered in Arkansas could have invested in real estate, that there was the use of Mr. Ward as a straw co-purchaser of this property. That's the allegation that's out there, and there's been considerable discussion about that. What I would like to know from you, Mr. Thrash, is first of all, whether you were cognizant of any 6 percent limitation that existed at the time that the transaction was closed?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I was not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Had you been involved in the representation of Arkansas' chartered savings and loans at any point prior to the closing of the IDC transaction?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I had not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did anyone discuss with you any problems that Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan was having in connection with this 6 percent direct investment limitation?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, not at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you in any way, shape or form in connection with your representation feel that you were facilitating in some way some evasion of Arkansas State Regulations?

Mr. THRASH. Absolutely not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now did you have any conversation with Mr. Massey, who was then an associate of the firm, about any 6 percent limitation or any problem that Madison may have been having with respect thereto?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go back to this wet/dry issue again with you, Mr. Donovan. Mr. Lyon testified that he never agreed to move his brewery to the IDC property. Is that at least consistent with your knowledge in terms of any formal agreement made by Mr. Lyon?

Mr. DONOVAN. I have no knowledge of Mr. Lyon. I didn't even know he was involved in this at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So when the proposition was put to you in terms of the research to be done, it was more or less in hypothetical terms, although one would have expected there would be some basis for the hypothetical question to be asked, since it was costing somebody legal fees to do the work?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure. Oh, sure, sure.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Similarly, the testimony from the Director of the ABC Board, is that a statewide board, the ABC Board in Arkansas or was it at that time?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That is the Board that regulated alcoholic beverages?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Charles Singleton, who was then the Director of the ABC Board, testified that neither the Rose Law Firm nor the Governor's office made any effort to pursue the wet/dry question with the ABC. Do you have any reason to contradict or to think that Mr. Singleton was in error in any way in his testimony on the basis of your connection with this matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. No. As a matter of fact, that's consistent with the records that I have, and my recollection is that I don't recall ever filing any petition with the Board to apply for the—to have them adopt the minority position of the dissolved township theory and to render an opinion that that geographical area was indeed wet.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Never got that far?

Mr. DONOVAN. Never got that far.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So if I can summarize here the work that was done by the Rose Law Firm to your knowledge, Mr. Thrash and Mr. Donovan, it was on legitimate questions that lawyers are called upon to assist clients on that you were not asked to do anything improper, illegal, or untoward, and that you provided legal services to the best of your ability back 11 years ago?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's absolutely correct.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further.

Senator GRAMS. Thank you.

Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Dover, in 1985, you were the primary attorney for the IDC in connection with the sale of this property to Madison Financial; is that correct?

Mr. DOVER. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The IDC Chairman was a man named Brick Lyle?

Mr. DOVER. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And as far as you know, Mr. Lyle negotiated the sale of this property with Mr. Seth Ward?

Mr. DOVER. That's correct. The negotiations were largely between those two.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Was it your understanding that Mr. Ward was acting as an agent for Madison Financial?

Mr. DOVER. I really didn't know what hat he was wearing. He purported to, according to what Mr. Lyle told me. I don't believe I saw Mr. Ward personally until we were at the closing. Most of my information about the transaction—all of my information from the transaction came from the client, Rick Lyle, who would report that he talked with Seth Ward and Seth wanted to do this, that, or the other, and then we would amend the documents accordingly. And always hovering in the background were the banks that had to be reckoned with and had to be paid, and they had some input into the final structure of the transaction.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Was it your understanding, at least initially, that the purchaser of the property would be Madison Financial, with the backing of Madison Guaranty?

Mr. DOVER. I think the very first draft of the instrument—and I have to feel that this came again from Mr. Lyle—I think the very first draft of the instrument specified the purchaser as Madison, the S&L, but specifically said—or its designee or words to that effect—that would give it the right to kind of pick and choose how it was actually going to take the title.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Late in the negotiations, did you learn that part of the property would be deeded to Mr. Ward?

Mr. DOVER. Well, we certainly did by the time of closing because that's the way the deeds were drawn.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know why the transaction was structured so that part of the land was deeded to Mr. Ward?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now the attorneys who represented Madison—Mr. Thrash was the attorney representing Madison; correct?

Mr. DOVER. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The meetings that you attended were with Mr. Thrash of the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. DOVER. I don't know that there were meetings so much as there were maybe some memos or short letters back and forth, transmitting revised drafts of documents and some telephone calls, is my memory.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Was it your recollection that Mr. Thrash attended the closing?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, that's my memory.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now do you recall some unexpected issues at the closing?

Mr. DOVER. Well, there are always unexpected issues at closings. I've been to very few closings that things didn't pop up that hadn't been adequately dealt with or one party had a different recollection of what the agreement was, and, you know, little fires to put out. That's pretty standard for a closing.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But do you remember some unexpected glitch occurring at this particular closing?

Mr. DOVER. I don't remember a particular issue. I remember—my memory is it took us forever to get it closed, so I'm sure there were issues being discussed, is the reason it took so long.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't have a recollection of dealing with Mrs. Clinton in connection with this transaction?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, I don't.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you know Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put that billing record back up, 29011. This billing record indicates that on December 6, 1995, Mrs. Clinton spoke with you and Mr. Ward for .3 of an hour, and then later on December 10th spoke with Mr. Ward and yourself for half an hour. Now by that point the deal had closed. Do you have any explanation for why you would have been speaking to Mrs. Clinton on December 6th and December 10th?

Mr. DOVER. Well, I've said about three times now I don't recall talking to her, so I certainly don't have any idea what I might have talked about had I, in fact, talked to her.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put up another Rose billing record, 29008. Just bear with us for one second. Do you have it now? On November 11, 1985, Mrs. Clinton bills for half an hour for a conference with Seth Ward regarding purchase from Brick Lyle, and do you think it would be correct to assume that this call must have related to the IDC purchase, because Mr. Lyle was the Chairman of IDC?

Mr. DOVER. Well, it seems reasonable. I don't know anything factual about it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I would also observe that on 11/20, 6 days later, Mrs. Clinton speaks to Mr. Ward and Mr. Hubbell, again this time is billed to the general account, not to the IDC account, but the most likely explanation is that this is all related to the IDC transaction, particularly given the reference to a purchase from Brick Lyle. Now am I correct, sir, that IDC ceased to exist after the sale of this property to Madison and Ward?

Mr. DOVER. Well, it ultimately ceased to exist, but it didn't cease to exist immediately following this sale.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall any other work that Rose did after the sale was completed?

Mr. DOVER. That Rose did?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes, as far as you are concerned.

Mr. DOVER. No, I'm not privy to what Rose would have done.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't recall speaking with anyone from Rose about a brewery or utility that was on the property?

Mr. DOVER. After the closing?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes.

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put the August 1985 draft agreement on the Elmo. Mr. Dover, this agreement indicates—did you prepare this first draft, as far as you know?

Mr. DOVER. I think that's probably correct, yes, sir. I have a draft here. It's dated the blank day of August.

Mr. GIUFFRA. 1985.

Mr. DOVER. 1985?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now that appears to be the first draft of the sales agreement.

Mr. DOVER. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you think you prepared this first draft of the sales agreement?

Mr. DOVER. I think that's probably right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, you would agree that Mr. Dover in all likelihood prepared the first draft?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, I think Mr. Dover prepared the first draft of this agreement.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Focusing on the underlined, highlighted provision of the agreement which says, "'Madison' which reference shall include any affiliate of Madison to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder." So the assignment provision in this initial draft is limited to Madison or any affiliate of Madison; is that right, Mr. Dover?

Mr. DOVER. That's the way it reads.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put Rose billing record 28979 on the Elmo. It's useful in looking at the agreements to also compare the billing records. Mr. Thrash, this indicates that on August 6, 1985, you reviewed the contract for sale which would have been this first document that was prepared by Mr. Dover.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. On the 8th you had a telephone call with Mr. Ward and you made some changes in the agreement, and you had a telephone conference on the 9th with Mr. Dover, and then you had some correspondence to all parties. Does that appear to be correct?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now let's put the August 9 letter that Mr. Thrash sent to Mr. Dover on the Elmo. Do you recall sending a revised draft back to Mr. Dover?

Mr. THRASH. Yes. Well, I don't recall but this is the revised draft.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This appears to be a revised draft?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If you could just turn to the second page, does this document appear to have been prepared at the Rose Law Firm, as far as you can tell? The typeface is different than the initial document that Mr. Dover sent to you.

Mr. THRASH. What happened is that—we would have scanned in Mr. Dover's original document, made the changes, blacklined the changes, and sent it back to him.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So this would reflect your changes to Mr. Dover's draft?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could turn just to the second page of the document, there's a little code down on the right hand bottom margin where it says 1627V, and that's a word processing code at the Rose Law Firm, presumably?

Mr. THRASH. I believe that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In this draft which we'll describe as the August 9th draft, again looking to the first page of the agreement, it says again, in terms of the assignment provision, Madison can assign its rights under this agreement to any affiliate of Madison, but that's the only assignment provision that's in the agreement; right?

Mr. THRASH. That's the assignment provision that's on the first page there.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes. Let's put Rose billing record 28979 on the Elmo. Now it appears that on August 19th you had a telephone conference with Mr. Dover and then you also met with Mr. Ward on the 19th, Mr. Thrash. Does that seem correct?

Mr. THRASH. That's what the billing records reflect.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We don't know how much time you billed because we don't have the backup billing memorandum.

Mr. THRASH. I have my backup timesheets to indicate how much time I spent on those.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know how much time you spent on the 19th on the IDC matter?

Mr. THRASH. They're in my billing records, I think 2 hours.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So you would have spent, your best guess is, 2 hours on the 19th on the IDC matter?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, but it's in those billing records, and I believe it is 2 hours.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We have a draft agreement, this is the August 19 draft. Let's put that up on the Elmo. This draft, Mr. Dover, it's got your handwriting on the top?

Mr. DOVER. No, that is not my handwriting. It is my initials and somebody put up there "DDD marked notes," is that what you are reading?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOVER. Some of it is my handwriting throughout the document but that's not my handwriting at the top.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is a draft that you would have marked up?

Mr. DOVER. That's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This doesn't appear to be a draft that was prepared at your law firm, does it?

Mr. DOVER. I'm not that good on typefaces. It looks a whole lot like this first type except—the first draft that you asked me about, except it looks like the type is larger in this one.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Well, maybe Mr. Thrash can help us out.

On the second page of this August 19, 1985 draft on the second page in the lower right-hand corner, we again see this code, 1627V. Do you see that?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So would you estimate that this was probably prepared at the Rose Law Firm, this draft?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now if we just would look at the assignee clause in the first paragraph, it states that, "Madison" which reference shall include any entity or individual to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder." So the assignee clause now includes, previously it had just included Madison or an affiliate, now it includes Madison or any entity or individual that Madison might wish to assign its rights. That's a change that's made in a draft that was prepared at the Rose Law Firm. Does that appear to be correct, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I believe that is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now this is an important provision because this would authorize Madison to assign its rights in the property to Mr. Ward since he was an individual. Couldn't have done that under the prior drafts; correct?

Mr. THRASH. This changes the assignability clause to an individual as opposed to an affiliate of Madison.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So prior to this time you could not have assigned the property to Mr. Ward; right?

Mr. THRASH. Well, it was a cash transaction. I don't think the assignability was really that big of an issue, but Mr. Ward I don't think would have been considered an affiliate.

Mr. GIUFFRA. OK. This change, this August 19th draft is prepared the same day you met with Mr. Ward; isn't that right?

Mr. THRASH. Was it prepared that day?

Mr. GIUFFRA. The draft says across the top August 19th; right?

Mr. THRASH. That appears to be the date on the document.

Mr. GIUFFRA. On the document?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And you met with Mr. Ward on the 19th; correct? That's what your billing records show.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know whether you made this change in the draft after meeting with Mr. Ward?

Mr. THRASH. Counsel, what I think happened is on the 9th I sent a draft agreement over to Mr. Dover which contained the affiliate language. I believe I was getting tied up in other transactions and I asked Dave Thomas to come on and assist me in this transaction. Dave came on, he made some changes, he had several telephone conferences with Mr. Dover, I believe one with Seth Ward. I am speculating a little bit because I don't remember Mr. Ward contacting us, asking us to make this change, but I think that's probably what happened, Mr. Ward asked us to make this change and probably asked Dave Thomas and he made that change.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you.

Senator GRAMS. Thank you, Mr. Giuffra.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Kravitz.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Thank you, Senator Sarbanes.

Mr. Dover, you testified earlier that in your view, the contract for sale between Madison and IDC reached in the fall of 1985 was the result of what you called arm's length negotiation; is that correct?

Mr. DOVER. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. The Committee has information, in fact, that the initial asking price put out there by IDC was $12 million. Is that consistent with your memory?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, I don't have any memory of that number.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Well, the board in the report at page 26 indicates Tucker initially asked $12 million for the property, and I just mention that as corroboration of your testimony previously that a final sale price of under $2 million certainly does seem as if there was some serious arm's length negotiations. And that is consistent with your memory?

Mr. DOVER. My memory is the same as it was a few minutes ago, that this was a hotly negotiated price, a lot of back and forth between Mr. Lyle and between Mr. Ward, with a lot of input by the banks. The banks were as interested as IDC was in getting that purchase price up.

Mr. KRAVITZ. So this certainly was not a situation where a purchase price was inflated artificially; is that right?

Mr. DOVER. Inflated?

Mr. KRAVITZ. Correct.

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Not at all; right?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Let me ask you some questions about the closing itself which occurred in early October 1985. What documents were at play at the closing? What documents changed hands?

Mr. DOVER. The deeds and the money. There were three deeds, as I recall. There was a deed to Mr. Ward and a deed to one of the Madison entities, and both of those were from what we've been referring to as IDC. Then there was a deed from ISC, which was Industrial Services Company. That was a wholly-owned subsidiary of IDC, and I think that deed ran to Mr. Ward.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Mr. Dover, was there anything in any of those documents that changed hands at the closing in early October 1985 which indicated that there was anything fraudulent or untoward about the acquisition?

Mr. DOVER. Well, Counsel, somebody a while ago when asking the question said please don't take offense at this if we imply that you've been guilty of fraud and deceit and crookedness and everything else. I don't know what the intent of your question is. No, sir, I would not have closed a transaction that had fraud written all over it.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I appreciate your comment, and certainly the intent of my question is not to imply that you would have put up with anything that indicated that there was fraud. Actually, to the contrary, what I was trying to establish was that there was nothing in those documents which would have indicated to you or to anyone else that anything fraudulent was going on with this acquisition, and I take it that is fully consistent with your testimony.

Mr. DOVER. Absolutely not, there was nothing.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I'm sorry. Go ahead, Mr. Dover.

Mr. DOVER. There was nothing in any of the documents that indicated we were consummating a fraudulent transaction.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Had there been anything in those documents, you would not have had any part in that transaction; is that correct?

Mr. DOVER. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Mr. Thrash, was there anything in any of those documents that you saw at the time of the closing on October 4, 1985, which indicated to you that there was anything fraudulent or untoward about that transaction?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Was there anything which indicated that Mr. Ward was being used as a so-called straw man in this transaction?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I would have had no knowledge of that, no.

Mr. KRAVITZ. And just to be clear, I think Mr. Ben-Veniste went over this earlier, Mr. Thrash, you had no involvement relating to the IDC acquisition between August 20, 1985 and September 30, 1985; is that correct?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. So did you have any knowledge as of October 4, 1985, of any of the allegedly fraudulent side agreements between Mr. McDougal and Mr. Ward?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Had you had any such knowledge, would you have participated in that acquisition?

Mr. THRASH. Absolutely not.

Mr. KRAVITZ. To your knowledge, did anyone else at the Rose Law Firm have any knowledge of Mr. Ward's being used as a straw man as of the time of the closing in early October 1985?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. You were the person at the Rose Firm working on that matter; correct?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. We heard testimony earlier today from Mr. Davis Fitzhugh, who told the Committee about a transaction that he was involved in following Madison's purchase of the IDC property when Mr. Fitzhugh purchased from Madison the Levi Strauss warehouse. Are you familiar with Mr. Fitzhugh's testimony, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I am not.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Let me just ask you this. Did you have any involvement in the transaction between Mr. Fitzhugh and Madison—

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I'm sorry, but just to be clear, relating to the Levi Strauss warehouse?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

Mr. KRAVITZ. To your knowledge, did anyone at the Rose Law Firm have anything to do with that transaction?

Mr. THRASH. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this, I just point out that the Pillsbury Report at page 53 stated, "The investment in Castle Grande has been questioned on numerous grounds, but most of these have nothing to do with the Rose Law Firm."

And I think that we've established that through the testimony of Mr. Thrash relating both to what happened at the closing and also to the lack of involvement by Rose Law Firm attorneys during the period between late August 1985 and the end of September 1985.

That's all we have. Thank you.

Senator GRAMS. Thank you, Mr. Kravitz.

Senator Murkowski.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you, Senator.

I'm going to ask the gentlemen to respond specifically to the internal activities associated with the Rose Law Firm and how you communicated internally to insure that you didn't have a conflict of interest relative to one lawyer accepting a case where there may be a conflict with another lawyer who is already involved in a commitment on behalf of the law firm. At this particular timeframe, 1984, 1985, 1986, how many lawyers, including the associates, or the partners, were associated with the firm, about, active?

Mr. DONOVAN. Twenty to 30 lawyers at the firm at that time, maybe more than that. I don't know, Senator. I would have to look at a letterhead.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Was there any kind of a monthly meeting or weekly meeting to go over internal affairs within the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. DONOVAN. The firm had and continues to have regular partners meetings that are usually monthly.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What takes place at those meetings in the sense of exchange of information? Is it to discuss potential conflicts or is it to talk about business or salaries or any number of things associated with the normal events of a law practice?

Mr. DONOVAN. It can cover anything. However, on your question with regard to conflicts, we have a conflicts committee, and what essentially happens is this, Senator. Anytime a new client comes into the firm, the partner that brings the client into the firm will do what is called a conflicts check, and he or she will first of all send out a—in those days a paper memorandum, describing the representation of the client and asking if anyone knows of any conflicts. We do it by E-mail now.

Also, there is a computer check. We have a conflicts database, and those names can be run through the computer, and the computer will tell us if it comes up. If another lawyer thinks that there is a conflict, he tells that lawyer so. And if those two lawyers disagree on whether or not there is a conflict which should result in the—

Senator MURKOWSKI. During that timeframe, was this system working?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Were there discussions concerning potential conflicts with Madison S&L?

Mr. DONOVAN. Do you mean in the—in what regard are you talking about?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Potential conflicts of the firm as far as its relationship with representing Madison, representing other aspects associated with Madison's dealings. My question is a general one. Were there discussions involving potential conflicts of interest?

Mr. DONOVAN. I was an associate then, not a partner, but I am sure that when the Madison client came to the firm, that those conflict procedures which I tried to outline to you were followed.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But my question is specific in the sense, do you have any recollection or knowledge of any discussion coming up about potential conflicts associated with Madison?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I do not, but I again was an associate at that time and not a party.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I wonder if your colleague would have any?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I don't remember.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So you don't know either way?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But you were in the firm during that time period 1984, 1985, 1986?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did you keep minutes of your discussions, have a secretary there internally within the Rose Law Firm that highlighted the discussions of the partners and associates during the monthly meeting?

Mr. THRASH. I believe we did, but Senator, at a monthly meeting we wouldn't discuss conflict issues.

Senator MURKOWSKI. When would you discuss confidential things like potential conflicts?

Mr. THRASH. If there was an apparent conflict that one attorney raised regarding the representation of a particular client, then it might go to the conflicts committee, if there was an issue about it, or if the two attorneys couldn't resolve it.

Senator MURKOWSKI. To your knowledge, this matter of Madison didn't go to the conflict committee?

Mr. THRASH. I just don't recall. To my knowledge, no.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You don't know, then?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct, I don't know.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I gather, Mr. Thrash doesn't know either—or excuse me, Mr. Donovan, is that correct, you don't know or you know it didn't?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, I do not know, nor am I aware of any conflict the firm had taking on these Madison matters back in 1985 or 1986.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I didn't ask you if you knew of any. I asked you if any discussion had come up with regard to conflict. Did any discussion come up with regard to Seth Ward and his role in representing Madison? I'm questioning both the lawyers for the firms.

Mr. DONOVAN. In what regard, Senator? I don't understand the question.

Senator MURKOWSKI. In regard to a potential conflict that the firm may have in general terms. We all know what a conflict is.

Mr. DONOVAN. Seth Ward was not a client of the firm—

Senator MURKOWSKI. So the answer is no, then?

Mr. DONOVAN. Seth Ward is not a client of the firm, therefore there would have been no discussion as to whether or not there would have been a conflict in representing Seth Ward at the time.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But he was an agent for Madison as vice president?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You knew him as vice president of what?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think he was Madison Financial, a subsidiary.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And Madison Financial was a subsidiary of Madison S&L?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Could he contract in your opinion as a vice president for Madison S&L?

Mr. DONOVAN. Under general principles of agency, it depends on whether he had the authority. And of course, if he contracted outside that authority, it would depend on whether or not he had the apparent authority, whether that contract would be enforceable.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Whether it was authorizable—Madison—excuse me, Rose, to your knowledge, was not of counsel to either the S&L in any manner or form as corporate counsel or to the area that Seth Ward had a responsibility for Madison investment?

Mr. DONOVAN. We represented Madison in a few discrete matters. We were not their general counsel. They had their own general counsel in Little Rock who dealt with regulatory matters and all other matters.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did the IDC transfer, in other words the eventual movement of properties from IDC to Madison or Ward, come up in your recollection to any issue of potential conflict?

Mr. THRASH. Not that I recall, Senator.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You're aware, of course, of the relationship that Seth has with Hubbell, who was a senior partner in your firm?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You're aware that Ward has been described as kind of a shell in purchasing land from the IDC and Castle Grande and Rose was involved in drafting some of these agreements?

Mr. THRASH. No, Senator, I don't think that's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, I have a copy of the IDC billings here, and these happen to be Mrs. Clinton's IDC billings from November 14, 1985 to June 10, 1986, and it constitutes 29.5 hours of billing for $3,774.75, and it's my understanding that this represents, I don't know if the lawyers have this in front of them, but the indication here is that these were services performed in association with the activities of IDC moving through Madison, funding Seth Ward and Seth reselling those properties. You're suggesting that Rose did not do this?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I'm not sure I followed your question. Mrs. Clinton was not involved in the transaction that I worked on regarding Madison's acquisition of the—

Senator MURKOWSKI. So you don't know anything about these billings that are associated with Madison? Because they were done on behalf of Madison, as I understand it.

Mr. THRASH. The answer to your question is I don't—

Senator MURKOWSKI. It's on the monitor there.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir. I don't have any knowledge regarding what Mrs. Clinton worked on or did not work on, although I do know she did not work on the IDC transaction in which Madison purchased property from IDC.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You have since heard about the allegation that there was a personal drafting of an option agreement to convey 22.5 acres from Seth Ward to Madison and that there's reason to believe at least she had a role in drafting that?

Mr. THRASH. I have heard those statements, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. But you're not aware of that?

Mr. THRASH. I was not involved in that, no, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Are you aware that the examiners told this Committee yesterday that back in 1984 after an examination of Madison S&L, that Madison was put on their alert list because of irregularities and insider transactions and dealings and they were put under a compliance requirement that mandated that Madison report its progress in making these corrections to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board examiners?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I was not aware of that.

Mr. DONOVAN. I was not aware of that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Those kind of things aren't discussed internally within your law firm as you recognize that you have some representation as a law firm representing Madison?

Mr. DONOVAN. Senator, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board Reports of Examination are confidential.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I understand that.

Mr. DONOVAN. We would not be privy to that. We only represented Madison in a few discrete matters. We were not their regulatory counsel. We were not their general counsel. That is not something that the Rose Law Firm would have been privy to, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, I'm not so sure of that, knowing the general relationship of law firms on behalf of their clients and how a conversation spreads around a community relative to any difficulties that a financial organization may be having at a given time or another.

But it would seem to me that since there was such a close relationship between McDougal and services rendered by the firm, and in view of the testimony that we heard this morning from a vice president of Madison S&L concerning the type of loans that were being arranged and the obvious kickbacks, that indeed, these weren't everyday, above-the-board business dealings. These were rather extraordinary extensions of what appeared to be what it actually was, and that's some kind of a charade to inflate land prices and generate activity from Madison, and the very fact that this last loan was made in an expedited timeframe to insure that the place was cleaned up before the examiners, you know, I just find it extraordinary that the Rose Law Firm did not have an inkling in Little Rock that there were problems at Madison Guaranty, particularly in view of the fact that there were these representations and billings that had been ongoing for some time.

I guess I asked the same question yesterday, but it seems to be more perplexing today, gentlemen, how the law firm could have been void of any knowledge of the corruption associated with the Castle Grande land scheme? I have been in business, I know the conversations that take place at the banking levels and legal levels, and this seems such a corrupt process, these scams. Some people are very greedy, they want to get in on them, but there's certainly no question of the ability of people to pick up on them and recognize that somebody is making an extraordinary return for us to receive virtually no information.

No recollection on whether or not there were discussions of conflict within the law firm on the potential client relationship, despite the examiner's discussion yesterday that the corruption was obvious, I find very disturbing, and particularly in view of the straw man relationship with Seth Ward who was the father-in-law of the law partner which was your senior partner, Webster Hubbell. I am not going to ask you whether you talked to Webster Hubbell about it, but it would seem to me that because of the close relationship that existed in that law firm, the fact that it wasn't a large firm, a relatively small group, that you would have an opportunity to either overhear or question dealings that obviously affected one of your senior partners.

We're obviously dealing with well-educated, intelligent lawyers, and you folks act like you wouldn't know a scam if it hit you in the rear end. So that's the extent of my observation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I would like to comment on your response. The transactions that were called in question, the Rose Law Firm had no involvement in any of those transactions that have been called into question.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, I dispute that because, if you look at this billing record, these are transactions involving the Rose Law Firm and Madison relative to the purchase of the IDC properties which evolved into Castle Grande during the period that Madison was under scrutiny and the examiners acknowledged there was a scam going on, and they were making illegal loans during the entire time of 1990—well, when they were in excess of their 6 percent lending limit on the basis of their net worth.

I don't know what kind of a conclusion you come up with, but I can come up with one that they were an extended, illegal operation during that time; and that was not State law, that was Federal law.

Mr. THRASH. Senator, we had no involvement in the transactions that have been called into question. We did not work on them and we had no involvement in those.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And you had no knowledge of any of this going on?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Dover, now maybe you see why we keep asking you these questions again and again, because Senator Murkowski's just alleged a scam.

Now, Mr. Thrash, as I understand it—

Senator MURKOWSKI. I alleged a scam associated with the remarks of the bank examiner yesterday who acknowledged there was a scam.

Senator SARBANES. Well, I'm going to pursue that—

Senator MURKOWSKI. So I want to make sure we have reference to where the source came from.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Thrash, when you went to the closing, you had no knowledge of any scam, did you?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Dover, when you went to the closing between IDC and Madison, you had no knowledge of any scam?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, I did not.

Senator SARBANES. I want to ask both Mr. Thrash and Mr. Donovan, the Rose Law Firm were not the primary counsel for Madison, were they?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, Senator, we were not.

Senator SARBANES. In fact, as you perceived it, in the total sphere of legal work done for Madison, what Rose did for Madison was very small. I mean, it was certain particular discreet items; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct, Senator, very minimal representation.

Senator SARBANES. Within the Rose universe of billings, I have looked at these figures and people seem to set upon them, but they don't seem to me to be large billings in terms of a law firm's clients. How did Madison rank within the Rose Firm in terms of its billings? Is this a large client, a small client? Are these large amounts of billings? The end of the year, if you saw billings like this, would you put them well up on the list of your clients, or well down on the list of your clients?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, this was a very small client of the firm.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Mr. Donovan, a couple of quick questions. I think it was brought to your attention earlier on document DKSX 29002, one of the billing records—do you have that in front of you?

Mr. DONOVAN. They are all out of kilter, I'm sorry.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I think we can have a copy brought down to you. Do you have it, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. On this document there is an entry for Mrs. Clinton on November 26, 1985—

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. —where she bills 1 hour for a number of tasks including a conference with Seth Ward, conference with T. Thrash, conference with W. Hubbell?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I believe you were asked previously whether this date, November 26, 1985, that was before the time that you started doing your legal research; is that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I believe that it was posited to you that perhaps the fact that Mrs. Clinton had a conference with Mr. Ward before the time that you had begun your legal research might indicate that Mrs. Clinton was, in fact, talking to Mr. Ward, not about regulatory or utility issues, but rather about the acquisition of IDC. I want to bring to your attention another billing record which may actually shed some light on this, DKSX 29011. I do not know whether anybody brought that down to you while we were—

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, I have that.

Mr. KRAVITZ. You have that document?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Who is RDT, is that Davis Thomas?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Is there an entry for Mr. Thomas—first of all, who was Mr. Thomas back in 1985?

Mr. DONOVAN. He was a fellow associate at the firm.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Is there an entry for Mr. Thomas on October 18, 1985?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, he did research on what approvals, permits, et cetera, are necessary to operate sewer and water facilities, multiple telephone conferences with State agencies, a memo to Webb Hubbell or W. Hubbell.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Do you also have in front of you DKSX 29010, which is the January 31, 1986 bill to Madison Guaranty relating to matter No. 5, IDC?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Do you see, about halfway down in the description of the services rendered, where it says, "Research on what approvals, permits, et cetera, are necessary to operate sewer and water facilities; multiple telephone conferences with State and county agencies; memo about utility status”?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir, I see that.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Does that appear to refer back to the October 18, 1985 entry from Mr. Thomas?

Mr. DONOVAN. Clearly it does.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Now do these two documents shed any light on what Mrs. Clinton may very well have been talking to or may have had a reason to talk to Mr. Ward about in November 26, 1985?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, clearly the idea of the regulation of the utility had come up before then and before my research began in, I think, late December or early January 1986.

Mr. KRAVITZ. So it would be a reasonable inference to draw, that on November 26, 1985, Mrs. Clinton may well have been talking to Mr. Ward about the regulatory and utility issues that Davis Thomas had been researching back in October 1985?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure.

Mr. KRAVITZ. And the fact that Mrs. Clinton's conversation in November occurred before you began to do legal research on some of those same issues does not in any way indicate that Mrs. Clinton was talking to Mr. Ward about the acquisition of the IDC property?

Mr. DONOVAN. Oh, sure, I think that's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Thank you. That's all I have.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, we received a letter from Mr. Clark, I think, making a very important clarification and I think that letter should be included in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Clark's letter will be included in the record.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Donovan, I want to understand this. You were just asked whether, based on this entry in October 1985, indicating that Mr. Thomas had done some work on this issue about the water and sewer hookup, that you are now speculating that the later calls, a dozen or so calls between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Ward, were related to that utility hookup issue?

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, no, I think—at least what I thought I was answering was that that would—that a logical inference of Mr. Davis Thomas' 10/18/85 entry would be that Mrs. Clinton's entry of 11/26/85 conference with Seth Ward, Tom Thrash, and Webb Hubbell would logically—the logical inference would be that was about the utility issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now that utility was supposed to be hooked up to something; right, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They didn't just build the utility to put it out in the middle of a meadow and let it sit there; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would not think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Wasn't the issue about what kind of permits and what kind of authority was necessary to put up utility hookups to a residential development?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't know the answer to that. I mean, I looked back at the memo to see if there was any background information in my memorandum which would given some insight into exactly what the plans of the client were, and all I say in the body of the memorandum is, you know, that they want to have a utility and to whom is it—what regulations are required?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's apply some common sense. As a common sense matter, Mr. Donovan, will you agree with me that the purpose of getting permission to hook up the utility was to hook it up to something where people would live or work?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think that's true. However, it is my understanding that—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is there any doubt in your mind that what they were looking to do was to hook it up to places where people live and work?

Mr. DONOVAN. This utility existed long before the IDC transaction, however. In fact, IDC had a wholly-owned subsidiary which owned this utility.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The purpose of the research you did was not to go to the library to answer law review questions, it was to get an answer to Seth Ward and to the people who had the property about what would be necessary to hook it up to buildings that people would live in and work in; right, that was the point of it?

Mr. DONOVAN. I can't agree with that. I don't know that that's the case. For all I know, the utility was hooked up. They were operating and their question was, should we be regulated, for all I know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was hooked up to what was projected to be a housing development in that IDC property; isn't that right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would assume so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that is a housing investment that the whole country is now known to love called Castle Grande. Now using this power of inference you have just employed earlier in response to Mr. Kravitz's questions, is it a fair inference that, in the course of multiple discussions during October, November, and December between Hillary Clinton and Seth Ward about the regulations applying to hooking up a utility in the property in which they are developing, Castle Grande, that there would have been discussion about the fact that there was going to be a housing development there? Pretty fair inference; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I suppose so. I just wasn't privy to that and I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me go to you, Mr. Thrash. The question was raised by Senator Murkowski about the involvement of the firm in some of the questioned loan transactions, and in particular the original purchase of IDC with the straw man where—you know what a straw man is; right?

Mr. THRASH. I am not sure what your interpretation of straw man is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I will make it clear to you. A straw man is a situation in which you park some of the property in someone else's name, they don't put up the money, they don't take the risk. They only have one function which is to hold your property in their name in order to conceal the fact that you are the true owner of the property. I mean, the words "straw man" in that sense.

You understand that what the examiners have looked at and found with respect to this transaction is that Seth Ward was the owner of property in name only. He didn't put up the money out of his own pocket, it was nonrecourse so he was not at risk, and Madison Financial had an option any time they wanted to to get that property back. You know that, don't you?

Mr. THRASH. Do I understand that that's what someone has found? No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't know that?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The transaction in which the sale was made from the IDC to Madison Financial, Mr. Dover, you represented the IDC; is that right?

Mr. DOVER. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I mean, in fairness we ought to separate you out from the other two gentlemen at the table because your client was the IDC and you had no reason whatsoever to know or care about what was going on at Madison Financial; right?

Mr. DOVER. You are right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So happily you have no reason to be anything but oblivious to all of this.

Mr. Thrash, who was your client?

Mr. THRASH. Our client was Madison Guaranty, Madison Financial.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were at this closing. Was Mr. Ward there?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, I do not have an independent recollection of being at that closing. My knowledge of that closing is based upon the documents that I have reviewed, and I show that I was at that closing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know who represented Mr. Ward at that closing?

Mr. THRASH. I am not sure that anyone represented Mr. Ward at that closing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember that there was a transaction in which a portion of this property was assigned to Mr. Ward and you were present for that?

Mr. THRASH. I remember at the closing, based upon the documents that I have reviewed, that Mr. Ward acquired a portion of the IDC property.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now that would have been a pretty significant change in the transaction from the original deal the way you had it structured as of your August 9, 1985 letter to Mr. Dover; right?

Mr. THRASH. As of the August 20th corporate resolutions which I prepared for Madison Financial to acquire all of it for a million 750, that was a change, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's something you should have noticed; right?

Mr. THRASH. At the closing, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. On August 19th, there was a change in the agreement which the Rose Law Firm prepared which all of a sudden created the possibility that Madison might assign its rights, not merely to an affiliated company, but to an entity or individual even if it was unaffiliated; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you understand that that change, although it looks like a little technical change, the significance of that change is that it allows, as part of the purchase, the possibility that Madison is going to assign some or all of its rights to somebody who is not an affiliate of Madison, and that the agreement will then be kicked in to cover this other individual; right?

Mr. THRASH. That agreement would have allowed Madison to assign whatever interests it might have in a portion or part of the property to someone else. Although they probably didn't need that, Mr. Chertoff, because it was a cash transaction, they could have done that anyway.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But someone felt the need to put it in the agreement; right?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct. I think probably we were asked to put it in.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you are telling us you didn't put it in there; right? You said it was Mr. Thomas who did it?

Mr. THRASH. I am saying I don't recall. I have looked at the time entries and it makes sense that that may have happened, Mr. Thomas may have put it in. I may have put it in, I just don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What level of associate was Mr. Thomas in 1985?

Mr. THRASH. He was probably a 3-year, third-year associate.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were supervising him on this transaction?

Mr. THRASH. I guess you could say that, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you think it was likely he was making significant changes in the structure of a transaction without running it by you?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, what I just said, that was not a significant change, I don't think it was a significant change at all. They could have done it without it. I just don't think that was a very significant change at all.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you are telling us you think Mr. Thomas may have done this just by himself?

Mr. THRASH. He may have, or he may have talked to me about it. I just don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you don't remember?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So far as you are telling us that the Rose Law Firm had no involvement in any of the criticized transactions, you have to agree with me that this document, this agreement and these drafts of agreements, were part of the indispensable ingredients of these transactions. This was the paper that let that transaction happen; right?

Mr. THRASH. The criticized transactions, as I understand it, were transactions involving loans and sales of this property subsequent to the acquisition of it by Madison. The actual acquisition of it by Madison was not one of the questioned loans, I don't think.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think you misunderstand, Mr. Thrash, because I think for weeks now we have had evidence in the record about an examiner's report that described this very transaction, the initial acquisition as a sham transaction, as a fictitious purchase in which Mr. Ward was not really the owner of the property because he didn't put up the money, he didn't put himself at risk. And as soon as Madison Financial Corporation wanted to sell that property, they had the ability to get it back out again.

So that all he did was he held it, kind of like he was holding it for somebody else, but it wasn't his own property. That is one of the critical transactions.

Senator SARBANES. Are you asserting that Clark yesterday, the examiner, said the transfer of this property from IDC to Madison was a problem transfer?

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am asserting that the examination report, which we have put in, we have been dealing with for weeks, that original report from the February examination, identifies the IDC purchase by Madison and Seth Ward, that Seth Ward's purchase was a sham transaction, that it was a transaction with no economic consequences. He didn't put up the money, it was a nonrecourse loan, so there was no risk, and there was an option on the part of the financial corporation to take that property back. That is, in anybody's book, a warehousing or parking transaction. And there is evidence in the record it was designed to evade the 6 percent limitation on the Investment Rule.

Now, I am not asking you, Mr. Thrash, whether you knew every jot and tittle of that. What I am asking you is can you deny that this agreement which the Rose Law Firm prepared was part of the paperwork of that transaction, that purchase?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, it was not part of that transaction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was not?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. That agreement was never executed—the parties never executed that agreement.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This agreement was never executed?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. All right, we will find it. I hope you are not meaning to suggest to me because there were some subsequent changes in the agreement before it came into final—here we go. Here is—September 13, 1985.

The CHAIRMAN. You are familiar with this agreement, aren't you?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You've looked at it before, haven't you?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This has some real consequences for you and, potentially for the law firm. Is there potential liability as it relates to the law firm that would supervise or know of the fact if there indeed Mr. Ward eventually became the holder of these properties and it was a sham transaction and your law firm was aware of that? Doesn't that have potential liability for your firm?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, that is not the case.

The CHAIRMAN. But you have reviewed this document very carefully, haven't you?

Mr. THRASH. Senator, let me try to make sure—

The CHAIRMAN. What we are concerned about, and I think—Senator Sarbanes, on your time you can ask the questions you want.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I don't want to ask a question. I want the witness to have a chance to answer your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. You know what, Senator, you continue to interfere with everyone who poses questions. You think you are the only person who has the only way in which to go forward, and it is wrong. I have to tell you something else, when you refer to other Senators and the questions they ask, there is no need to do that. You can still go as it relates to the factual thing instead of bringing a Senator's name in and personalizing it. It is not necessary.

Now here is what Mr. Chertoff, and certainly I think we are all concerned about: What knowledge did you have as it relates to this transaction? You were there. You were at the closing in which Seth Ward—and by the way, Seth Ward isn't just anybody, he is the father-in-law to your senior partner, Webb Hubbell. I mean, this isn't just some fellow who walked in off the street you didn't know and he was there for the first time. What knowledge did you have about him getting this property? I mean, this is obviously a sham transaction, and that's what Mr. Chertoff is attempting to ascertain.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have in front of you the executed agreement of September 13, 1985?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is basically an agreement that builds on the draft agreement of August 19th; right?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. No, it is not?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. Can I try to explain?

The agreement that was put on the Rose Law Firm, it was scanned in, Mr. Dover's first agreement was scanned in and some changes were made. That was sent over to Mr. Dover. Madison Financial signed it, the bank signed it, but IDC would not sign it. They did not agree with the terms of it.

Mr. Dover never utilized this agreement. He went back to his old agreement. And there are numerous drafts where he totally disregarded all of the changes that we suggested. That were—and I am basing this on my review of the documents, the changes—

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is not that your memory has come back or anything?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. I'm basing it on a review of the documents. There were numerous drafts, maybe four or five, using Mr. Dover's original document, disregarding—putting in some of our changes maybe, and then disregarding most of them.

There was one issue that kept going back and forth, and that was whether or not the Hathaway Brokerage Commission was going to be paid by the IDC or Madison. Again, during this time, I was not involved. I was not involved in those negotiations, that agreement that was on Mr. Dover's original agreement, was used. Subsequently, the next draft that was used had the word "affiliate" in there.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me stop you. We know what the process of drafting and negotiating is. The question, the critical language we have been talking about here that says, "Madison" which reference shall include any entity or individual to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder," language which the Rose Law Firm put in the agreement, why that language appears in the September 13th agreement before you, which to my eyes looks like it has just about everyone's signature on it; isn't that right?

Mr. THRASH. The agreement that was signed on the 13th was executed by everyone and it has that provision in there that says, "entity or individual."

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who put it in, whose draft did it come out of? Your draft, right? Did it come out of your draft, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, I've tried to explain to you. The draft that I had had that in it, and I sent it over. Mr. Dover did not use that. The next draft that was circulated had affiliate in it, so at some subsequent time later, the parties reinserted it back into their agreement, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the language that you originally introduced into the agreement—"you" meaning the firm—wound up in the final agreement?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, it did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So unquestionably it was a part of the process of putting the deal together; right? You guys were involved in negotiating the deal that wound up with this split of the property, with the warehousing in Seth Ward, and you went to the closing, at which this all was unfolded—I am not asking anything more than that—is that true?

Mr. THRASH. What we did is we were involved, we reviewed Mr. Dover's original draft, we made some changes. We prepared the corporate resolutions on August 20th authorizing Madison Financial to purchase all of the property for $1,750,000. From that point on, I had nothing to do with that transaction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you go to the closing?

Mr. THRASH. I assume I was asked to.

Mr. CHERTOFF. To do what? To be a spectator or to participate as a lawyer?

Mr. THRASH. At the time of the closing, all the transactions and all the negotiations had been completed. The closing would have required me to, I guess, supervise the Abstract Company to make sure that all the requirements necessary for issuing the title policy were satisfied and that's what I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was anyone else representing Madison Financial but you?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Wasn't it your responsibility to supervise the documents at the closing for the—

Mr. THRASH. I don't know what you mean by "supervise the documents."

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Thrash, we will get back to that. Let me tell you something, when you are representing a bank at a closing, you are either representing them or you are not. If you think it is coming through to us that you just sat there, like the proverbial potted plant, what were you there for, what did you bill for, how come you went? I mean, it doesn't come through, but we will get back to that.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Kravitz.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Thank you, Senator Sarbanes.

Mr. Donovan, I want to go back for a moment to the issue of the legal research on the utility and water and sewer issues that you ended up working on in early October 1986.

Mr. Chertoff asked you some questions about your understanding that this utility that was to be operated there was to be hooked up to someplace where people lived and worked. Then Mr. Chertoff suggested to you that Mr. Ward must have mentioned to Mrs. Clinton during some of those telephone conversations the name Castle Grande.

I want you to take a look at your February 17, 1986 memorandum to Mrs. Clinton because I think it may clarify what those conversations may have been about relating to the utilities. Do you have that memorandum before you?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. This is a 12-page memo you wrote to Mrs. Clinton on February 17, 1986, regarding Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan/IDC?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. About two-thirds of the way down the first page, the second full paragraph, why don't you read that into the record?

Mr. DONOVAN. "Madison Guaranty/IDC would like to sell water to a business outside the IDC development and also to another real estate development, Maple Creek."

Mr. KRAVITZ. Now is there anything anywhere in that memorandum indicating that Madison Guaranty or IDC intended to sell water or any other utilities to Castle Grande?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir, I searched all these records and found no reference to Castle Grande. I have no recollection of that term ever being used when I was doing this research for Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. KRAVITZ. In fact, Castle Grande would be inconsistent with that paragraph you just read because Castle Grande was not outside the IDC property?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. So by definition, this referred to selling water and sewer facilities to an entity that could not have been Castle Grande?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. And, of course, your memorandum not only does it indicate it was not Castle Grande, but also it specifically indicates that it was Maple Creek Farms, which is a totally separate development?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's right.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Mr. Thrash, again on the subject of the closing, were there any loan documents that you saw at the closing?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Were there any documents which indicated to you that Madison bore all of the financial risks and that Mr. Seth Ward bore none?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Thank you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Donovan, first, let's read the whole page of that memo Mr. Kravitz just showed you of February 17th. What it says is that Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan purchased property and furnished sewer and water service to a number of patrons who obtained their title through the IDC chain of title, and these are residents of IDC development.

Then it goes on to say, the language that you were read, that they wanted to sell water to another real estate development. So it is pretty clear from this, that they were already, in the business of—or were concerned about selling water to a prior real estate development which was the patrons who are already living or use water inside of this property; isn't that correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's actually what I was trying to refer to when I spoke about this earlier. And that was that it was my understanding, limited however it is, that the Industrial Development Company had a wholly-owned subsidiary that was already furnishing water to folks out there. That was my understanding. This was a functioning utility long before Madison ever bought it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What happened is it was sold and became Castle Sewer & Water; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I believe that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would it surprise you to learn that the sale of that property from the savings and loan to a group including Governor Tucker occurred before February 17, 1986?

Mr. DONOVAN. I've no knowledge of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you think of any reason why the law firm would be doing work, that the Rose Firm would be doing work that they would be billing to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan to research something for a utility that had already been sold to some other group involving Governor Tucker?

Mr. DONOVAN. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At that point, once the utility is sold and the bank sells it, the bank doesn't care anymore; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I have no knowledge of what—of your—the assumption that it was sold before. You may very well be correct, Mr. Chertoff. I just don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me get back to you, Mr. Thrash, and this closing. I'm like Mr. Donovan, I am not a real estate lawyer, but I have bought a couple of houses in my life and I have a recollection, even in the simplest—everybody knows in the simplest real estate transaction, there is a big pile of paper. Your job at the closing was to represent Madison Financial and make sure the paperwork was in order. Now are you telling us there were no deeds?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. There were two deeds or three, two or three deeds that Mr. Dover had prepared.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And there were no loan documents?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There was a deed now going to Mr. Ward, you are telling us?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And—

Mr. THRASH. There may have been two deeds going to Mr. Ward.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there a check that went back to show payment which you usually get at a closing?

Mr. THRASH. Again, I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Isn't that exactly the kind of stuff that your job—as the lawyer representing one of the parties in the transaction, isn't your job to make sure that no one is giving property away without getting the money they are supposed to get?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, at that closing, the Abstract Company would handle the financing. They would get the money, they would put it into their account, then they would disburse it to the lienholders. They had to do that in order to be able to check off on their requirements to issue the title policy. At this particular closing, you would have had three deeds and you would have had two or three title commitments, and the title company would have checked off on the requirements in order for them to issue title. I think it would have been basically that simple.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was your job there?

Mr. THRASH. To make sure there was no hitches or no problems that came up.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you bill for this?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So your job was to make sure there were no hitches, but you can't tell us—you don't really have much of a recollection of the documents you reviewed, you don't know much about the financing for the transaction all of this would have been the title company; is that it?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir. What I said was, there were three deeds that Mr. Dover prepared. I reviewed those because I have obtained the file. There was title commitments which the Abstract Company prepared. The Abstract Company also prepared closing statements where they prorated the taxes and showed how much was going to be paid to the mortgage holders.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who were the deeds made out to?

Mr. THRASH. There was a deed made out to Seth Ward, I believe, and to Madison Financial. There may have been two deeds made out to Seth Ward.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Two deeds?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And at that point, you must have realized since now I guess your memory is revived to the point of remembering you saw some deeds, that now, all of a sudden, the deed to Seth Ward, was that a deed directly from IDC or a deed from Madison Financial?

Mr. THRASH. Again, I haven't revived my memory. I am basing this on the documents I have reviewed. The three deeds—a deed from IDC to Madison, and from IDC to Seth Ward, and from ISC, Industrial Services Company, to Seth Ward, I believe.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So at that point you recognize that the original transaction had been split?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. Now in terms of what was going back, the money that was going back, and recognizing, as Mr. Dover said, this was a three-party deal. There were other banks that also had to get money. What was there evidencing money going back for these deeds?

Mr. THRASH. When you say "money going back"—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who paid for Seth Ward's deed?

Mr. THRASH. Again, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't ask questions or pursue that at the closing?

Mr. THRASH. That was not an issue that arose at the closing. Had the money not been there, maybe that issue would have arose and we would have tried to figure out what was the problem. But the Beach Abstract would have collected the funds and disbursed those funds to the three banks.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have to check to make sure that funds were collected and disbursed? Did you have to check with your own client to find out whether your client had given the money it had to give?

Mr. THRASH. Again, I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Isn't that part of what you are supposed to do as a closing attorney?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, I don't recall if that was an issue. I just don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to ask you, Mr. Donovan, you also speculated that some of these dozen phone calls between Mrs. Clinton and Seth Ward which occurred in October, November, and December of 1985 might also—some of these might have related to the wet/dry issue and the brewery issue; remember that?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you will agree with me that if we look at your bill, as far as we can tell, what was the earliest date you got involved in doing some work on this?

Mr. DONOVAN. On December 30, 1985.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you have no basis, other than speculation, to surmise that some of those earlier conversations had to do with the wet/dry issue; correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, we have a sworn statement from Mr. Ward, for whatever it is worth, where he says he has no knowledge of discussing at all any issues concerning a brewery, liquor licenses, or a question of whether a particular jurisdiction was wet or dry. So you will agree with me, you are not in a position, to dispute his sworn statement, that he never had any discussion about wet and dry matters?

Mr. DONOVAN. I was not privy to those telephone conversations between Mr. Ward and Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So we are still left with about a little less than 30 hours of time Mrs. Clinton bills on IDC matters, of which half is accounted for, at least to some degree, with various descriptions, and half of which is totally unidentified, and Mr. Donovan, you really don't know what Mrs. Clinton did on that other 14½ hours?

Mr. DONOVAN. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't know, either, Mr. Thrash?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Thrash, do you know why Mrs. Clinton would not have come to you in her drafting of the option for the purchase of real estate between Seth Ward and Madison Financial?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was Seth Ward in May 1986, a principal of the bank, someone who was working at the bank?

Mr. THRASH. I would not have any knowledge of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You know that at a point in time he was someone working at the bank?

Mr. THRASH. At the time of my involvement, in August and October of 1985, it was my understanding, yes, he was an employee of Madison Financial Corporation or a representative.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is this appropriate for a lawyer to represent both sides in a purchase and a sale?

Mr. THRASH. Is it appropriate, without a waiver from—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Without a waiver, an informed waiver by one of the parties?

Mr. THRASH. I would have to say probably not, no, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is probably not appropriate?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Dover, I want to remind everybody, you have nothing to do with any of this option stuff, you are out of it. We are getting some free legal advice. You would also agree, I take it, absent an informed consent or agreement from both sides, a lawyer shouldn't be representing the purchaser and seller?

Mr. DOVER. That's correct. I would agree.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You also told us you would expect the purchaser of real estate, maybe not the seller, but the purchaser's attorney to make some effort to verify the fact that the seller had ownership and had clear title?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, that would depend on the circumstances, as to how much you were paying for the option—for consideration of the option. I am not talking about the ultimate purchase price if you exercised the option. I am talking about what your paying for the option itself. If you are going to pay a substantial amount of money just for the optional right to decide whether you want to buy it or not, I would think you ought to have some indicia that there is ownership.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In this case there are really two parts of what was paid for the option; one was a thousand dollars to be paid by Madison Financial to the Wards, and the other is a reference to other good and valuable consideration, which is unspecified. And you don't know, Mr. Thrash, what else was paid to Mr. Ward as part of the option price; right?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I had nothing to do with the option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It also says in this agreement, at paragraph 4, "if the optionee," which would be the Financial Corporation, "does not exercise this Option as herein provided, all sums paid by him hereunder shall be retained by the Grantor," meaning the Wards, "free of all claims of Optionee, and neither party shall have any further rights of claims against the other."

So you will agree with me what that means under this option is whatever money Madison Financial paid to the Wards for this option, the thousand dollars plus whatever else they paid, would be irrevocably the Wards' even if the option was never exercised; right? That's what it says.

Mr. THRASH. If that's what it says, I don't have it in front of me. If that's what it says, I will agree with you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why don't we get it down to you so you don't have to rely on my characterization, you can verify it.

Mr. THRASH. I'm sorry, Mr. Chertoff. I was not listening closely enough and I apologize.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We will get it down to you in a second. While it is getting down to you, in this transaction, this option, Mrs. Clinton was billing to Madison, so we can agree that that means that Madison at least was Mrs. Clinton's client; right?

Mr. THRASH. I would assume that would be correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. She was supposed to look out for the interests of Madison in this transaction?

Mr. THRASH. If Madison was her client, I believe that is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Look at this paragraph 4 here, it says that if the optionee—and the optionee here is Madison—if Madison does not exercise the option, all sums paid by Madison hereunder shall be retained by the Wards free of all claims of Madison. That means that any money paid for the option, the thousand dollars plus this other unspecified good and valuable consideration, would be kept by Ward, if in fact this option were never actually executed?

Mr. THRASH. If it was not exercised.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right, if they didn't choose to exercise the option?

Mr. THRASH. Well, if they didn't choose to exercise the option, the thousand dollars would be Mr. Ward's.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Plus whatever else is the good and valuable consideration?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, you're a lawyer, you know that's just language that probably doesn't mean anything other than a thousand dollars was paid.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I also know that Mr. Ward actually got some other money from the savings and loan around this time, so I don't know that this is something I can use to draw—use my common experience to comment on, at least as a private lawyer. But, you will agree with me that that's what the language means; right? That if the option isn't exercised, whatever Ward got for the option, he gets to keep?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that this option was the subject of litigation between Mr. Ward and the savings and loan at some later time, within the next couple of years?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know Mr. Hubbell attended the trial?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did anybody ever seek to ask around the firm whether there was anybody who had any knowledge about this option which could have been relevant evidence in a case in which your former client, the savings and loan, was in a dispute with Seth Ward?

Mr. THRASH. I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that, in a case in a trial involving this option, evidence from the person who drafted the option would be pretty useful to the parties?

Mr. THRASH. Mr. Chertoff, you are asking me to speculate or comment on something I don't know anything about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am asking you to draw on your experience as a lawyer. Would you agree with me, from your experience doing transactions, that when someone draws up a document like an option, and it becomes the subject of a dispute that goes to court later, that the lawyer who drafted the option is pretty likely to be someone who is at least going to be getting some requests for discovery, if not actually going to be a witness, because they are going to have a lot of relevant information?

Mr. THRASH. I guess that's possible. I am not sure I am following you, but I guess that's possible.

Mr. CHERTOFF. To help you follow me, what I am really trying to figure out is, why it is that, as far as I can determine in this case, which was subsequently hard fought first—I shouldn't say hard fought—was originally fought between the bank and Ward, and then later the RTC jumped into it because they had a disagreement, why it is that there doesn't seem to be any indication that

Mrs. Clinton was giving evidence or giving information which, I think, might have actually shed interesting light upon how this option was formed and how it related to that commission which Mr. Ward received as part of that October transaction which we have been talking about?

Mr. THRASH. I don't know what her involvement in that was. I just don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator Murkowski.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I just have a brief question for Mr. Dover. As a consequence, Mr. Dover, of the appearance of Mr. Fitzhugh today, I am wondering in the course of your activities associated with the Industrial Development Company as counsel, that you had occasion to review, do business, or have transactions on behalf of IDC with Mr. Davis Fitzhugh?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, none come to mind.

Senator MURKOWSKI. So, in activities associated with Madison in acquiring IDC, who did you deal with at Madison?

Mr. DOVER. I didn't deal with anybody at Madison. I dealt a little bit with Mr. Thrash, but—

Senator MURKOWSKI. Who was Mr. Thrash?

Mr. DOVER. Mr. Thrash is at the table next to me.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You dealt with the lawyer for Madison?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, sir. The real negotiations, though, Senator were carried out between Mr. Lyle, who was the chairman of the board of my client, Industrial Development Company, and Seth Ward, in whatever hat he was wearing.

Senator MURKOWSKI. All right. Now do you have any knowledge of what Mr. Fitzhugh did for Madison?

Mr. DOVER. None whatsoever.

Senator MURKOWSKI. He indicated he was a vice president, at least he kind of thought he was, and did real estate activities and preparations of some sort. He was a lawyer, but you didn't deal with him?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, I didn't cross his path, to my recollection, I did not.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Who owned IDC?

Mr. DOVER. Well, it was fairly broadly held.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Were any of the principals of Rose that had any interest in IDC?

Mr. DOVER. Senator, I don't have a shareholder's list with me. I think maybe Mr. Gaston Williamson may have been a shareholder.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And he was associated with Rose?

Mr. DOVER. Yes, sir, he used to be.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Was that in that timeframe of 1984 to—

Mr. DOVER. I honestly don't know when Gaston retired from the Rose Firm.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I don't know whether you would have had occasion to hear, but did you know of Mr. Fitzhugh's rather extraordinary financial transaction where he earned a $50,000 commission on a nonrecourse loan, which was identified in an exhibit as 6.6 acres covering the warehouse for a sales price of $500,000?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir, I didn't have any knowledge of that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You didn't have any knowledge of that?

Mr. DOVER. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Mr. Thrash, I wonder if you could tell us a little about your dealings then with Mr. Fitzhugh.

Mr. THRASH. I am not sure I have ever had any dealings with Mr. Fitzhugh.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I understood Mr. Dover to indicate in his remarks that you represented—

Mr. DOVER. No, Senator, maybe I misspoke or perhaps you misunderstood. Mr. Thrash represented Madison in this IDC transaction, and I spoke to him in that context.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Because I had asked you if Mr. Fitzhugh, if you had any dealings and you said no, and I think you made a reference to Mr. Thrash as having had the dealings with Fitzhugh?

Mr. DOVER. No, I meant to say, if I did not say, I meant to say, I did not have any dealings with Mr. Fitzhugh. I did have dealings with Mr. Thrash.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did it involve any of the transfer of land from IDC—what is it, IDC to Madison?

Mr. DOVER. That's all it involved.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You have responded, Mr. Thrash, saying you had no dealings with Mr. Fitzhugh?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Mr. Donovan, did you have an occasion on behalf—

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Who did in the law firm?

Mr. THRASH. I am not sure that anyone did, Senator.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, you represented Madison—

Mr. THRASH. On some isolated transactions that did not—

Senator MURKOWSKI. There was the preparation of a 22-acre parcel that was done by one of your partners or associates. That's been in evidence before the Committee for some time, plus certain billing records.

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I don't know what you are talking about.

Senator MURKOWSKI. That was an exhibit. Maybe we can put the exhibit up.

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I just don't understand what you are talking about.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I'm not going to pursue that, but it was an issue that was brought up before, and I think we've fairly well exercised the questionable status of it, but it seems to me that, you know, as we look at the law firm, I assume you would agree that any lawyer of Rose would know that it was fraudulent to utilize a straw man in an attempt to circumventing Federal law?

Mr. THRASH. I would think so, yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I assume that you're aware that this Committee heard testimony yesterday from the Home Loan Bank Board that described the corruption of the land transactions of Madison as being, I think they used the word "obvious."

Mr. THRASH. Senator, I did not see those. I have not kept up with that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. And are you aware that the testimony was heard from the Home Loan Bank Board examiners that said that Seth Ward was clearly a straw man?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Are you aware that one of your associates in the law firm billed eight phone calls to that same straw man?

Mr. THRASH. I am aware of the billing records that have been produced, yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, do you have any recollection as to who was the person who first asked you to work on the IDC transaction?

Mr. THRASH. Again, I do not recall.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, you had just made partner in August 1985, so normally you would keep the billing partner apprised as to the matter; right?

Mr. THRASH. I don't think so, on that particular transaction. I think I was the responsible—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Were you the billing partner?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know who the billing partner was?

Mr. THRASH. I don't think I knew at that time.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Did you later learn it was Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. THRASH. I have learned in preparing for these hearings that Mrs. Clinton was the billing partner on that file.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you do not know who asked you to first work on this transaction?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Could we put up on the Elmo the New Client Master Form? You have a copy of this before you?

Mr. THRASH. I can see it on the screen.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Have you seen this document before, sir?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir. It was shown to me back in December.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And this is a form that the Rose Law Firm used during this period when you opened up a new matter; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I believe that's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In this particular case the new matter is matter 5, IDC; right?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The client is Madison Guaranty; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The billing attorney is No. 42?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Am I correct that at the Rose Law Firm different attorneys received different numbers?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Who was billing attorney No. 42 in August 1985?

Mr. THRASH. At the time I first saw this, I did not know who No. 42 was. I have since learned that that was Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So Webb Hubbell was the person who opened up the IDC matter at the Rose Law Firm; right?

Mr. THRASH. He was probably the one that prepared the New Client Master Form and put it into the system, yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You started working on this transaction about 4 days—you started working on August 6; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Hubbell prepares this document on August 2.

Mr. THRASH. Again, I don't know that Mr. Hubbell prepared this document.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But it has his number right there. It says billing attorney No. 42. That's Mr. Hubbell; correct?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So 4 days before you start work, Mr. Hubbell is setting this thing up and getting the wheels in motion at the firm, right, so you can work on this matter?

Mr. THRASH. This was an internal document where it showed that we were creating an account to place our billings into, and whoever prepared it put the billing attorney as No. 42, which is Webb Hubbell. The actual billing attorney was Mrs. Clinton. She was the one that actually sent the bills out. I don't know if that was a mistake done by the billing department but No. 42 was Webb Hubbell but the actual billing was done by Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you have any knowledge of any work that Mr. Hubbell did with regard to the IDC matter?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, do you?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you know that he, in fact, did some work on the IDC matter?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not know that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The billing records reflect that he did do some work related to the IDC matter; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. If they're in there—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Telephone calls with Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. DONOVAN. As I said before, the billing records are the best evidence of who did what on the IDC matter.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And they reflect that Mr. Hubbell did do some work on the IDC matter?

Mr. THRASH. On the transaction that I worked on, Mr. Hubbell was not involved.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Insofar as you know, the narrow part you dealt with?

Mr. THRASH. That's correct, he was not involved in that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But he may have been involved in other things, and in fact the Pillsbury firm, there's a September 24th agreement which we can put up, and this is an arrangement between—can we have that up, the September 24 agreement? This is a document that was prepared indicating the agreement between Mr. Ward and Mr. McDougal with regard to the IDC property, and the Pillsbury Report at page 67 states, "That a reasonable inference from the evidence is that Mr. Ward prepared this agreement in consultation with Mr. Hubbell." Are you aware of that statement in the Pillsbury Report?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir, I have read that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Just one last thing. Mr. Thrash, did you know in 1985 and 1986 when you were representing Madison Guaranty, that Mrs. Clinton was a business partner of Jim McDougal?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I don't think I did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. When did you learn of the Whitewater investment?

Mr. THRASH. I would have learned about it during the 1990's when it was picked up by the media.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So in 1992 during the Presidential Campaign?

Mr. THRASH. That's probably correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, when you started doing work on the Madison Guaranty matters in 1985 and 1986, did you know that Mrs. Clinton was a business partner with Jim McDougal?

Mr. DONOVAN. No.

Mr. GIUFFRA. When did you learn that Mrs. Clinton was a business partner with Jim McDougal and the Whitewater investment?

Mr. DONOVAN. It would have been during the campaign.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, Jim McDougal was the owner of Madison Guaranty; correct?

Mr. DONOVAN. I think he—yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, you were aware that Mr. McDougal owned Madison Guaranty; right?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Should Mrs. Clinton have disclosed to her partners at the Rose Law Firm that she was a business partner of a firm client, i.e., Mr. McDougal?

Mr. THRASH. I don't believe that was a policy requirement that she do so.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't think she had any obligation to disclose to her partners that she was in business with a firm client?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. No obligation whatsoever?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I don't think so.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, you don't believe Mrs. Clinton had any obligation to disclose the fact that she was a business partner with a firm client to her partners at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. DONOVAN. Pursuant to? Do you have a rule, a model rule of professional conduct that you're referring to? I know of no rule of professional conduct which would have required her to do that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So there was no Rose policy with regard to the intermingling of business relationships between lawyers at the firm and clients?

Mr. DONOVAN. I am unaware of any Rose policy to that effect at that time.

Mr. THRASH. Could I respond to that? We did have a policy that dealt with being a director or an officer of a corporate client, but not in entering into business dealings with an owner of a particular corporate client.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me try this on you, Mr. Donovan. How does it strike you to have—your client when it was Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan was the savings and loan; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It wasn't Mr. McDougal personally?

Mr. DONOVAN. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, it would have been your obligation and a lot of law firms to learn this lesson very painfully in the late 1980's and early 1990's, it would have been your obligation or the obligation of any partner in the firm if they became aware of anything irregular, to bring it to the attention of the board of directors or perhaps others within the savings and loan government structure; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I'm aware of that rule of law.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you don't see a problem where one of the partners in the firm has a separate business relationship with a guy who owns most of the stock of the company where you have not only a personal relationship but one in which you've a separate partnership?

Mr. DONOVAN. That was not my testimony. My testimony was that I am unaware of any model rule of professional responsibility which would require a lawyer to disclose a business relationship with a client.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know what a fiduciary is?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. A fiduciary is someone, it is a partnership or an officer in a corporation, someone who owes the utmost obligation of loyalty. That's a fiduciary.

Mr. DONOVAN. Something above a reasonable care, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your law firm were fiduciaries of the savings and loan; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. I understand that rule of law, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There's also a rule of law that Mrs. Clinton as a partner with Mr. McDougal in a private venture, they were fiduciaries with each other, right, because they were partners? That's an old and very well known——

Mr. DONOVAN. I suppose so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's a well known rule of law; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you had a situation where Mr. McDougal had a problem or had done something wrong in connection with a savings and loan, which shocking as it may seem evidently turns out to have been the case, there could very well be a conflict between Mrs. Clinton's obligation as a fiduciary to the savings and loan and her obligation as a fiduciary to her partner, as well as her financial relationship with her partner, particularly if somehow that partnership were tied up with a savings and loan, say, by getting money from the savings and loan or supposing, for example, money was coming from the savings and loan or accounts at the savings and loan was paying off debts that had been accrued in the private partnership. I mean, you can see all kinds of conflicts and contradictions between fiduciary duties that could arise in that situation; right?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chertoff, you could speculate, which is all that is. It is bald speculation. My point was you can point to no model rule of professional conduct which required Mrs. Clinton to disclose her business relationship with a client, with a principal of a client. It doesn't exist.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now were you aware that there was a time that a memo went around in 1988 asking specifically in connection with proposed representation of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation——

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. —to have the disclosure of all relationships with principals at Madison?

Mr. DONOVAN. I'm aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know whether Mrs. Clinton disclosed her relationship at that time?

Mr. DONOVAN. She may very well have. I don't know whether she did or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would it surprise you to hear that, I believe, Mr. Clark who was here wasn't aware of any such disclosure?

Mr. DONOVAN. As I recall what Mr. Clark said was that we don't have any written response to that memorandum. It could—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Will you agree with me at least that when that memo came around, she should have disclosed it?

Mr. DONOVAN. Sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you.

Mr. DONOVAN. There's no evidence that she did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is there a written record of her having done so?

Mr. DONOVAN. No written record.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you didn't know in 1988?

Mr. DONOVAN. I did not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thrash and Mr. Dover, in fairness to you, I simply want to quote a paragraph from the report on the representation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan by the Rose Law Firm, which was prepared for the Resolution Trust Corporation by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro, San Francisco law firm. And it says:

The documents that Darrell Dover and the Rose Law Firm have produced do not deal at all directly with the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial. The deeds mention both buyers, the purchase agreement mentions S&L's, but someone who saw only these documents would not have noticed of the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial, much less responsibility for their creation.

Now that was the situation as both of you understood it; is that correct, when you went into this closing?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOVER. That's correct, Senator.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you.

Mr. DOVER. Thank you for that.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Thrash, there was an option as it related to the manner in which these properties could be transferred, is that not true, the option as it related between Madison and Mr. Ward?

Mr. THRASH. There was an option that we discussed earlier today, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Right. Who prepared that option?

Mr. THRASH. I did not prepare it. I don't know. The billing records seem to indicate Mrs. Clinton may have prepared it.

The CHAIRMAN. So Mrs. Clinton obviously had knowledge of this relationship, this ability to exercise this transfer, and that's prior to the closing, isn't it?

Mr. THRASH. That was subsequent to the closing by approximately 6 or 8 months or a year, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Now let me ask you this. You go to the closing you didn't even know Seth Ward was going to be there?

Mr. THRASH. Again, Senator, I told you, I don't recall the closing but I would have assumed he would have been there, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Why would you assume that?

Mr. THRASH. He was the representative of Madison.

The CHAIRMAN. Weren't there two deeds at that point in time?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Did one of those deeds split off the property and gave him a piece of that property?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct. He was a purchaser of part of the property.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't ask your client, Mr. McDougal or Madison, what this involved? You just saw two deeds and you didn't know anything else?

Mr. THRASH. I knew that Madison was acquiring the property and that they had cut a business deal to allow Mr. Ward to acquire part of the property, and that's what we were doing there today.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that Mr. Ward at that time was an employee of the bank?

Mr. THRASH. That is correct. Or he was an employee of Madison Financial Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, a subsidiary of the bank.

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You had no knowledge whatsoever as it related to how this transaction took place? You didn't know, for example, that he was getting paid a commission to bring this about and that he was going to have this loan agreement that made it possible for him to buy this?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. You see, again, you have a situation where you are not talking about just a stranger showing up there. You are talking about Mr. Hubbell, who was the senior partner, his father-in-law. He shows up there.

You have an option agreement which comes into play which is prepared by a member of your firm. You have a whole system here which leaves unaccounted for some 14½ hours, almost half the billing time totally unaccounted for.

You have Seth Ward saying, Mrs. Clinton did not talk to me about the very matters that some would suggest that possibly she did, Mr. Donovan said he speculated.

You have totally unaccounted for this time, and yet you do have this transaction and it does appear that Mr. Hubbell was involved, and certainly his father-in-law. I say it appears as a result of this client form, which is the New Matter Master Form. We're not talking about an isolated incident or a coincidence, are we, that it would be Mr. Hubbell's name who appears on this, and again Seth Ward is Mr. Hubbell's father-in-law.

Mr. THRASH. Senator, it could be an error because the actual billing was done by Mrs. Clinton.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, I understand that, I understand that.

Mr. THRASH. So I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. I have to tell you that—and by the way, nobody has ever heard of Castle Grande, no one ever heard of Castle Grande. I mean, even when we find billing records that have CG, at one point they were going to suggest it was a possible partner's name, that's the kind of thing that raises very real questions.

Mr. THRASH. Can I comment on that?

The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

Mr. THRASH. The CG that you were referring to was what was clarified earlier today, which was the accounting record of Madison Guaranty, not a billing record of the Rose Law Firm.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, again, and I would just point out that the Sutro people did not have these billing records when they came to their conclusion, and I have to suggest to you that as it relates to Mr. Ward and his participation, the facts are pretty clear, it was an absolute total sham transaction, absolutely. He was a straw man, it was part and parcel of the total corrupt manner in which Madison was operated, and there is no doubt about that. There is no doubt that was a pyramid scheme in which the taxpayers eventually wound up paying off all of those obligations. That's what the record shows, quite clearly. It's not one fictitious employee who was used, it's not one time but it's a pattern, repeatedly, over and over and over; and that's the record. That's why we have some difficulty.

Mr. Chertoff, do you have any follow-up questions?

Mr. GIUFFRA. We just have one more.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, during the 1992 Presidential Campaign, were you contacted by Mr. Foster or Mr. Hubbell about the files that you had with regard to Madison Guaranty?

Mr. DONOVAN. No.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Thrash, were you contacted by Mr. Hubbell or Mr. Foster with regard to the files you maintained with regard to Madison Guaranty?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir, I was not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Were you contacted by anyone at the Rose Law Firm during the 1992 Presidential Campaign about your Madison Guaranty files?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Donovan, by anyone?

Mr. DONOVAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. We have no further questions.

Senator SARBANES. I have some, Mr. Chairman, in light of the questioning which you just put to the witnesses.

Mr. Thrash, what was—

The CHAIRMAN. You can't help but being personal, can you?

Senator SARBANES. I think it's important—no, I'm going to get into this Castle Grande and this billing.

The CHAIRMAN. You have the ability of getting into any matter you want but it's not necessary to refer to another Senator. Go to the specific facts and ask them, but you have a habit of doing that, and I tell you, I don't think that's good.

Senator SARBANES. Well, I think it becomes very relevant when you get the kind of misinformation that's been laid out in this questioning. Now—

The CHAIRMAN. I can only suggest to you that's why some of your colleagues respond to you in the manner in which they do, because you personalize, whether they have given a certain characterization that you don't agree with, you have every right to point it out and point out inconsistencies, but I don't think it behooves us to spell out someone else's name.

Senator SARBANES. If you think it's being unfairly personalized after I lay it out, I will be happy to discuss it with you.

Mr. Thrash, Chairman D'Amato put to you the question of the option. We had been discussing this quote from the Pillsbury Report with respect to the closing. What was the date of the closing?

Mr. THRASH. October 4, 1985.

Senator SARBANES. October 4, 1985. Now, my records show that the option agreement was May 1, 1986.

Mr. THRASH. That is my recollection of the document, too, Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. That would have been 7 months later?

Mr. THRASH. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. So knowledge about the option agreement was not possible at the time you went to the closing?

Mr. THRASH. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Let me turn to this billing record which the Chairman brought up again, because we had a big to-do about it here the day that Mr. Clark was here and about these initials CG and the assertion that that represented Castle Grande. I have to say to you, at the time, I mean, I can understand someone making that assertion so I want to say that in all fairness to the Chairman. We had this billing record here in front of us, these initials CG were there, Mr. Clark was then testifying, as I recall, and the Chairman sort of went at him pretty hard that this really represented Castle Grande, some possibility had been raised that it might represent the initials of another lawyer in the firm.

Mr. Clark was asked, is there a lawyer there that has the initials CG, the answer was yes but then he was asked well, did he do any work on this, and the answer was he didn't think so.

In any event, I'm prompted to this because of bringing it back, which just occurred, we received a letter from Mr. Clark today, and I just want to quote from that letter. This is to Chairman D'Amato and myself:

During my testimony on January 18, 1996, I was asked about a voucher, a copy of which is attached.

And that's this document here [indicating].

I was asked, "Now this is a Rose Law Firm voucher, am I right?" And I answered, "That's correct." Now that I have had the time to review this document, I believe that answer was incorrect. I had not seen this document prior to it being shown to me during my testimony. Though I did not recall it as a document produced by Rose Law Firm to the Committee or to any of the other investigators, I incorrectly identified the voucher as a Rose Law Firm document because the words "Rose Law Firm" appear at the bottom of the document and because the question suggested this is a Rose Law Firm voucher.

After reviewing the document further, it appears that the voucher actually was photocopied while laying on top of a Rose Law Firm invoice, thus creating a single paper with the voucher on the top half and an incomplete copy of the Rose Law Firm invoice on the bottom half of the page.

I have consulted with our accounting department and I am told that we did not use documents like this in 1985, 1986 as we do not today.

Further, the face of the document says Rose Law Firm, 1986 billing, which is the type of entry one would expect by the client and not by the firm. Our counsel's conversations with the Committee staff indicate that this document was produced to the Committee by the RTC. I believe this document is not from the Rose Law Firm but instead probably an internal document from Madison Guaranty or Madison Financial.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply make this observation. As I indicated at the outset of this, I can understand the approach, the line you took with Mr. Clark with respect to this CG on this document. I do not understand how given this letter which came to us, you could repeat that assertion here today unless you have some information that I don't have, which in effect calls into question the explanation offered in this letter.

In all fairness, I don't think it's fair to people to reassert this CG approach, which as I said I understood how it was done the other day, I mean, I looked at this thing and wondered about it, and you threw out a theory or advanced a theory about it. But now we have this letter, which seems to me a plausible explanation on its face, and in any event, I don't understand reasserting the theory advanced the other day when we have this letter before us here this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, have you completed your observation?

Senator SARBANES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, let me say that I would think you might know that if I had seen that, I certainly would have made some reference to it. That letter was just produced today, apparently handed to staff. We have been working basically round the clock.

You made some reference to this letter earlier, but the fact of the matter is I have not read it, I have not seen it, and I think that for you to characterize my remarks in that manner are just not necessary. So had you said, Senator, I have this letter, it just came today, this offers an explanation. That's something we understand because that happens all the time here, with one side or the other. And so to try to characterize my reference to something that I recall, and that was the Castle Grande, the CG which was taken to be Castle Grande, I think is not inappropriate for me to do.

So I am sorry that you failed to realize that I had not seen this letter. I had not been apprised of the content of the letter. You did make reference earlier that a letter came, and if you had observed and read into the record what it contained, I believe I said put the letter into the record, but we did not go through the contents of the letter. I don't think—

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Thrash was asked about it earlier.

The CHAIRMAN. Look, look. I listened to you, I don't interrupt you but you can't help yourself, it's bigger than you. Everyone has a right to make his observation. I listened to you make what I considered to be outlandish, inappropriate comments, and I withhold. It seems to me that you should attempt to control yourself a little.

Now, I want to make a point here, because there's been so much made about the Sutro report. The Sutro report was made without the benefit of having available these billing records. It was completed and, I think, submitted December 31st. These records, we understand, appeared for the first time or publicly acknowledged that they were found on January 4th by Mrs. Huber, and we all know how she said she found them back in the personal residence back in August, brought them downstairs in a box in her office, and then on January 4th came upon them, called the Clintons' attorney, called her own attorney, and I believe they were made available, copies were made available on the 5th. So they did not have the records, which do raise some very interesting and very important points as it relates to the billings, et cetera. The fact is that matter will have to be reviewed.

Notwithstanding that, I want to thank the witnesses today. I would also note that we have been in session, with the exception of a 45-minute break that we took, from 10 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. I make that observation because this Committee is working hard, and I don't know if the Minority side would like to put another witness on or another panel following this one. I mean——

Senator SARBANES. The answer to that is we would, Mr. Chairman, as I indicated to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think that that's really going well beyond what is reasonable, to start at 10 a.m. and to finish up at 6:30 p.m. on a day when we have no votes, which makes that possible or at least more—we could get more work in and have a break of 45 minutes, doesn't seem to me that this is a process which is attempting to slow matters down. We are attempting to get the facts. I want to thank the witnesses for coming in, I want to thank them for their patience, and I want to thank them for attempting to answer the questions to the best of their ability.

We stand in recess until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 6:34 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

MINUTES OF MEETING

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION

September 11, 1985

The Board of Directors of Madison Financial Corporation met on September 11, 1985, at 1:00 p.m. at the office at 16th and Main Streets, Little Rock, Arkansas. All directors were present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved as recorded.

Chairman McDougal introduced the first order of business before the board: the purchase of approximately 400 acres for a mobile home development.

The acreage, located on 145th Street, (near Pratt Road), is to be proposed in conjunction with Castle Industries, a mobile home manufacturer. The estimated cost of the land is approximately $600,000.

After a lengthy discussion, the Board unanimously approved the purchase of this development to be known as Castle Grande Estates.

There being no further business, the meeting was adjourned.

Mr. James B. McDougal, President
Madison Financial Corporation
16th and Main Streets
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Dear Mr. McDougal:

This is to set forth our agreement concerning the property commonly referred to as all the land owned by the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock and certain improvements thereon.

On or about the 13th day of September, 1985, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association agreed to acquire all of the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock's property except the grounds and building commonly referred to as the Timex Building. In the agreement Madison has the right to assign its rights to any entity or individual. As part of our agreement, I have agreed to take title to all of the assets of the aforementioned property that is located immediately north of 145th Street, the water and sewer improvements, and the sewer treatment ponds, including the one located south of 145th Street. Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association will agree to lend me the purchase price for this property secured by a mortgage of those parcels and the sewer and water works. Madison Guaranty will pay $35,000.00 to me to have an option for at least 270 days from the date of acquisition to purchase the property from me at any time, in whole or in part, for at least the pro rata amount of the note plus all accrued interest; except one parcel described as follows:

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT

87-7590

Approximately 22 1/2 acres located and referred to as the Northeast Quadrant of the Interchange of Highway 65 and 145th Street. More specifically described in the attached legal description which is a part of this agreement.

It is the intention of both Madison and myself to attempt to develop all the property acquired from I.D.C. and sell it as quickly as possible. If the property or any portion thereof is sold during the 270 day period, the sale price will be mutually approved by me and Madison Financial Corporation. The proceeds of the sale will be applied toward the promissory note, less a 10% sales commission to be paid to me. At Madison's discretion,

SW1-005

Mr. James G. McDougal

any particular piece of property may be deeded back to Madison prior to the execution of a sales transaction.

It is also agreed, in addition to the salary I am receiving from Madison Financial Corporation, I will receive 10% sales commission on all property sold, regardless who sells it, except residential property that will be located south of 145th Street, in which case I will receive 4% commission if sold by any other person.

During the term of the option period, all of the net revenues of the water works and sewer department shall be forwarded directly to Madison Guaranty for application toward the note, unless such facilities are sold sooner. Madison Financial Corporation will also be responsible for all taxes, special assessments, dues, insurance premiums, etc. during the period of this option.

I would appreciate your acknowledging and agreeing to the terms of the letter of agreement.

Sincerely,

Seth Ward

RE: Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan--"Wet"/"Dry" Issue

---

I. ISSUE PRESENTED

Given the location of the proposed site for the new brewery is the area "wet" or "dry?"

II. CONCLUSION

The proposed location for the brewery is within the old Union Township which was voted "dry" in 1953. Even though Union Township is no longer in existence and was incorporated into the larger Big Rock Township, the geographic area that was the old Union Township would probably retain its "dry" status. Moreover, the results of the election, as certified by the Election Commissioners and compiled in an order by the Pulaski County Court Judge, is on record with the County Clerk and in compliance with Arkansas' local option law, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 48-809.

RE: Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan/IDC

---

I. FACTS

Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association ("Madison Guaranty") purchased property ("IDC Development") owned by the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock ("IDC"). Industrial Services Company ("ISC"), a wholly owned subsidiary of IDC, furnished sewer and water service to a number of patrons who obtained their title directly or indirectly through the IDC chain of title. These patrons can be considered "residents" of the IDC Development. Madison Guaranty purchased ISC's sewer and water service and continues to furnish those services to various patrons within the IDC Development.

Madison Guaranty/IDC would like to sell water to a business outside the IDC Development and also to another real estate development, Maple Creek.

II. QUESTION PRESENTED

Is or should Madison Guaranty/IDC become a public utility and what is the effect of that characterization and can Madison

Guaranty/IDC sell water to a business outside the IDC Development and to another real estate development, Maple Creek?

III. CONCLUSION

Madison Guaranty/IDC is a public utility and as such is governed by various state laws and regulations. However, for purposes of the jurisdiction of the Arkansas Public Service Commission ("PSC"), Madison Guaranty/IDC would have to either submit itself to the jurisdiction of the PSC through a declaratory judgment action before the PSC or await PSC scrutiny in the event a patron complains to the PSC regarding rates charged or services rendered by Madison Guaranty/IDC. Many small water and sewage companies such as Madison Guaranty/IDC never become regulated by the PSC as "public utilities" even though they fall within the statutory definition.

Even if Madison Guaranty/IDC does not submit itself to or become regulated by the PSC, it is required to obtain licenses and permits from the Arkansas Board of Health and the Arkansas Pollution Control System.

Assuming an expansion of water and sewer services to customers outside the IDC Development does not impede or impair services to present patrons, Madison Guaranty/IDC is free to extend its services beyond the IDC Development.

IV. DISCUSSIONA. MADISON GUARANTY/IDC APPEARS TO BE A PUBLIC UTILITY.

One question raised is whether or not Madison Guaranty/IDC should become a public utility and what the effect of such a characterization would be. Under the common law and the Arkansas Legislature's statutory definition of a "public utility," Madison Guaranty/IDC, by its operation of the waterworks and sewer plant at the IDC Development, would appear to be a "public utility."

Generally speaking, a public utility has been described as a business organization which regularly supplies the public with some commodity or service such as electricity, gas, water, transportation, or telephone or telegraph service. 73B C.J.S. Public Utilities § 2. A well recognized test of whether an entity is a public utility is whether or not that entity holds itself out, expressly or impliedly, as engaged in the business of supplying a product or service to the public, as a class, or to any limited portion of it, as distinguished from holding itself out as serving or ready to serve only particular individuals. Natural Gas Service Co. v. SERV-YU Cooperative, 70 Ariz. 235, 219 P.2d 324 (1950).

The Arkansas Legislature has statutorily defined a "public utility" for purposes of state regulation of public utilities by the PSC. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 71-201(d)(2) (Repl. 1973) provides:

The term "public utility," when used in this Act, includes persons and corporations, or their lessees, trustees, and receivers, now or hereafter owning or operating in this state, equipment or facilities for:

(2) Diverting, developing, pumping, impounding, distributing, or furnishing water to, or for, the public for compensation.

(7) Maintaining a sewage collection system and/or a sewage treatment plant, intercepting sewers, outfall sewers, force mains, pumping stations, ejector stations, and other appurtenances necessary or useful for the collection and/or treatment, purification and disposal of the liquid and solid waste, sewage, night soil and industrial waste. Provided, nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to include sewerage facilities and equipment of cities and towns in the definition of public utility.

It is a fact question whether Madison Guaranty/IDC meets the statutory definition of a "public utility" and falls within the common law definition of a "public utility." From the facts presented, it would appear Madison Guaranty/IDC meets these definitions. It is irrelevant to the question of whether Madison Guaranty/IDC is a "public utility" that it has not submitted itself to the regulatory jurisdiction of the state or that the state has not yet assumed control and jurisdiction or has failed to or refused to assume such control over the corporation. Wisconsin Tract Co. v. Green Bay Canal Co., 188 Wis. 54, 205 N.W. 551 (1925). Similarly, the fact that the conduct of the enterprise in the past has been considered by the enterprise and the patrons as a purely private contract is not conclusive on the issue of whether or not the entity is a "public utility." Eagle Bus Lines v. Illinois Commerce Commission, 3 Ill. 2d 66, 119 N.E.2d 915 (1954). Given the determination that Madison Guaranty/IDC is a "public utility" for purposes of supplying water and sewer to the various residents of the real estate development, the next question is what is the effect of being a "public utility."

B. WHAT IS THE EFFECT OF BEING A PUBLIC UTILITY?

The first effect of being a "public utility" is that the utility comes within the jurisdiction of the PSC. As mentioned above, it would appear Madison Guaranty/IDC meets the statutory definition of a "public utility" for purposes of PSC jurisdiction. However, I had a telephone conversation with a member of the PSC legal staff to determine, as a matter of practice, whether Madison Guaranty/IDC comes within the PSC's jurisdiction. I was informed that there are many private, non-franchised companies providing water and sewage facilities to residents of unincorporated real estate developments who are not regulated by the PSC. I was informed that these providing companies rarely come to the attention of the PSC unless a patron lodges a formal complaint to the PSC regarding rates charged or services rendered. At that point, the PSC makes an initial factual determination as to whether the providing company is a "public utility" subject to the PSC's jurisdiction. The only other way the providing company becomes a "public utility" for purposes of PSC jurisdiction is to bring a declaratory judgment action before the PSC for such a determination. The PSC legal staff could not recall such a small providing company bringing such an action because of the costs involved and because those companies would not readily submit themselves to perceived burdensome regulation. For the purposes of this memo, assuming Madison Guaranty/IDC becomes a "public utility" regulated by the PSC, the following requirements must be met.

The first requirement entails regulation of rate making. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-204 requires that the rates of "public utilities" be reasonable and:

(b) Every public utility shall furnish, provide and maintain such adequate and efficient service instrumentalities, equipment and facilities and shall promote the safety, health, comfort, requirements and convenience of its patrons, employees and the public.

All rates must be billed in accordance with PSC schedules. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-205.1. Violation of this billing requirement can result in a civil sanction of $1,000.00. Moreover, each instance of violation shall constitute a separate violation. Provided, however, that in the case of a continued violation, each day's continuance shall not be deemed a separate violation. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-205.2 (Supp. 1985). All rates must be based on the reading of meters and all bills and statements must show the number of units charged for with an accompanying monetary sanction for violation of up to $50.00. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-212 (Repl. 1957). It is also illegal for a public utility to charge a disconnection fee with an accompanying monetary sanction for violation of up to $50.00. Ark. Stat. Ann. § § 73-204.1, 73-204.3 (Repl. 1957).

In addition, if the IDC Development ever became franchised as a municipality, the utility would be subject to purchase by the municipality. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-245 provides:

Any municipality shall have the power, subject to provisions of this act, to acquire by purchase or otherwise, or construct and operate a public utility plant and equipment, or any part thereof, for the production, transmission, delivery or furnishing of any public service.

If the utility and the municipality cannot reach a decision as to what is "just compensation" for the purchase of the utility, it will be determined by the PSC. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 73-247.

While many small water/sewer providers to unincorporated residential developments never become regulated by the PSC, there exists a certain danger in not complying with the above outlined requirements. Civil sanctions can be imposed by the PSC in the event of a formal complaint filed by a patron followed by a PSC determination that the offending company is a "public utility." On the other hand, costs saved by non-regulation may make the risks palatable.

Regardless of whether Madison Guaranty/IDC is a "public utility" for purposes of the PSC outlined above, Madison Guaranty/IDC is required to obtain licenses and permits from the Arkansas Board of Health and the Arkansas Pollution Control Commission in order to operate the water and sewer treatment facilities.

C. MADISON GUARANTY/IDC IS REQUIRED TO OBTAIN A WATER-WORKS OPERATOR'S LICENSE FROM THE ARKANSAS STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Regardless of whether or not Madison Guaranty/IDC is considered a "public utility" for purposes of regulation by the PSC, it is required to obtain a water-works operator's license from the Arkansas State Board of Health in order to avoid possible criminal penalties.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 71-1701 provides:

In order to safeguard the public health, all operators of municipal public water supplies from which water is sold, distributed, or otherwise offered for human consumption, whether such water supplies be publicly or privately owned and operated, shall be duly licensed and certified as competent by the Arkansas State Board of Health under provisions of this Act [§§ 71-1701 - 71-1713] and under such rules and regulations as said Board may adopt under the provisions of this Act.

The Act defines an "operator" as:

Any person who, during the performance of his regular duties, exercises individual judgment by which either directly or indirectly the safety, quality and quantity of water delivered from the water supply system might be affected. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 71-1702.

Although the statute states that such a water-works operator's license is required of a municipal water-works, telephone conversations with the Arkansas State Board of Health reveal that it would consider the Madison Guaranty/IDC water works which delivers water to the residents of a real estate development to be within the purview of Ark. Stat. Ann. § 71-1701. The Act also provides certain penalties for violation of the Act. As stated at Ark. Stat. Ann. § 71-1712:

As soon as this Act becomes a law, it shall be unlawful for any person, municipality, political subdivision, corporation, or any authority that furnishes water for domestic consumption to operate any type of water system unless the operator in charge is duly licensed and certified competent by the Arkansas State Board of Health, and it shall be unlawful for any person to perform the duties of such an operator without being duly licensed or to falsely represent himself as a licensed operator.

The Act provides for penalties of $10 to $100 and up to 30 days in the County Jail for violations.

D. MADISON GUARANTY/IDC IS REQUIRED TO OBTAIN A WASTE WATER TREATMENT PERMIT.

In addition to the water-works operator's license, the state would also require Madison Guaranty/IDC to obtain a waste water treatment permit if the sewage system results in the discharge into any waters of the state. Ark. Stat. Ann. § 82-1908 provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in any of the following acts without first having obtained a written permit from the Commission:

(a) To construct, install, modify or operate any disposal system or any part thereof or any extension or addition thereto that will discharge into any waters of the state.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 82-1902 defines "disposal system" as:

A system for disposing of sewage, industrial wastes, and other wastes including sewer systems and treatment works. "Sewer system" means pipelines, conduits, pumping stations and all other constructions, devices, and appliances appurtenant thereto, used for conducting sewage, industrial wastes or other wastes. "Treatment works" means any plant, disposal field, lagoon, dam, pumping station, constructed drainage ditch or surface water intercepting ditch, incinerator, area devoted to sanitary landfills, or other works not specifically mentioned herein, installed for the purpose of treating, stabilizing or disposing of sewage, industrial waste, or other wastes.

The question is whether or not the Madison Guaranty/IDC sewage system results in the discharge into any waters of the state. From conversations with the Arkansas Pollution Control Commission, invariably most disposal systems result in discharge into the waters of the state. However, this must be determined before Madison Guaranty/IDC becomes required to obtain the permit described above.

Ark. Stat. Ann. § 92-1963 provides for the obtaining of licenses from the Arkansas Pollution Control Commission under the rules and regulations of that Commission for the operation of a sewage disposal system.

E. MADISON GUARANTY/IDC MAY EXTEND WATER AND SEWAGE SERVICES TO COMPANIES OR RESIDENCES OUTSIDE THE DEVELOPMENT.

Even if Madison Guaranty/IDC would be considered a "public utility" for purposes of PSC jurisdiction and for other common law purposes, it can extend its services to other residences or businesses. A public utility may enter into contracts when reasonable and when not shown to have any tendency to injure the public it is now servicing. Twin City Co. v. Harding Glass Co., 283 U.S. 353, 51 S.Ct. 476, 75 L.Ed. 1112 (1931). This assumes the other potential patrons are not within a municipality which has given a franchise to another water-works operator. In discussions with the PSC legal staff, I was informed such an extension of services is normal and expected among PSC regulated water-works utilities and requires no prior commission approval unless a patron lodges a formal complaint that the extension of services resulted in diminished services to existing patrons.

V. SUMMARY

To summarize, Madison Guaranty/IDC, in all likelihood, meets the statutory and common law definition of a "public utility."

However, many small providing companies such as Madison Guaranty/IDC are never regulated by the PSC. In order to incur the PSC's active regulation, Madison Guaranty/IDC would bring a declaratory judgment action before the PSC. Otherwise, the PSC would never become aware of Madison Guaranty/IDC unless a patron lodged a formal complaint. PSC jurisdiction would entail substantial regulation particularly regarding rate making. The risk of non-compliance with PSC regulations is civil sanctions.

Notwithstanding PSC jurisdiction, Madison Guaranty/IDC is required to obtain licenses and permits from the State Board of Health and the Pollution Control Commission.

Finally, Madison Guaranty/IDC may extend its services to patrons outside the IDC Development assuming the new patrons are not within a municipality and such extension does not adversely affect service to existing patrons.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Hillary Clinton
FROM: Rick Donovan R.D.
DATE: March 4, 1986
RE: Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan/IDC

---

I. QUESTION PRESENTED

Does the fact that Madison Guaranty/IDC's potential water customers are within the Little Rock corporate city limits preclude the extension of services to those customers by Madison Guaranty/IDC?

II. CONCLUSION

Merely because the potential water customers are within the Little Rock corporate city limits does not preclude extension of water services by Madison Guaranty/IDC to those potential customers.

III. DISCUSSION

The question raised was whether or not the fact that the potential water customers of Madison Guaranty/IDC were within the corporate city limits of Little Rock would preclude extension of services to those customers. The concern was that the City of Little Rock Water Works would have the exclusive right to extend water services to patrons within the corporate city limits.

First of all, it should be pointed out that there is no state statute or municipal ordinance which grants the City of Little Rock Water Works such an exclusive right. Nor is there any case law which would establish an exclusive right. On the contrary, the common law precludes the municipality from enforcing such an exclusive right.

In researching this issue, I first had a telephone conversation with the legal staff of the Public Service Commission ("PSC"). I was informed by the legal staff of the PSC, when presented with the question addressed herein, that water utilities in Arkansas have no "allocated territories" such as electricity and natural gas. Thus, according to the PSC staff, there is no such thing as "exclusive territory" for a water utility and water utilities are free to offer services where they choose.

I then had a telephone conversation with a manager at the Little Rock Water Works. He informed me that persons within the City of Little Rock corporate city limits are free to obtain water from whatever source they want to. He explained that it is the policy of the City of Little Rock Water Works to install plant back up facilities, sources of supplies, treatment plants and transmission lines, and it is then up to the individual property owner to install distribution lines to "tie in" to city water. This can be done several different ways, but the usual method is for a subdivision to form a water improvement district. The City of Little Rock Water Works would work closely with the improvement district to see that city water is made available to the subdivision. The Little Rock Water Works spokesperson did state that they discourage private real estate development companies from providing water to its patrons because of the fear that people will not be getting the best service available.

As a general common law rule, a municipality has no authority to enact and enforce ordinances which are designed to compel everyone within the city limits to use municipally-supplied water, if and when available, and to prevent absolutely the repair, alteration, improvement, or operation of a privately owned water system. That is not to say that a municipality cannot use it's police powers to protect the health and safety of its citizens to prohibit the sale of water which is dangerous to the public health. 78 AM JUR. 2d WATER WORKS AND WATER COMPANIES § 3. Thus, in Midway v. Midway Nursing and Convalescent Center, Inc., 230 Ga. 777, 195 S.E.2d 452 (1973), the Georgia Supreme Court held that there is no authority, statutory or common law, whereby a city could compel the use of city water or connection to a city water system.

In fact, it is a general common law rule that a municipality cannot be compelled to extend its water to an entirely new subdivision within its territorial limits, absent any arbitrary or fraudulent conduct on the part of the city. 78 AM JUR. 2d WATER WORKS AND WATER COMPANY § 21. Thus, in Crownhill Homes, Inc. v. San Antonio, 433 S.W.2d 448 (Texas Civil Appeals, 1968), the Texas appellate court rejected the plaintiff real estate developer's argument that the City of San Antonio be compelled to supply city water to newly built subdivision within the corporate city limits. It was up to the real estate developer to find alternative methods for supplying water to the subdivision through a privately owned water system.

IV. SUMMARY

To summarize, merely because the potential Madison Guaranty/IDC water customers are within the Little Rock corporate city limits, Madison Guaranty/IDC is not precluded from extending its water services to those potential patrons. Not only is there no state statute or city ordinance which would preclude such an extension of Madison Guaranty/IDC's water services, but the common law general rule is that a municipality has no authority to enact an ordinance or to require persons within its territorial limits to use municipally supplied water to the exclusion of a privately owned system.

AGREEMENT

This Agreement made and entered into this ____ day of August, 1985, by and between INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY OF LITTLE ROCK, an Arkansas corporation ("IDC"), MADISON GUARANTY SAVINGS & LOAN ASSOCIATION, an Arkansas state chartered savings and loan association ("Madison" which reference shall include any affiliate of Madison to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder) and UNION NATIONAL BANK OF LITTLE ROCK, WORTHEN BANK AND TRUST COMPANY, N.A. and FIRST COMMERCIAL BANK, N.A. (all national banking associations and all hereafter collectively referred to as "the Banks").

In consideration of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, the parties do hereby agree, each with the other, and each intending to be legally and contractually bound, as follows:

1. Factual Matters. IDC is the owner of a substantial amount of real and personal property all located and having a situs in Pulaski County, Arkansas. References herein to the "IDC Property" refer to all such real and personal property owned by IDC described in Exhibit "1" attached hereto excepting only the so called "Timex Building" more particularly described on Exhibit "2" hereto and the "Cattle Barn

~~Note" also more particularly described on Exhibit "2"~~
 hereto. The Banks hold valid, perfected and enforceable encumbrances which encumber all of the IDC Property as well as the Timex Building and the ~~Cattle Barn Note~~ as collateral security for obligations owed by IDC to the Banks which obligations, including interest through the 31st day of July, 1985, total $2,159,739.

2. Agreement to Purchase and Sell. Madison agrees to purchase and IDC agrees to sell to Madison all of the IDC ~~Property~~ <sup>except the Timex Building and the</sup> ~~Property~~ The agreed upon purchase price is $1,750,000.00, all of which shall be payable in cash upon closing. IDC has recently contracted to sell a parcel of the IDC Property for a motel site ("Motel Site"). The property comprising the Motel Site is described on Exhibit <sup>"2"</sup> ~~"3"~~ hereto. The Motel Site would otherwise have been a part of the IDC Property ~~to~~ be conveyed to Madison but, in view of the already contracted for sale which is anticipated to close before the closing of the purchase and sale which is the subject of this Agreement, Madison has agreed that ~~in the event Madison receives a minimum of $150,000.00 from the Motel Site sale proceeds~~ IDC may retain 25% of the net sale proceeds received by IDC as a result of the Motel Site sale, ~~the sale of the Motel Site~~ The $150,000.00 minimum payment to Madison and any remaining net sale proceeds. After deducting the IDC

~~of 25% of the net sale proceeds, the remaining 75% of the net sale~~ <sup>75% of net sale</sup> retention, ~~not to exceed $50,000.00~~ will be delivered to

Madison at the closing of this transaction or, at Madison's option, credited against the purchase price.

If Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price, then the <sup>75% of net sale</sup> proceeds allocated to Madison will be delivered to the Banks at closing. Conveyance shall be made to Madison by IDC by general Warranty

Deed subject to recorded restrictions and easements.

~~at the closing, a policy of title insurance~~ <sup>at the closing, a policy of title insurance</sup> advanced by delivery, prior to closing, of a commitment, insurance

Madison's fee simple interest in the IDC Property subject only to recorded restrictions and easements, if ~~any~~ <sup>any</sup> the title insurance will reflect good and merchantable title to the IDC Property in IDC, ~~if~~ <sup>if</sup> objections are made to title. Seller shall have a reasonable time to meet the objections. Taxes and special assessments due on or before the closing date shall be paid by IDC. Current general taxes and special assessments shall be prorated as of the closing date based upon the last tax statement. Rental payments shall be prorated as of the closing date.

Madison certifies that it has inspected all of the IDC Property and is not relying upon any warranties, representations or statements of IDC as to age or physical condition of improvements ~~which are~~

~~shown to be in good condition, which will be located from original~~

~~inspection of the property.~~ The risk of loss or damage to the property by fire or other casualty occurring up to the time of transfer of title on the closing date is assumed by IDC. IDC shall vacate the property and deliver possession to Madison on the closing date. IDC shall pay for the title insurance ~~and shall pay the~~ ~~real estate broker's commission due to Hathaway &~~

~~Company for services rendered with respect to this~~ ~~sale.~~ All other closing costs shall be paid by the parties in accordance with custom and usage for apportioning such expenses between Sellers and Buyers in like transactions in Pulaski County, Arkansas.

Madison shall be responsible for ~~only~~ those commissions, fees, finder's fees, or other such fees contracted for by Madison with third parties and,

specifically, with respect to the property.
Madison shall ~~not~~ be responsible ~~or obligated in any~~

3. Agreements Between the Banks and IDC. IDC shall pay to the Banks (a) the entire net proceeds of sale received by IDC, and (b) Madison's share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site, as described in the preceding paragraph, if Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price for the IDC Property instead of receiving its share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site. In consideration of said payments, the Banks agree to release the encumbrances which they hold on the IDC Property in a form satisfactory to Madison. It is understood and agreed, however, that the Banks will retain their encumbrances on the Timex Building <sup>and Land</sup> and on the Cattle Barn Note. IDC agrees that it will utilize its share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site to be received by it <sup>and proceeds of the sale of the Cattle Barn</sup> to renovate, repair and restore the Timex Building <sup>and Land</sup> to good condition. IDC agrees that it will undertake to cause such renovation, repairs and restoration to take place as speedily as is reasonably possible and will immediately commence efforts to sell the Timex Building <sup>and Land</sup> and the Cattle Barn Note (separately or together) for the best price obtainable for each such asset. IDC will not become will agree to advance to IDC such funds as he necessary to make the Timex building if the case proceeds of the motel site sale and the 1627th sale contractually obligated to sell either such asset > without the advance written consent and approval of the Banks which consent and approval will not be unreasonably withheld. Upon sale of either or both of the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note, IDC will pay all expenses incident to such sale and the net proceeds of each such sale shall be shared equally by IDC and the Banks. IDC covenants ~~to~~

~~to obtain all necessary corporate~~
~~approvals and authorizations of the actions required of~~ IDC by this Agreement. If both the Timex Building, <sup>and the</sup> and the Cattle Barn Note have not been sold by 21 30 1985

~~August 19, 1985~~, then the Banks shall be relieved of any obligations to share the proceeds thereof with IDC and the Banks shall be free to pursue whatever remedies are available to them to realize upon such collateral security.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have executed this Agreement this 19th day of August, 1985.

AGREEMENT

This Agreement made and entered into this ____ day of August, 1985 by and between Industrial Development Company of Little Rock, an Arkansas corporation ("IDC"), Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association, an Arkansas <sup>B.C. I.C.</sup> state <sup>I.C.</sup> chartered <sup>I.C.</sup> Savings and <sup>I.C.</sup> Loan Association ("Madison" which reference shall include any affiliate of Madison to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder) and Union National Bank of Little Rock, Worthen Bank and Trust Company, N.A. and First Commercial Bank, N.A. (all national banking associations and all hereafter collectively referred to as "the Banks").

In consideration of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, the parties do hereby agree, each with the other, and each intending to be legally and contractually bound, as follows:

1. Factual Matters. IDC is the owner of a substantial amount of real and personal property all located and having ~~its~~ <sup>its</sup> ~~in~~ in Polk County, Arkansas. References herein to the "IDC Property" refer to all such real and personal property owned by IDC excepting only the so called "Timex Building" more particularly described on Exhibit "1" hereto and the "Cattle Barn Note" also more particularly described on Exhibit "1" hereto.

The Banks hold valid, perfected and enforceable encumbrances which encumber all of the IDC Property as serenity

- well as the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Motel <sup>as collateral for obligation owed by IDC to the L</sup>
2. Agreement to Purchase and Sell. Madison agrees to purchase and IDC agrees to sell all of the IDC Property. The agreed upon purchase price is $1,750,000.00, all of which shall be payable in cash upon closing. IDC has recently contracted to sell a parcel of property for a motel site ("Motel Site").
The property comprising the Motel Site ~~has~~ <sup>is</sup> described 31st day of A. S. 1880, ...

on Exhibit "2" hereto. The Motel Site would otherwise have been a part of the IDC Property but, in view of the already contracted for sale which is anticipated to close before the closing of the purchase and sale which is the subject of this Agreement, Madison has agreed that IDC may retain 25% of the net sales proceeds received by IDC as a result of the Motel Site sale. The remaining 75% of the net sales proceeds will be delivered to Madison at the closing of this transaction or, at Madison's option, credited against the purchase price. If Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price, then the 75% of net sales proceeds will be delivered to the Banks at closing. Conveyance shall be made to Madison by IDC by general Warranty Deed subject to recorded restrictions and easements. IDC shall furnish at its cost a complete abstract of title or, at IDC's option, in lieu of the abstract, a policy of title insurance. Submission of an abstract shall not constitute a waiver of this option. The abstract or title insurance will reflect good and merchantable title to the IDC Property in IDC subject only to such minor defects, not substantially adversely affecting the value of the IDC Property, as are usually found in properties of the size and quantity of the IDC Property in Pulaski County, Arkansas. If objections are made to title, Seller shall have a reasonable time to meet the objections or to furnish title insurance. Taxes and special assessments due on or before the closing date shall be paid by IDC. Current general taxes and special assessments shall be prorated as of the closing date based upon the last tax statement. Rental payments shall be prorated as of the closing date. Madison certifies that it has inspected all of the IDC Property and is not relying upon any

- warranties, representations or statements of IDC as to age or physical condition of improvements. The risk of loss or damage to the property by fire or other casualty occurring up to the time of transfer of title on the closing date is assumed by IDC. IDC shall vacate the property and deliver possession to Madison on the closing date. IDC shall pay for the abstract or title insurance and shall pay the real estate broker's commission due to Hathaway & Company for services rendered with respect to this sale. All other closing costs shall be paid by the parties in accordance with custom and usage for ~~appropriating~~ <sup>apportioning</sup> such expenses between Sellers and Buyers in like transactions in Pulaski County, Arkansas. Madison shall be responsible for any commissions, fees, finder's fees, or other such fees except the commission payable to Hathaway & Company described above. The closing shall occur not later than April 15, 1985. Time is of the essence.
3. Agreements Between the Banks and IDC. IDC shall pay to the Banks (a) the entire net proceeds of sale received by IDC, and (b) the 75% of net sale proceeds of the Motel Site, as described in the preceding paragraph, if Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price for the IDC Property instead of receiving said 75% of net sale proceeds of the Motel Site. In consideration of said payments, the Banks agree to release the encumbrances which they hold on the IDC Property. It is understood and agreed, however, that the Banks will retain their encumbrances on the Timex Building and on the Cattle Barn Note. IDC agrees that it will utilize the 25% of net sale proceeds of the Motel Site to be received by it to renovate, repair and restore the Timex Building to good condition. IDC agrees that it will undertake to cause such renovation, repairs and restoration to take place as speedily as is reasonably possible and will immediately commence efforts to sell the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note (separately or together) for the best price obtainable for each such asset. IDC will not become contractually obligated to sell either such asset without the advance written consent and approval of the Banks which consent and approval will not be unreasonably withheld. Upon sale of either or both of the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note, IDC will pay all expenses incident to such sale and the net proceeds of <sup>each</sup> such sale shall be shared equally by IDC and the Banks. IDC covenants (and the officer executing for IDC personally covenants) to use its and his best efforts to obtain all necessary corporate approvals and authorizations of the actions required of IDC by this Agreement. )

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have executed this Agreement this ____ day of August, 1995.

AGREEMENT

This Agreement made and entered into this 19th day of August, 1985, by and between INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY OF LITTLE ROCK, an Arkansas corporation ("IDC"), MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION, an Arkansas state chartered savings and loan association ("Madison" which reference shall include any entity or individual to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder) and UNION NATIONAL BANK OF LITTLE ROCK, WORTHEN BANK AND TRUST COMPANY, N.A. and FIRST COMMERCIAL BANK, N.A. (all national banking associations and all hereafter collectively referred to as "the Banks").

In consideration of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, the parties do hereby agree, each with the other, and each intending to be legally and contractually bound, as follows:

1. Factual Matters. IDC is the owner of a substantial amount of real ~~and personal~~ property all located and having a situs in Pulaski County, Arkansas. References herein to the "IDC Property" refer to all such real ~~and personal~~ property owned by IDC ~~described in Exhibit "1" attached hereto~~ excepting only the so called "Timex Building <sup>and Land</sup>" more particularly described on Exhibit "1" hereto. ~~and the Carle Barn~~

Note" also more particularly described on Exhibit "2" hereto. The Banks hold valid, perfected and enforceable encumbrances which encumber all of the IDC Property as well as the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note as collateral security for obligations owed by IDC to the Banks which obligations, including interest through the 31st day of July, 1985, total $2, __, __.

2. Agreement to Purchase and Sell. Madison agrees to purchase and IDC agrees to sell to Madison all of the IDC Property. The agreed upon purchase price is $1,750,000.00, all of which shall be payable in cash upon closing. IDC has recently contracted to sell a parcel of the IDC Property for a motel site ("Motel Site"). The property comprising the Motel Site is described on Exhibit "3" hereto. The Motel Site would otherwise have been a part of the IDC Property to be conveyed to Madison but, in view of the already contracted for sale which is anticipated to close before the closing of the purchase and sale which is the subject of this Agreement, Madison has agreed that to the extent Madison receives a minimum of $150,000.00 from the Motel Site sale proceeds, IDC may retain 25% of the net sale proceeds received by IDC as a result of the Motel Site sale not to exceed $50,000.00. The $150,000.00 minimum payment to Madison and any remaining net sale proceeds, after deducting the IDC retention ^not to exceed $50,000.00 will be delivered to Madison at the closing of this transaction or, at Madison's option, credited against the purchase price. If Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price, then the proceeds ^allocated to Madison will be delivered to the Banks at closing. Conveyance shall be made to Madison by IDC by general Warranty Deed subject to recorded restrictions and easements. IDC shall furnish at its cost a complete abstract of title or, at IDC's option, in lieu of the abstract, a policy of title insurance. Submission of an abstract shall not constitute a waiver of this option. The abstract or title insurance will reflect good and merchantable title to the IDC Property in IDC. ^ If objections are made to title, Seller shall have a reasonable time to meet the objections or to furnish title insurance. Taxes and special assessments due on or before the closing date shall be paid by IDC. Current general taxes and special assessments shall be prorated as of the closing date based upon the last tax statement. Rental payments shall be prorated as of the closing date. Madison certifies that it has inspected all of the IDC Property and is not relying upon any warranties, representations or statements of IDC as to age or physical condition of improvements with regard to physical defects, which could be detected from a visual inspection of the property. The risk of loss or damage to the property by fire or other casualty occurring up to the time of transfer of title on the closing date is assumed by IDC. IDC shall vacate the property and deliver possession to Madison on the closing date. IDC shall pay for the abstract or title insurance and shall pay the real estate broker's commission due to Hathaway & Company for services rendered with respect to this sale. All other closing costs shall be paid by the parties in accordance with custom and usage for apportioning such expenses between Sellers and Buyers in like transactions in Pulaski County, Arkansas. Madison shall be responsible for only those commissions, fees, finder's fees, or other such fees contracted for by Madison with third parties and Madison shall not be responsible or obligated in any way for the commission payable to Hathaway & Company described above. The closing shall occur not later than ^two weeks from the date hereof. Time is of the essence.

3. Agreements Between the Banks and IDC. IDC shall pay to the Banks (a) the entire net proceeds of sale received by IDC, and (b) ^Madison's share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site, as described in the preceding paragraph, if Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price for the IDC Property instead of receiving ^its share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site. In consideration of said payments, the Banks agree to release the encumbrances which they hold on the IDC Property in a form satisfactory to Madison. It is understood and agreed, however, that the Banks will retain their encumbrances on the Timex Building and on the Cattle Barn Note. IDC agrees that it will utilize ^its share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site to be received by it to renovate, repair and restore the Timex Building to good condition. IDC agrees that it will undertake to cause such renovation, repairs and restoration to take place as speedily as is reasonably possible and will immediately commence efforts to sell the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note (separately or together) for the best price obtainable for each such asset. IDC will not become contractually obligated to sell either such asset without the advance written consent and approval of the Banks which consent and approval will not be unreasonably withheld. Upon sale of either or both of the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note, IDC will pay all expenses incident to such sale and the net proceeds of each such sale shall be shared equally by IDC and the Banks. IDC covenants (and the officer executing for IDC personally covenants) to use its and his best efforts to obtain all necessary corporate approvals and authorizations of the actions required of IDC by this Agreement. If both the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note have not been sold by _____, 198__, then the Banks shall be relieved of any obligations to share the proceeds thereof with IDC and the Banks shall be free to pursue whatever remedies are available to them to realize upon such collateral security.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have executed this Agreement this ____ day of August, 1985.

AGREEMENT

This Agreement made and entered into this 13th day of September, 1985 by and between INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY OF LITTLE ROCK, an Arkansas corporation ("IDC"), MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION, an Arkansas state chartered savings and loan association ("Madison" which reference shall include any entity or individual to whom Madison might elect to assign its rights hereunder) and UNION NATIONAL BANK OF LITTLE ROCK, WORTHEN BANK AND TRUST COMPANY, N.A. and FIRST COMMERCIAL BANK, N.A. (all national banking associations and all hereafter collectively referred to as "the Banks").

In consideration of the mutual covenants and agreements herein contained, the parties do hereby agree, each with the other, and each intending to be legally and contractually bound, as follows:

1. Factual Matters. IDC is the owner of a substantial amount of real property all located and having a situs in Pulaski County, Arkansas. References herein to the "IDC Property" refer to all such real property owned by IDC excepting only the so called "Times Building" more particularly described on Exhibit "1" herethin. References herein to the "Times Building" are meant to include the land and improvements described on Exhibit 1. The Banks hold valid, perfected and enforceable encumbrances which encumber all of the IDC Property as well as the Times Building as collateral security for obligations owed by IDC to the Banks which obligations, including interest through the 31st day of July, 1985, total $2,259,739.
2. Agreement to Purchase and Sell. Madison agrees to purchase and IDC agrees to sell to Madison all of the IDC Property. The agreed upon purchase price is

(SIGNED)

$1,750,000.00, all of which shall be payable via certified check upon closing. The certified check will be made payable to "IDC" and "the Banks". IDC has recently contracted to sell a parcel of the IDC Property for a motel site ("Motel Site"). The property comprising the Motel Site is described on Exhibit "2" hereto. The Motel Site would otherwise have been a part of the IDC Property to be conveyed to Madison but, in view of the already contracted for sale which is anticipated to close before the closing of the purchase and sale which is the subject of this Agreement, Madison has agreed that IDC may retain 25% of the net sale proceeds received by IDC as a result of the Motel Site sale. After deducting the IDC retention of 25% of the net sale proceeds, the remaining 75% of such net sale proceeds will be delivered to Madison at the closing of this transaction or, at Madison's option, credited against the purchase price. If Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price, then the 75% of net sales proceeds allocated to Madison will be delivered to the Banks at closing. Conveyance shall be made to Madison by IDC by general Warranty Deed subject to recorded restrictions and easements. IDC shall furnish at its cost a complete abstract of title or, at IDC's option, in lieu of the abstract, a policy of title insurance. Submission of an abstract shall not constitute a waiver of this option. The abstract or title insurance will reflect good and merchantable title to the IDC Property in IDC subject only to recorded easements and restrictions. If objections are made to title, Seller shall have a reasonable time to meet the objections or to furnish title insurance. Taxes and special assessments due on or before the closing date shall be paid by IDC. Current general taxes and special assessments shall be prorated as of the closing date based upon the last tax statement. Rental payments shall be prorated as of the closing date. Madison certifies that it has inspected all of the IDC Property and is not relying upon any warranties, representations or statements of IDC as to age or physical condition of improvements. The risk of loss or damage to the property by fire or other casualty occurring up to the time of transfer of title on the closing date is assumed by IDC. IDC shall vacate the property and deliver possession to Madison on the closing date. IDC shall pay for the title insurance or for bringing the abstracts up to date. All other closing costs shall be paid by the parties in accordance with custom and usage for apportioning such expenses between Sellers and Buyers in like transactions in Pulaski County, Arkansas. Madison shall be responsible for those commissions, fees, finder's fees, or other such fees contracted for by Madison with third parties. IDC shall be responsible for and shall pay the commission payable to Hathaway & Company. The closing shall occur not later than September 30, 1985. Time is of the essence.

3. Agreements Between the Banks and IDC. IDC shall pay to the Banks (a) the entire net proceeds of sale received by IDC, and (b) Madison's share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site, as described in the preceding paragraph, if Madison elects to receive a credit against the purchase price for the IDC Property instead of receiving its share of the net sale proceeds of the Motel Site. In consideration of said payments, the Banks agree to release the encumbrances which they hold on the IDC Property to be conveyed to Madison in a form satisfactory to Madison. It is understood and agreed, however, that the Banks will retain their encumbrances on the Timex Building and on a certain promissory note in the face amount of $297,500.00 made by Richardson Livestock Commission Co., Inc. and payable to IDC ("the Cattle Barn Note"). The Banks agree to loan up to and not to exceed Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000.00) to IDC for the purpose of improvements to the "Timex Building". Payment in full on proceeds drawn under this extension of credit will be due and payable two years from execution of the promissory note. Advances of proceeds under the extension of credit for specific repairs to the "Timex Building" will require prior approval of the Banks. Proceeds due IDC on the Cattle Barn Note will be applied by IDC in reduction of the $250,000.00 extension of credit. IDC agrees that it will undertake to cause such repairs to take place as speedily as is reasonably possible and will immediately commence efforts to sell the Timex Building and the Cattle Barn Note (separately or together) for the best price obtainable for each such asset. Upon sale of the Timex Building, IDC will repay the balance owed on the $250,000.00 extension of credit, will pay all expenses incident to such sale and the net proceeds of each such sale shall be shared equally by IDC and the Banks. If the Timex Building has not been sold by September 30, 1987, then the Banks shall be relieved of any obligations to share the proceeds thereof with IDC and IDC shall deliver to the Banks a warranty deed to the "Timex Building". The Banks will share in 50% of the ultimate proceeds of the Cattle Barn Note. IDC covenants that it has obtained all necessary corporate approvals and authorizations of the actions required of IDC by this agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the parties hereto have executed this agreement this 13th day of September, 1965.

OPTION TO PURCHASE REAL ESTATE

This option granted this 1st day of May, 1986, by SCOT WARD and YVONNE ANNA WARD, his wife (collectively "Grantor"), to MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION ("Optionee"),

W-I-T-N-E-S-S-E-T-H:

1. GRANT OF OPTION. In consideration of Optionee's payment to the Grantor of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), and other good and valuable consideration, the receipt and adequacy of which is hereby acknowledged, Grantor hereby grants to Optionee an exclusive and irrevocable Option to purchase the following described property together with all buildings and improvements thereon, situated in the City of Little Rock, Pulaski County, Arkansas, to-wit:

Part of Tracts 27 & 28, Holman Acres, Pulaski County, Arkansas.

2. PURCHASE PRICE. The purchase price for the property hereinabove described, together with all improvements thereon, shall be Four Hundred Thousand Dollars ($400,000.00).

3. EXPIRATION DATE. This Option shall expire at 6:00 o'clock, P.M., Central Time, on August 1, 1986.

4. FAILURE TO EXERCISE OPTION. If Optionee does not exercise this Option as herein provided, all sums paid by him hereunder shall be retained by the Grantor free of all claims of Optionee, and neither party shall have any further rights of claims against the other.

5. EXERCISE OF OPTION. This option shall be exercised by Optionee's delivering to the Grantor written notice of such exercise on or before the expiration date, or any extension thereof, or by Optionee's mailing such written notice of exercise by certified mail to Grantor at least two (2) days before the expiration date, or any extension thereof; and such notice, if so mailed, shall be deemed valid and effective whether or not it actually is delivered to Grantor prior to the expiration date, or any extension thereof.

6. CLOSING REQUIREMENTS. In the event of Optionee's exercise of this Option:

a. Closing will occur within 30 days after the exercise of this Option, which date may be extended by mutual agreement;

b. The Grantor shall deliver at closing to Optionee, or his nominee, a general warranty deed conveying good and marketable title in fee simple to the aforesaid premises, free and clear of all liens, encumbrances and tenancies, except those for streets and utilities and tenancies which may be disclosed by Grantor to Optionee prior to the granting of this Option;

c. Taxes and assessments, if any, due on or before the closing date shall be paid by Grantor. Taxes and assessments, if any, for 1986 shall be prorated as of the closing date;

d. Grantor, at Grantor's sole expense, shall furnish Optionee, within 30 days after exercise of the Option, a complete abstract certified to a current date, or at Grantor's option, a commitment for an owner's title insurance policy convertible at closing to an owner's policy issued on ALTA Form B, 1970, reflecting merchantable title satisfactory to Optionee's attorney. In the event an abstract is furnished and an examination of title to said property shall disclose that the same is not good and marketable, and if the cause of such unmarketability shall not be removed by Grantor prior to the date fixed for closing, then Grantor may exercise his option to furnish Optionee a policy of title insurance satisfactory to Optionee. If marketable title cannot be conveyed at closing, any monies paid by Optionee on account of the purchase price of said property, including any sums paid as consideration for the granting of this Option, shall be refunded to Optionee;

e. The risk of loss, damage, condemnation, or destruction of the premises or improvements thereon by fire, or otherwise, until closing shall be on Grantor;

f. Revenue stamps to be placed on the Deed shall be at the expense of Grantor.

7. PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE. At closing, Optionee will pay Grantor in cash an amount equal to the purchase price set out in accordance with Paragraph 2 hereof.

8. NOTICES. Any notices required hereunder shall be effective if given to the parties hereto at the following addresses, or such other address as either party may subsequently designate in writing:

OPTIONEE: Madison Financial Corporation
1308 South Main
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

GRANTOR: Seth Ward
16th & Main
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

9. ASSIGNMENT. This Option, before or after its exercise, may be assigned by Optionee without the prior written consent of Grantor.

The CHAIRMAN. She has no statement.

Senator SARBANES. Ms. Strayhorn, I think if you pull that microphone closer to you, we will be able to hear you better. That's a little better, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Strayhorn, Mr. Chertoff is our Counsel and he will initially be asking you some questions.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Good morning.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Good morning and thank you for coming. Ms. Strayhorn, in 1985, you went to work for Jim McDougal; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. As a matter of fact, 11 years ago this month, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was your job with Mr. McDougal?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Secretary.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How long did you work with Mr. McDougal?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Approximately 1½ years.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you first came to work for him, where was his office?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It was in the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan building, a half flight above the lobby.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there a time that he moved his office?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Temporarily.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that in February 1986?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Sometime around then, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did he move it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. He moved to the sales office at Castle Grande.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where was that located? There's a little map off to your right, it shows 145th Street. Was the trailer off 145th Street?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir, just east of number 4 parcel.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was Mr. McDougal's reason for relocating his office in February 1986?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Madison Guaranty didn't have a lot of room and office space to accommodate a number of examiners. His office was large and had a conference table. He was willing to do that to make room for the examiners.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was part of the problem also that he really didn't want to be around too much in case the examiners had questions?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I don't think he had any objection to answering questions. The objection was answering them one at a time. I think he had rather they accumulate their questions and pose them at one time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He didn't want to be at the office so that they could come to him with questions as they came up; he wanted them to be collected and then at the end he would answer them?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know if that was a big concern, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember seeing Governor Clinton at the Castle Grande trailer?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Only on one occasion, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was after you went out to the trailer to be in the office along with Mr. McDougal; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, that's true.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us about that visit by Governor Clinton.

Ms. STRAYHORN. There's not a whole lot to tell. My husband just reminded me last night that the Governor and some members of his staff visited some industrial plants in Sheridan, one of which my husband was employed at the time, and as a matter of fact he stopped by on the way back to Little Rock for a short visit.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, tell us about the visit.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know if there's a lot to tell. I was busy. You know, they were only interested in the commercial development, it appeared.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say "interested in the commercial development," Governor Clinton came into the trailer?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe he came in for a short time. As I say, I was busy, I was answering the phone and pretty much doing other duties, so it was no really big affair.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the Governor introduce himself to you?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Not on that occasion, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. McDougal leave with the Governor?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think they may have gone to lunch, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. McDougal tell you afterward that he had given Mr. Clinton a tour of some of the property there?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think he ever really told me specifically. I probably made that assumption that he was looking at some of the industrial sites. It was a nice development and, you know, something that could improve Little Rock.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What kind of development was it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, actually it started out to be a fairly heavy development—Levi Strauss, and the Siemens Allis plant were already there, and it looked like it had a lot of potential.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were also going to put up like a mobile home area or a home development in the area?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir, that was separate from the commercial development.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. McDougal mention to you about giving Governor Clinton a tour?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't recall. I may have made that assumption on my own, because it would have been beneficial to Little Rock and Arkansas.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, Ms. Strayhorn, let me make sure someone gives you a copy of your interview that you had with the RTC in April 1994. I think you may have it but maybe someone can go down and help the witness find page 47.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Would it be in this portfolio?

Mr. CHERTOFF. It might be, but we'll give you some help. Do you remember being questioned or interviewed by some investigators a couple of years ago from the RTC, from some Government agency involving banks?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I have been interviewed so many times I have lost count.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sure that's true. They recorded the conversation. I think they must have told you that, and you stated:

Bill Clinton, the only other time I remember seeing him was—or even talking to him on the telephone, I mean, he just—he didn't call a lot, but—but was out at the Castle Grande sales office.

I gather that's the office, the trailer you're talking about that Mr. McDougal was in?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir, I believe that's what I was referring to.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then you stated:

He dropped in and, as I recall, I think they went up the street to the Little Plate lunch place and had lunch, and Jim said something about giving him a tour. I assumed it was a commercial property because I think at the time there was a steel mill or steel firm was looking to come in and they were looking at the property out there, so I think he might have been interested in the industrial part of it, but that was kind of a non-event thing too, you know.

What I'm interested in here, and since this is your statement to the investigators a couple of years ago, I understand you were assuming it was a commercial property, but your statement to the investigators was that Jim said something about giving him a tour. I take it you stand by what you said to the investigators?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It's just very possible, my recollection a few years earlier probably was better than it is today.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember a Lisa Raglin?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, the name is familiar but I'm—I can't quite put her in a capacity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did she work at the savings and loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Lisa Raglin.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did she work with computers at the savings and loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. You know, I'm sorry, my mind is at a blank. I'm sure she worked there but I can't recall exactly in what capacity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you involved in supervising her at all? Does that ring a bell?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think—well, I can't remember right now. I'm just a blank. I haven't heard that name in quite some time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. She was also interviewed as part of one of these investigations. She worked as a computer loan processor at the savings and loan during the period from late 1984 into 1986. I want to read you a portion of her statement, which I think you have before you. It's page 3 of her statement, Senate 22348. This refers back before Mr. McDougal moved to the trailer, so it's while they were still in the building. Let me send someone down to help you find the page. It's page 3.

Senator SARBANES. Is this Ms. Strayhorn's testimony?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No, this is Ms. Raglin's statement.

I'm going to ask her a question about it and I'm going to direct her attention to it. I think we'll send someone down to sit with her and help her find this stuff.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you say testimony?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No, it's a statement of interview by—

Ms. STRAYHORN. Lisa Raglin?

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's correct. A statement of interview, memorandum of interview. It's also accompanied by a typewritten version of notes from the interview, and I'm going to read from the third page of the memorandum of interview. The institution—

Senator SARBANES. Michael, who is this interview with?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Lisa Raglin, who worked at Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan.

Senator SARBANES. No, who did the interview?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Pillsbury Madison & Sutro. It states:

The institution had many fundraisers in the lobby. To her knowledge, many of these fundraisers were for the campaign contributions to Bill Clinton. Raglin remembered that Clinton came by on a regular basis, sometimes in jogging attire or business suit but on a regular monthly routine.

Now do you have a similar recollection?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know about her recollection, but I would not agree with—that was not my perception, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was not your perception?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember there being fundraisers?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I only knew of one. It was kind of a small affair. In fact, I believe it was shortly after I came to work for Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That would have been in the early spring of 1985?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't recall exactly the date, but it was early on in my employment, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where was that held?

Ms. STRAYHORN. In the lobby of the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was Mr. Clinton there?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't remember his being there. I assume he probably was but I don't remember seeing him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you were at the savings and loan, did you ever hear anything about Whitewater Development Corporation?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Of course.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who did you hear it from?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Mr. McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he—I'm sorry, go ahead.

Ms. STRAYHORN. It was listed on his financial statements.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. McDougal's financial statements?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Pardon me?

Mr. CHERTOFF. On whose financial statements was it listed?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Mr. McDougal's.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What kind of financial statements?

Ms. STRAYHORN. A regular financial statement that I prepared.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What, if anything, did you hear or learn about Whitewater Development when you were at the savings and loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Not a whole lot. As far as I could see, it was pretty much a dead issue, and did not receive a lot of attention as far as I could tell. Mr. McDougal was busy with the Financial Corporation's development and I was aware of the Whitewater Development but it just didn't appear to be a real vibrant going thing. It was a put-back-in-the-mothballs issue at that point.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What is it that you heard about it? Did you know that the Clinton's were partners in it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I knew that at some time, but I can't recall when exactly I knew they were partners.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know how you found out?

Ms. STRAYHORN. After I researched some delinquent tax bills from Marion County, I figured that they were partners prior to that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you research those delinquent tax bills?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, like I say, I don't think that development had been given a lot of attention, and I had to research to see—some of those lots apparently were sold on purchase agreements, and the taxes had become default and Susan asked me to attempt to get the billings on those so that she could resolve that issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was Susan McDougal?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did she tell you that Mrs. Clinton was complaining about this issue of the taxes being paid?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I don't recall that she mentioned that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you get the impression in any other way from anybody, including perhaps Mrs. Clinton herself, that Mrs. Clinton was concerned about the way taxes were being paid or other payments were being made with respect to this Whitewater project?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm not sure Mrs. Clinton was even aware.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm asking you, did you become aware from any source that there was a concern on the part of Mrs. Clinton about the way these taxes were being paid or not being paid?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Right now, I don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. McDougal mention it to you?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I just don't remember. It's possible, and I'm sure you've probably got a document typed or something to that effect. I don't remember, it was not a significant issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, you remember a time in the fall of 1985 when the financial corporation was involved in the purchase of property from the Industrial Development Company?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember that the actual purchase was done by having part of the property purchased in the name of Seth Ward and part of the property purchased in the name of Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood the reason for that was in order to circumvent or get around the 6 percent investment limitation that applied to Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Counselor, I was involved in the investigation, I'm not sure what I knew at that time or the knowledge that was acquired after the investigation. I have a little problem distinguishing when I knew what. I was aware that there was a purchase, I was aware that Mr. Ward was holding some of the property, but there were also other people that had purchased the property.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Ward was holding the property on behalf of Madison Financial, and McDougal?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I cannot say personally that he was holding it on behalf of Madison Financial. I don't know that anybody told me directly that that's what it was, but, you know, I can—

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's a pretty good assumption, you came to realize that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, from documents I did and various pieces of information, I more or less came to my own assumptions. I don't know if anybody ever really told me. I can't remember at this time. I mean, that was 11 years ago.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, you also came to understand at some point, and I understand that you were here as a secretary, you were not someone who was a mover and a shaker at the bank, but you understood that after the property was acquired, they started to sell it off pretty quickly; right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that the way in which they sold it off was they gave loans to the purchaser so that in effect it was kind of a shell game?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I have difficulty with the terminology. I think all this was documented. I think I even produced a paper trail for the Justice Department in the previous indictment against Mr. McDougal and others. I mean, it was an extensive investigation and we reviewed all the transactions, and I produced documents under a subpoena to—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, again, I'm going to ask you if we can show you page 120 of your recorded interview with the RTC, and I understand you've been through this before, but this is a different investigation and we're looking at different things. It states:

Question: And did you get the feeling from looking at that stuff that all the money was being moved around among accounts at Madison?

Answer: In some cases, yes. Some of the funds went to pay off loans and then other loans were made.

Question: It looked like a shell game. Not to interrupt, but did it look like a shell game?

Answer: Yeah, what I understand a shell game to be. Particularly the Seth Ward loans.

Question: Right, because Fulbright's sale closed and then Castle Water and Sewer closed and that paid off the Ward loan and then they had to get another project done to pay off those loans and it seemed it would be building on itself; right?

Answer: And the one piece of property that Seth Ward ended up with, I mean, he ended up with a piece of property free and clear, and we took—after the Seth Ward trial, I did go and record the deed to the property behind the—[and it's blank] that I think it was 28 acres or something, he deeded that back because it was collateral on a $400,000 loan plus it was collateral on a $70,000 loan plus then he had the unsecured $90,000 loan that he really was liable on. I think they deducted that from the judgment. But that was the worst-case scenario that I've ever seen. In fact, I had to do a schedule so that I could keep up with it, and there was the airplane loan that was real fun to investigate, too. And I think the airplane actually came from Chris Wade to start with.

Do you remember all this?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, and I believe we produced documents. We could be bogged down here for weeks rehearsing all the transactions. I didn't make any assumptions as to whether they were wrong or that, but yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You stand by your statement, I take it, a couple of years ago to the investigators that yeah, what I understand a shell game to be, particularly the Seth Ward loans? You said that. It was recorded.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, yes, a shell game I think is used loosely, but I don't even know what a shell game is, particularly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's a pyramid scheme, a Ponzi scheme. It's when you take the pea and you put it under the shells and you move it around so quickly that the sucker doesn't know where the pea is. That's what a shell game is.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think the documents speak for themselves.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now that gets us to the issue of the documents, so let me turn to some of those. You, in fact, became involved testifying as a witness at a trial involving Seth Ward and a dispute he had with Madison Financial, right, or Madison Guaranty; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm not sure who was named in the suit but it was directed toward Madison, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was called Ward v. Madison; right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It had to do with Ward's claiming commissions for his participation or his interest in the sale of some of these properties; right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. An issue came up concerning an option agreement. Do you remember that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You testified in the trial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you actually shown the option agreement?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Do you not have the transcript of the trial?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, I have a transcript of the trial. I'm trying to ask you whether at any point before the trial when you were preparing for the trial, when you were being interviewed, when you were meeting with lawyers, did anybody ever show you a copy of the option agreement?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't recall. You know, I have looked at this thing hundreds of times, and you know, I stand by my testimony, whatever it was at that point.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, I'm not asking you about something you testified about. I'm asking you whether you ever were shown this option agreement.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I have seen it. I don't know when I have seen it, but yes, I have seen it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you see it in connection with the 1987 or 1988 handling of this case, Ward v. Madison?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's very possible. I don't have any documents to refer to that effect, but—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me start by showing you documents we are going to put up on the screen. One is marked SW1-008 and one is SW1-005. They also bear markings, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 and Plaintiff's Exhibit 4. I believe these were two documents that you were shown and you did testify about in the trial.

I also want to make sure you have a copy of your trial testimony, and before we get into these documents I want to refer you to pages 196 and 197 of your trial testimony, and Jennifer will get it for you in a second, where you testified about the time that Mr. McDougal changed his offices. Do you have that trial testimony? We'll get it for you right now. Page 196 and 197, at line 21, in your testimony at the trial, you were asked:

Question: Where did he go?

Answer: He vacated the offices at the savings and loan building and moved to a sales office at the Castle Grande estates. There was a sales office for the financial corporation that was established there, and he moved his office there.

Question: Do you know why he moved?

Answer: Yes.

Question: Why?

Answer: He did not want to be accessible to the examiners to have to answer any questions at that time.

Do you remember giving that testimony in response to those questions?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I can't deny the fact that it's a record, but—

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. Let me show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. You were shown this in the trial, too. You recognize this document, the typewritten portion of the document, not the part where it's written "void" across the top in handwriting. Do you recognize the typed portion of the document?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You typed this; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You typed it at Mr. McDougal's direction?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe it would be at Seth Ward's direction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At Seth Ward's direction?

Ms. STRAYHORN. According to the typist symbol, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. SW is Seth Ward and SS is your initials?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you write the words "void" across the top?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It doesn't look—it doesn't look like my—

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, isn't it the case that you had not seen that this document is an agreement between Mr. Ward and Mr. McDougal that appears to set forth their arrangement with respect to the purchase of this property. Am I correct that when you typed this, you believed that this was the agreement and it is signed—that governed the arrangement between Ward and McDougal with respect to what Ward did on this property?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry, I'm not following your direction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood—when you typed this letter, you believed that this was, in fact, the final agreement that had been entered into between Ward and McDougal regarding the purchase of the property; right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Tell you the truth, I typed it. I don't know if I ever had a belief of anything. It wasn't my prerogative to believe or disbelieve. I mean, the document stands by itself.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When is the first time you saw that this document had "void" written across it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know. I think it may have been presented at trial.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'll help you, on page 195 of your testimony, line 14, states:

Question: Had you ever seen this document with void written on it before Mr. Ward brought this lawsuit?

Answer: No, I had not.

So you would agree with me that between September 24, 1985, or thereabouts when this document was typed by you and a couple of years later when this lawsuit was dropped—was brought, rather, you did not—you had not seen that this agreement, this initial agreement, had been voided; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I stand by my testimony, Counselor.

I'm at a disadvantage here because I have not reviewed these documents for some time. I've been deposed, interrogated. I've testified in so many trials, both defensive and offensive, and I would prefer that we not get bogged down in details, because I just plain don't remember. They were minor details as far as I was concerned.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Plaintiff's Exhibit 4 is a document you did not type; right? You were shown this at the trial, too?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Like I say, Counselor, I stand by my testimony.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that this is not a document you typed; right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Since it doesn't have my typist signature on it and in some cases I may have left it off, but for some reason, but at the time I don't believe that I thought I had done it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Again, just to put your mind at ease, that's what you testified about at page 194, line 22:

Question: I have placed in front of you Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, which is a September 24, 1985 letter. Did you prepare this letter?

Answer: No, I did not.

We have someone who has accepted or at least indicated some responsibility for the letter. We have an Official Record of Interview from the Office of the Inspector General with a Martha Patton, former secretary to Webster Hubbell, which I would like to put up to close this part of the examination. At page 2, the report discloses the following and we can put it up on the Elmo.

Ms. Patton was shown a copy of a letter dated September 24, 1985, from Seth Ward to James McDougal, President, Madison Financial Corporation. [See Attachment 2] The letter is not on Rose letterhead. Rather, it has Mr. Ward's name and address at the top. Ms. Patton stated that she could not recall typing this specific letter either but that she believed she did, because the type is similar to the IBM typewriter and the second page is formatted in the style she used while a Rose secretary. She further stated that both letters appear to be her style of typing.

When my time resumes we'll continue with what happened with respect to this letter, the property, and how it related to the option. The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. Good morning, Ms. Strayhorn.

You've testified a number of times, and I just wanted to try to ascertain that here this morning. I take it you testified at the trial of Mr. McDougal; is that correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. That testimony was quite extensive, as I understand it. In fact, we have it here. It's a public record, so your previous testimony is available to the Committee and anyone else who wants to look at it. You also testified at this civil trial involving Mr. Ward and Madison that Mr. Chertoff has been asking you about; is that correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. I will note we have testimony available and of course that's generally available as well. I take it you were interviewed at some length by the Pillsbury Madison firm who was doing an investigation for the RTC. Do you recall that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Is that the young fellas from Los Angeles?

Senator SARBANES. Yes. I'm told that that's correct.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I did meet with—were they retained by the RTC, I believe?

Senator SARBANES. As I understand it that was a lengthy interview as well, was it not?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, my daughter and daughter-in-law were out looking for me that night, so yes, I think it was.

Senator SARBANES. I will make note of the fact that we have that testimony and it's generally available to the Committee, and to the public and to the press, as a matter of fact.

You also did an interview of some type with the Inspector General of the RTC. Do you recall that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, I believe we met at our offices, as a matter of fact, and I'm not sure what date, yes.

Senator SARBANES. Let me just read this into the record. This is from the Office of the Inspector General of the Resolution Trust Corporation, saying that Sue Strayhorn, former secretary, Madison Financial Corporation, a subsidiary of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, was interviewed by RTC OIG, Assistant Regional Inspector General for Investigation, Phillip Spray, and FTC OIG Special Agent Joe Chappel at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's OIG office in Little Rock on April 5, 1994. On April 7, 1994, Strayhorn signed an affidavit memorializing the April 5, 1994 interview. Do you recall that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Senator, I'm at a loss here because it seems like you have all the information. You know, I can tell you from this point—how much time do you have? It took us like 5 years, and if you want to just skim the surface we can make it 3 years, but I'm sorry, I stand by my testimony and—

Senator SARBANES. I'm not trying to inquire into the substance of your testimony. I'm just trying to establish on the record that you've testified in a lot of places, to a lot of different people, and that testimony is generally available, both to this Committee, and to the public. In a sense, given that it's so publicly available, it seems to me that we have the substance of what you have to tell us in all of these—

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's what I'm saying, yes.

Senator SARBANES. In all these previous appearances, or previous testimonies. Now, you recall giving this one as well, I take it.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe that's one I may have even been allowed to edit and may have even signed. Is that the one?

Senator SARBANES. That's the one that you did an affidavit on, and I assume they probably showed it to you and you were able to edit it and correct it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, I was, as a matter of fact.

Senator SARBANES. Have you had any conversations or interviews with this Committee or the staff of this Committee?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I talked to Ms. Fisher, just in general terms—about arrangements and scheduling. I did speak with Mr. D'Amato earlier today. I don't want to lie on record.

Senator SARBANES. About the substance of matters or just about appearing?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know how you would classify that. Maybe, Mr. D'Amato can clarify that.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Strayhorn indicated to me that she believes she'll be a witness in another trial, and she was concerned about testimony today, whether that would bring further inquiries. Her schedule has been disrupted and this has been somewhat of an ordeal. We talked for 2 or 3 minutes and I assured her we would attempt to accommodate her as best as possible and that all she had to do was answer the questions to the best of her ability and that was the nature of her comments to me. In an effort to accommodate her, I believe one of our staffers, in setting up and making arrangements, agreed that she would be able to come and give a deposition and then testimony. That was what Ms. Fisher did in attempting to facilitate and meet with Ms. Strayhorn's problems.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Correct.

Senator SARBANES. Well, now, I didn't understand.

Ms. Fisher interviewed you; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. No, she did not. Ms. Fisher attempted to schedule the witness at a time that would accommodate, as we do with all. It was simply a call for the purposes of setting up a schedule so Ms. Strayhorn could be here. In addition, it was agreed, in order to help Ms. Strayhorn, that there would not be a deposition because that might take her coming down an additional time. She felt relieved about that, that she would only have to be examined once as opposed to coming in and having a deposition and then coming back and testifying. That was the nature of the contact.

Senator SARBANES. With Ms. Fisher?

The CHAIRMAN. A telephone conversation, which we do, Senator, with all of the witnesses either through them directly or through their counsel when they have attorneys.

Senator SARBANES. Well, that's a helpful explanation. Your concern this morning, Ms. Strayhorn, that you're to testify and you anticipate testifying in some trial; is that correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't anticipate, Senator. I've been subpoenaed by the Special Counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. She wanted to advise me of that.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Unless I want to get arrested and I don't think that would look real good.

Senator SARBANES. All right. Are there other testimony or interviews besides these that would be available that would—where you had spelled out, you know, your recollection of the substance of matters that you can recall?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Senator, I have been interviewed, deposed, testified in court so many times, I've never been able to attend a trial. I think all of the facts on this issue is well-documented, particularly in the RTC records.

I personally have documented most of this information. You know, we're going to be here for weeks if we get bogged down in the minor details. I stand by my testimony.

Anything out of that area, I will be glad to help you with.

Senator SARBANES. Now, I understand that, and I think that's an important point. I'm just trying to find out whether there's other testimony besides the ones that we've already discussed that you recall giving. We've had the two trials, the testimony, the interview with the RTC Inspector General where you edited it and signed it, and then we have the lengthy interview you had with the RTC people that, as you indicated, involved a lawyer from Los Angeles. Have there been other instances of interviews or testimony that you can recall?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I've spoken with the counsel on some occasions, and I didn't log all of these. I thought maybe, you know, after this, and if I had known it was going to be so extensive I probably should have kept a log. No, sir, I don't recall.

I have had several interviews with the Special Counsel, yes.

Senator SARBANES. With the Independent Counsel, with Mr. Starr's office and his people?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you very much.

Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Good morning, Ms. Strayhorn. My name is Richard Ben-Veniste. We have not spoken or met before.

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'll try to be very brief today hopefully. Let me make sure of one fact, however, and that is with respect to the time that Mr. McDougal moved out to the trailer office, you're quite clear that that was sometime on or after February 1986?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It was in that general timespan, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We are told on the basis of the testimony of the auditors that came in to audit the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan that they were in from February through July, and Mr. McDougal was out there during that period of time, and I take it continuously thereafter in terms of his principal place of business?

Ms. STRAYHORN. He left in July 1986.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He left the savings and loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That was at the invitation of the Federal authorities by way of a cease and desist?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think he may have been given an opportunity.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He knew what was coming and they allowed him the opportunity to resign essentially?

Ms. STRAYHORN. We never discussed it, but yes, I think so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You got that impression?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that the time that you recall when Governor Clinton visited with Mr. McDougal in the trailer office was clearly sometime after February 1986. That's very clear?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, it would have had to have been in that time period. I'm not sure exactly.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any way of further pinpointing when that visit might have occurred?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, sir, that was a very busy summer. There were a lot of things that had to be handled. It was very insignificant. I don't have, you know, anything to attach it to a particular point in time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You mentioned it——

Ms. STRAYHORN. I mean, it was not a significant visit as far as I could tell, and only on two occasions did I ever even know that he came into the office.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recall other occasions when there was contact between Mr. McDougal and Governor Clinton?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Everybody seems to think they were bosom buddies. I did not see that at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, we want to get your testimony and your recollection, Ms. Strayhorn.

Ms. STRAYHORN. My perception is that they were political friends. I don't think they visited on a regular basis. As far as I could tell, at least not in the office situation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. You mentioned it was a particularly busy or hectic summer.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Does that lead you to believe that it was closer to summer than to February when Governor Clinton visited?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I just referred to it because it got rather warm in that area during that period, but I don't have any point of reference to establish a date that that was. My husband may remember when he visited his plant, but he reminded me last night that it was on that same day.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was on the same day?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you want to take a minute to chat with your husband?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think he's going to be able to remember either because it was rather insignificant.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. This would be in the nature of new information, and certainly put new light on the subject.

Ms. STRAYHORN. He hasn't been subpoenaed yet, so——

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. From the fact that you raise this point, was Governor Clinton in the habit of dropping in as he toured through the State and particularly the area around Little Rock where the seat of State government was located?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm only aware of this one instance, of which I was reminded by my husband last evening, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At least it's fair to say that you don't remember it having been just at the time that Mr. McDougal moved out to the trailer, because that would have probably stood out in your mind that here Mr. McDougal just got there and all of a sudden the Governor dropped in?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, I didn't join him in the sales office until a couple or three weeks later, so it wasn't instantly.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It could have been in the spring or summer, it didn't stand out in your mind?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't recall cold weather, but then in Arkansas we have warm days in March. I don't have any reference point. I just don't, I'm sorry.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Fair enough. I'm just trying to get the best recollection you can provide us, not being critical.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I have trouble remembering the important points. That just was not a significant event in my book.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me ask you about the relationship between Mr. McDougal and Mr. Hale. Have you met David Hale?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sure you're going to have some document that says I did, but I don't recall ever meeting the man.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm not suggesting you did.

Ms. STRAYHORN. You don't have a document there saying I do?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm not trying to trip you up Ms. Strayhorn.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Right now, I don't recall ever meeting him, no. I did deal with him on other matters, but—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were you aware of the fact that Mr. McDougal and Mr. Hale had a business relationship?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I came to perceive that they were initiating a business relationship, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You testified that you became a person who was extremely helpful to the U.S. Attorney's office in terms of the paper trail, as you mentioned, and authenticating documents and doing your best to provide truthful testimony as requested by the U.S. Attorney's office in Little Rock in preparation for the criminal trial of Mr. McDougal back in 1989. Is that fair to say?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm not sure how helpful I was. I was about the only one left that had any knowledge at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were trying to do your best, is my point.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Obviously the events were a lot fresher in your mind back in 1989 than they are now, 7 years later?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, I have to point out too, these matters are just one in many that were extensively investigated, in most cases litigated. Some ended up in bankruptcy, so I was dealing with—during the RTC period under which I worked for the RTC, period, there were so many matters that didn't give me time to reflect on a lot of issues.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me ask you about David Hale to see if you have a recollection about the Dardenelle development matter.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, I was involved in that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Will you tell us what you recall about that matter?

Ms. STRAYHORN. The deposition?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of Mr. Hale's role, Mr. McDougal's role and the role of individuals who Mr. Hale may have encouraged to put up property as security for a loan.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry, can you rephrase that question?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What do you recall about what that investment was all about?

Ms. STRAYHORN. The Dardenelle development?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. From my recollection, it was a family farm, and I think it was like 200 and something acres. The family of his secretary—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Of Mr. Hale's secretary?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes. I think it was in danger of being foreclosed and his secretary had asked him to help her out to keep it from being foreclosed and sold at a foreclosure sale.

This is purely from memory. I think all of this may be stated in the complaint that was filed in the cross complaint and the counter complaint by the Crooms family.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who is the Crooms family.

Ms. STRAYHORN. They were the elders of Karen Crooms.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Karen Crooms was a secretary to Mr. Hale?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I say secretary in general terms. I'm not sure of her capacity.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. May she have been administrative assistant or in that capacity?

Ms. STRAYHORN. She was associated with his office, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Somehow Mr. Hale was involved in having his secretary's parents' farm put up as collateral in connection with a loan. Is that true?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think they were her parents. They were related but I'm not sure of the relation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you remember what occurred?

Ms. STRAYHORN. In the case?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe that settled before it got to trial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What occurred in terms of the transaction? What was the nature of what Mr. Hale did with that farm?

Ms. STRAYHORN. The nature of the loan itself?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think there was anything outstanding in that particular transaction.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'll see if I can refresh your recollection, we'll get some documents up later. You made the request that you not be deposed in this matter to Ms. Fisher? Is that what I understand occurred, or were you passing on someone else's request?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Pardon me?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you make the request that you not be deposed by this Committee prior to your testimony?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I did not. In fact, I was here at 8:30 or 9 o'clock expecting to be deposed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. By "deposed" I mean, giving a deposition privately before your public testimony that you're giving.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I understood that that was the arrangement.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That you were going to be deposed earlier this morning?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who did you make that arrangement with?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think Ms. Fisher may have mentioned it to me on the phone. It was not spelled out in the letter or the subpoena, but I believe she was relaying how it's typically done, yes. I don't know your procedures here. I haven't followed these hearings at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm trying to catch up with them myself. The Chairman mentioned that you made a request of Ms. Fisher that you not be deposed in connection with this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste, I try not to cut in on other people—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Except me.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not say that. I said that Ms. Fisher indicated to Ms. Strayhorn that we would not require her being deposed, inasmuch as much of the information, and I believe we have an ongoing thing that we have people on occasion who have given sworn statements, we have not found it necessary to depose all of them. Ms. Fisher indicated to Ms. Strayhorn that a deposition would not be necessary. Ms. Strayhorn was appreciative of that because that meant she would not have to come in on another day. That's what I said.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I must have misinterpreted it—

The CHAIRMAN. Then you did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Or you misspoke, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think it's your position to tell me whether I misspoke.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Or I misheard.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Dodd.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CHRISTOPHER J. DODD

Senator DODD. May I inquire just out of curiosity, Ms. Strayhorn, are you represented by—is this your lawyer behind you?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No, it's her husband.

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's the only representation I have. No, I'm without counsel. I don't think they have public defenders for witnesses. Or maybe they do.

Senator DODD. I apologize. This is your husband, then?

Ms. STRAYHORN. This is my husband, yes.

Senator DODD. So you're without a lawyer here today?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's correct.

Senator DODD. Why don't you have a lawyer?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't see that I should spend my personal funds to accommodate the Committee or the Special Counsel. I'm here to tell the truth. I don't think there's anything wrong with that, and I don't need legal counsel to tell me how to tell the truth.

Senator DODD. Good for you. I might point out, we have six, seven, eight U.S. Senators here. How many lawyers do we have here on the staff? People raise their hands who are attorneys.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I notice the lawyers have lawyers so maybe I'm in big trouble. I'm not sure.

Senator DODD. How many people are lawyers, will they raise their hands on the staff here?

Senator MURKOWSKI. May I sit down, Senator?

Senator DODD. Sure.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you.

Senator DODD. How many lawyers do we have here? Do we have lawyers back here? I'm just curious, how many lawyers?

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is now getting—

Senator DODD. I just make the point we have six, seven U.S. Senators, a raft of the attorneys here and a witness who has been through four of these processes before. I made a point.

Senator SARBANES. Ms. Strayhorn has touched on something that we need to give some thought to, and that is the people who are called here as witnesses incur significant expense, and if they bring counsel, they have to pay the fees themselves. There's no provision by the Committee to cover counsel fees, and some witnesses have come before us have incurred very large legal bills. Congress ought to give some thought to that.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Senator, all the attorneys I've been associated with are either going to be up here with me or involved with Madison. The only ones that I know and trust. Besides, it would be rather extensive fees just to bring him up to speed on the situation.

Senator SARBANES. Yes. And the travel cost, too.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Should I have a counsel?

The CHAIRMAN. No. Ms. Strayhorn, I think you said it best when you said you didn't need an attorney because all you were going to do is tell the truth to the best of your ability, and I believe that's where you're coming from.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. We appreciate your coming in, and that's why we have attempted to limit the number of times you would have to come in. That was the nature of the communication between our staff and Ms. Strayhorn. This morning she asked to speak to me and we spoke for maybe 2 minutes, in which she said that she had to testify at other cases and was appreciative that we did not have to go through the deposition as well. So that was the nature of our conversation and it was at her request. I thought certainly if a witness was going to come in and ask to meet the Chairman—I have never spoken to you previously, have I, Ms. Strayhorn?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If she asked to communicate with the Chairman, that that would be appropriate.

Senator SARBANES. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Was that not proper?

Senator SARBANES. No, it's all right.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry.

The CHAIRMAN. Everybody is a little edgy, and we appreciate you being here.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't understand.

The CHAIRMAN. You calmed us down a little bit, and brought us back to reality.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you. Let me just kind of pick up where we were. We have before you two exhibits, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, which you've told us that was the version of the agreement between Ward and McDougal of September 24?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I can't hear you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sorry. Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, which was the version of the agreement of September 24 between McDougal and Ward, which you've told us you typed. We also have Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, which is the September 24 agreement that you didn't type, but that Mr. Hubbell's secretary appeared to recognize.

Were you aware or did you become aware at some time in the course of your participating in the Ward v. Madison case, back in 1988, that the second agreement was a back-dated letter?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Did I testify to that?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No. Did you become aware of it in the course of the case. You worked on the case. You were at the bank when Ward v. Madison was going on; right, you were the legal officer?

Ms. STRAYHORN. What date was that case tried?

Mr. CHERTOFF. It started in 1987. I think it was tried in 1988.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, I was basically coordinating legal matters, bankruptcy matters.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You had some responsibility to follow the course of these cases; right? You weren't a lawyer, but you were involved in the cases?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I have been accused of practicing law without a license.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's a serious accusation. My question to you is this—and I am not saying you should have been—were you aware from your participation in the case, that the second letter agreement, the one you didn't type, was a back-dated agreement? At some point did you learn that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. There were some surprises that were brought out in the trial. Was this not documented in my testimony?

Mr. CHERTOFF. I don't think you testified about it. Let me see if I can help you a little bit.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I am not aware—I don't know who testified to what because I was excluded from that trial.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You may have learned about it afterward. Let me help you by giving you some testimony by others in the same case. There was testimony by Mr. Latham. John Latham had been the head of the bank or the CEO of the bank in 1985 and 1986.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, he hired me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is page 105 of the August 30, 1988, trial transcript.

Senator SARBANES. Are we asking Ms. Strayhorn what she had knowledge of?

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am attempting to refresh the witness's memory by calling her attention to some testimony that came out in the trial so I can ask her whether that helps us elicit any further recollection she may have about the circumstances, a practice which I believe has been followed by both sides in the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. OK, come on.

Senator SARBANES. Except Ms. Strayhorn said earlier that she heard—

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, please.

Senator SARBANES. I just want to make this point, Mr. Chairman, it is relevant. Ms. Strayhorn said earlier she heard so much from so many different places, she was not sure when she learned what when, as I recall.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Exactly. It's been difficult for me to distinguish what I knew, say, at particularly this date and after I even reviewed it with the RTC.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Strayhorn, those things that you have no particular recollection of, we understand. If we can give you some documents, they may or may not refresh your recollection. If you have testified in a particular way, I will ask Counsel to make sure it doesn't look like some sort of a trick question, to say, by the way, on such-and-such a day this is what you testified, and then do it. Nobody is going to try to trip you up. That's not the purpose. I want to put your mind at ease.

Senator, if we have any prior statements with respect to something that we're asking this witness to testify to, let's make it known so she doesn't feel we are holding back. I participated in one of those things and it is bad. It is tough when somebody up here has information you don't know, and they have it, and it really verifies what they are asking.

Senator SARBANES. That's my point, Mr. Chairman. We have a team of lawyers up here on all sides and we have a witness without a lawyer——

The CHAIRMAN. She knows that this is not an attempt to do anything other than to get the information.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Basically, my frustration is getting bogged down into the details. You know, the case was litigated, it was settled and, after several appeals. In fact I think it was even settled after I left the receivership.

The CHAIRMAN. We are going to move along, but it is important for us, outside of the purview of that case, to try to get various facts. If you can, help us put some of those facts together so we can get the actual picture of what took place.

Ms. STRAYHORN. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is not your testimony, this is someone else's testimony at the same trial. It is page 105 of Mr. Latham's testimony, line 16, and it states:

Mr. Latham, while we are looking for that exhibit, let me hand you what has been introduced as Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, which is a September 24th letter agreement marked void and Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, another September 24, 1985 letter agreements.

Exhibit 4 is the one you did not type.

Question: Have you ever seen or did you, while you were at Madison, ever see either one of those letter agreements?

Answer: Yes, I don't know how to differentiate. They are both dated the same. But exhibit number 4 was one that Seth Ward brought to my attention around May or June 1986.

That's the one that's not marked void.

Mr. Ward's testimony, same trial, page 17 of the transcript——

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute, we are going to get it for her.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Is she going to charge me secretarial fees?

The CHAIRMAN. No, she is not going to charge you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have it? It's Bates stamped 139. It's page 17 of the trial transcript.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to bring it down there? We will get it down there. What line is that?

Mr. CHERTOFF. We will start at line——

The CHAIRMAN. No, what line is it?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Line 18.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is relating to Exhibit 4, starting on page 17:

Question: What is the date on that agreement?

Answer: The date of the agreement is 24th of September 1985.

Question: Was it executed on that date?

Answer: No, sir. It was not executed on that date. It replaced the original agreement that was executed on that date.

Ms. STRAYHORN. That sounds reasonable, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You remember that. Did you know that from the trial or from something you learned afterward that the main difference between the original agreement and the back-dated agreement, which Mr. Latham testified he first saw in May or June 1986, was that the back-dated agreement carved out a piece of property for Mr. Ward to hold himself that's sometimes known as Holman Acres?

Ms. STRAYHORN. This is the one that Madison held the option on.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right, this is the same piece of property that later became the subject of that second option which Ward had with Madison that became the subject of the trial. You've put your finger on it.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think so. As I recall, the voided copy was the one that I had retained in my file.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right.

Ms. STRAYHORN. But I did not have this of record; is that correct?

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think that's correct. The second one was the one you didn't have anything to do with that was back-dated. It is the second one that for the first time gave Ward that piece of property, Holman Acres, which later became part of the option. So let's get to that second option which is the thing that came up in Ward v. Madison trial.

Let me show you SW1-070, the May 1 option to purchase real estate which covered this Holman Acres we have just been talking about. I am going to make sure you have a copy of that; take a moment, if we can, to have you pause and take a look at this.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Oh, I don't do speed reading. Could you tell me the general—I don't recall. I recall the option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. Did you have anything to do—and let me put it in context for you. What we have established so far is that you prepared an original agreement, which you've told us you had in your file back around September 24, relating to the original arrangement between Ward and McDougal on the purchase of this land. You later learned there was a second agreement prepared. Your agreement was marked void. The second agreement prepared was back-dated. You had nothing to do with that.

That second agreement carved out a little piece of this property for Ward to keep, which is known as Holman Acres. Holman Acres became, as you know, the subject of a bunch of loan documents in early 1986 where money was loaned against that piece of property, was secured by that piece of property, Holman Acres, and where that piece of property, Holman Acres, also became the subject of this option to purchase real estate.

Showing you the option that you have before you now, which was prepared on May 1, 1986, were you aware of this option before the Ward v. Madison trial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was not aware of this option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know to this day how that option document got prepared or who prepared it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. If my initials are on it—

Mr. CHERTOFF. No, they are not. I guarantee you—

Ms. STRAYHORN. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Again, so we don't surprise you, there is evidence in the record that Mrs. Clinton prepared this document. My question is whether you had—other than what you may have heard in the newspapers or things of that sort, did you have any knowledge of that, you know, before this came up in the last couple of weeks?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That Ms. Clinton prepared the document?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Why wouldn't he have his son-in-law prepare the document?

Mr. CHERTOFF. You mean why wouldn't Mr. Ward have Webster Hubbell prepare the document?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Of course.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's a very good question.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I mean, am I allowed to ask questions, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Strayhorn, we are going to give you great latitude. You can make any observations you feel appropriate.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Thank you. I need all the help I can get.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I don't think so. I think we do.

The CHAIRMAN. You are doing very nicely, thank you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it your impression Mr. Ward used Mr. Hubbell to do some of his legal work with respect to his business?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That Mr. Ward used Mr. Hubbell? I don't know of it in this particular instance, but you know, there's been known to be kinfolk prices.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Kinfolk prices, I think I have heard about that even where I live. You have raised a legitimate question—I can't answer it. I guess you can't either—which is, why Mrs. Clinton would have drafted this option rather than Mr. Hubbell.

Let me ask you this: At this trial of Ward v. Madison, this trial that took place in 1988, am I right that one of the big questions in the case was whether this option agreement was meant to really cover commissions that were owed to Seth Ward from the original property deal in 1985?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Correct me if I am wrong. I don't think the option agreement was a part of that, I think the loan itself was. Testimony may have been provided to establish that the intentions of the loan itself was to pay the commissions that Mr. Ward felt he had earned.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We have in the record testimony of the trial about the option and one of the things I want to try to explore with you is if you know why Mrs. Clinton wasn't called at the trial to give whatever information. I am just going to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. She is not going to know that, come on.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Boxer.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR BARBARA BOXER

Senator BOXER. Thank you very much.

Ms. Strayhorn, I want to make sure this is an accurate description of your testimony. You testified that you thought the removal of McDougal was probably warranted and it probably would have happened sooner, and these are quotes:

The Federal Home Loan Bank was not equipped to monitor; I mean, they had cut staff, they did not have an office here at one time and then they consolidated all of their offices in the Dallas area. I think they just did not have enough people.

You go on to say:

I think they waited too long and let it get too bad. I think before the Industrial Development thing, if they had come in before then, in fact, I think that Madison could probably have been pulled out of it, [meaning the bankruptcy] if it hadn't been for that last Industrial Development transaction.

That's taken from your testimony. Is that an accurate——

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry, Ms. Boxer. Which testimony?

Senator BOXER. That was taken from the Pillsbury interview. Does that sound like something you would say?

Ms. STRAYHORN. On occasion, I have been known to get carried away, yes.

Senator BOXER. And you basically say that you think that they waited too long. The Federal Government waited too long, had they come in sooner, this failure could have been averted. That's what you basically testified to.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I am not sure. Was I referring to the examiners or to the FDIC?

Senator BOXER. The examiners. You said they had been moved to the Dallas area, after they acknowledged that they didn't have enough people, they waited too long and had let it get too bad?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's correct. Madison Guaranty was under a supervisory agreement from, I believe it was the 1984 exam. Don't quote me on this because I don't know that much about regulations, I have learned a lot, but probably not enough to discuss it—I think it was a general attitude of people that I was around at Madison that Madison Guaranty was past due under that supervisory agreement.

Senator BOXER. OK.

Ms. STRAYHORN. At some point in time, in retrospect, I may have said that, yes.

Senator BOXER. I think you hit the nail on the head. Senator Murkowski asked an important question on Tuesday, page 94 of the transcript and I quote:

Why wasn't action taken after the 1984 exam prior to the 1986 exam which resulted in a cease and desist order? Why wasn't there some action taken? Somebody in the examination process seems to be falling short on their duty to followup or exposing certainly the taxpayer to additional potential loss here.

The key question here is not about who said what to whom and what lawyer did they hire. The basic question is, "Why did the Federal regulators wait too long?" If more action had been taken before 1986, Madison losses could have been stemmed, perhaps prevented. Our witness, in her way, has so stated.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I wonder if the Senator from California would yield.

Senator BOXER. Certainly, if I can just make sure I get extra time if I need it.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Sure. I think it is important to note the response of the examiner to my questioning, which I think would shed some light on the concern the Senator from California has and the concern I have.

Senator BOXER. Yes, but I would say if there had been losses stemmed, there would have been no Castle Grande transaction. I think it is very important that we get to that question, rather than some—excuse me for feeling this way—political agenda.

I want to get to what we are to do here. I think that Ms. Strayhorn, in her interview with Pillsbury, said it correctly. Regulators waited too long and they let it get too bad. They moved their regulators from Little Rock to Dallas and slowed down regulatory activity. Who did that? It won't please my Republican friends here. I know it doesn't please any of us.

The fact is it wasn't Governor Clinton who was responsible for the lack of action at Madison. The answer can be found in the reports of the Federal Commission of the Savings & Loan Crisis, the FIRREA Commission. Here it is. A bipartisan group appointed by Congress and President Bush. What did they find out? What can they tell us?

The Commission's records show how the Reagan Administration systematically impeded savings and loan regulators and how the effect was greatest on Dallas regulators whose territory covered Arkansas and Madison Guaranty. For example, the report documents how the Reagan Administration thwarted attempts—a small but an important point—they thwarted attempts to increase the Federal S&L regulators salaries which were 30 percent below Federal bank regulator salaries, which in turn were below private sector salaries.

If you want regulators, you have to pay them. The Reagan Administration didn't want to do that. Every time the Home Loan Bank Board tried to raise S&L regulators' salaries, the Reagan White House moved to prevent it. Consequently, between 1980 and 1984, under the Reagan Administration, the number of S&L examiners dropped while the savings and loan crisis mushroomed.

We sit here, and hear people digging into who said what to whom and when and where. We are losing sight of the big picture. Why did this happen? Why are we here looking at this?

In September 1983, the Reagan Administration moved the headquarters of the Home Loan Bank from Little Rock to Dallas. The S&L Commission records show that the Reagan Administration gave the Little Rock-based regulators minimal help.

I'm going to quote from those S&L regulators who said, when they were moved to Dallas, they felt "it was in the hope of spurring resignations." Consequently, more than 75 percent of the senior regulators, 37 out of 48 senior regulators, were lost. In 1984, 43 percent of Dallas' examiners, those who covered Little Rock and Madison Guaranty, had less than 2 years' experience.

My colleagues, this is all in the bipartisan report.

When three-quarters of your senior regulators quit, and nearly half of the remaining examiners have less than 2 years of experience, is it any wonder that no one followed up at Madison? Is it any wonder that it took 2 years for the regulators that were left to get around to tiny Madison. They had their hands full coping with six Texas S&L's, each creating more than $1 billion in taxpayer losses. We are talking $60 million in Madison's loss, which is atrocious. Taxpayers would have to back $60 million of losses that could have been prevented if we had the regulators there.

Why aren't we looking at the S&L's that produced billions of dollars in taxpayer losses, bringing people up to testify about them? The answer is obvious, Mr. Chairman.

Madison was shut down by dedicated Federal civil servants, but it was despite, not because of, Reagan Administration policies. It was Clinton's State appointees who asked for the shut down.

The S&L Commission describes how Edwin Gray, head Federal S&L regulator during the Reagan Administration, a Republican, had to fight every step of the way to hire and keep regulators.

This is how Gray described being treated by the White House Chief of Staff for his efforts:

I was asked to resign by Donald Regan. He repeatedly accused me of betraying the President and his policies. All of these actions were intended to generate obedience on my part to have the effect of causing me to buckle under to the Administration's pressure.

The FIRREA Commission described how Gray eventually managed to end run the Reagan White House Office of Management and Budget. In mid-1985, Gray persuaded the regional Home Loan Banks, which were under much less control of the White House, to hire new examiners. They immediately set about doubling the number of regulators. God bless Mr. Gray.

At the same time, Gray got them to move a task force of 200 Federal examiners from all over the country to the Dallas office. As Gray described it to the Commission:

I secured these changes in the face of exceedingly strong opposition, threats and intimidation from key persons in the Reagan Administration.

Threats and intimidation. Mr. Gray prevailed and 200 examiners were moved to Dallas. They included the two examiners from Indiana whose work eventually shut down Madison.

When Senator Murkowski asked the question why didn't it happen sooner, history, documented in a bipartisan fashion, shows us it was because of Reagan Administration policy.

I have to say, in my concluding remarks here, that the Arkansas Clinton Administration didn't delay the closing of Madison. Not a shred of evidence has been produced to indicate that. The answer is Madison was allowed to fester because of the Reagan Administration. The fact of the matter is, this Committee, at the time, didn't do a thing to look into those Reagan Administration policies.

Mr. Chairman, as I look through all of these historic documents, we ought to be looking at why those Federal regulators were inhibited by the Reagan Administration. That's the true issue, not the reasons for only $60 million of losses, but the billions and billions of dollars. Our President Ronald Reagan, greatly beloved—on the S&L Deregulation Bill, said “we’ve hit the jackpot.” That’s true. The jackpot was hit by plenty of greedy individuals and we are meeting only a few of them through this investigation.

This Committee, instead of looking at how to prevent this in the future, is getting into the details of one relatively small S&L failure here, dragging people up, at great expense and putting them through hell. You’ve got FBI agents all over this case. I have to conclude in my heart that as you come back and ask us for even more money, that this is part of a political agenda.

The bad actors in this are going to go to jail. We will make sure of that, that’s why we have the criminal investigation going on. What we are about, it appears to me is a political agenda, and I think today’s witness, in her statement that I read to you, “I don’t think the regulators had enough people, they waited too long and they let it get bad,” gets to the core of why it took so long to shut down Madison.

Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. We are going to continue.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, let me now see what you can help us with in terms of the trial that ultimately occurred and what happened with Ward and his dispute with Madison over the commissions. Could you tell us, as best as you can remember from your work on this matter, what was the essence of the disagreement between Ward and Madison as it came up in the course of this trial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think it was pretty simple. The nonrecourse loan—and I think it was $300,000, correct me if I am wrong—Madison contended was his commissions. Mr. Ward contended that it was not. I never did really see the whole point of his view, but I think that was Madison’s position, and that’s pretty simple.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me see if I can understand it, and tell me if I am right or I am wrong. Simplified, in early 1986, Madison loaned Ward money as a nonrecourse loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. There were a series of loans that rolled into this loan that was still outstanding. I believe that was a nonrecourse loan. To expand on that, Mr. Ward contended that the property, which consisted of Holman Acres property, was Madison’s security for that loan. I am not sure if it’s ever really proved in court, but I think it was Madison’s contention that the purpose of the nonrecourse note was to pay him his commissions, and that the property wasn’t part of that basis.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ward claimed that he was entitled to additional commissions?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes; as I recall, another $300,000.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The bank took the position that essentially the money that had been given to Ward already in connection with this loan was secured by this property, that that had been meant to cover whatever commissions he was owed out of this original deal. Is that basically right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It sounds kind of a complicated way of establishing, but—like I say, just simplified, I believe that was—this is my perception, that Madison’s contention was this was his commission; Mr. Ward's contention was that he was owed an additional amount, $300,000 more or less.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me see if I can understand how this property relates to the option. You've told us that the Holman Acres was listed as security for this $300,000 loan; is that your recollection?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's the general idea, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think it turns out that this is the very same piece of property which is the subject of the option, which we've shown you, which was prepared by Mrs. Clinton.

Ms. STRAYHORN. From my recollection, I believe that is true.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think Mr. Latham testified that in fact the purpose of the option was to be a means by which—and Latham was testifying for the bank—was to be a means by which Ward could get his commission. Does that fit with your general memory?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Oh, my memory was my own perception of the deal. It was not included in the option—you know, the option was not a part of that perception, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am going to read you, not your testimony, but Mr. Latham's testimony. We will give you a copy of it. It is page 101 of the transcript, and it refers to this option document, which we have shown you, which we have established is prepared by Mrs. Clinton.

We have at page 101, starting at line 4, to read along, this is questions of Mr. Latham. It states:

Question: I want you to look at now what has been introduced as Defendant's Exhibit 3, an option to purchase tracts 27 and 28 of Holman Acres. Can you tell the jury about the circumstances surrounding the financial corporation taking an option out on this property?

Answer: Yes. I know this is confusing, but the loan was done really at that time in lieu of the option.

I think here he is referring to that $300,000 loan you are testifying about. It continues:

The option more concretely or more accurately reflects the nature of the transaction, that being that the service corporation owed Seth $300,000 in commissions. In the initial purchase of all of that property, Seth retained tracts 27 and 28 of Holman Acres as his commission, which was later to be bought by the service corporation.

I think that's that second back-dated agreement I showed you where he gets to keep these two tracts. I think what Latham is saying here is that letting Ward keep those two tracts in that back-dated agreement was the way of giving him his commission because he would later be able to resell it.

Latham goes on to testify:

The option allows the service corporation to buy the property from Seth, thus Seth receives the $300,000, and the service corporation would have the property.

Latham goes back to talk about the loan the $300,000 loan you have been discussing and says:

The note was done very quickly to make sure that that debt was evidenced, should something happen to anybody, to protect Seth. The note, however, would have left, if that was the way it was finally structured, would have left Seth with the $300,000 plus the property, which was not the intent of the transaction.

That's Mr. Latham's explanation of the transaction——

Ms. STRAYHORN. I would defer an opinion to Mr. Latham since he was a part of that agreement. I was not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would defer to Mr. Latham as having a more complete understanding of what happened?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's correct, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. I am trying to understand how the option fits into the overall deal. The way I understand the paperwork, and basically, the testimony, to the extent you have been able to help us, is that this deal starts out, in the agreement you prepare, as a deal where Ward is going to take the northern part of the property and hold it. Madison Financial is going to hold the southern part. Ward is going to give Madison Financial an option to take back the entire property so that they can combine it.

There is a second agreement, which is the one you don't have anything to do with that's back-dated, that Latham says first appears to him in May or June 1986. That agreement changes the deal, and says that Ward, when he returns the property to Madison, is going to get to keep a couple of parcels for himself. That's Holman Acres. We understand from Latham's testimony here that that was supposed to be Ward's commission for agreeing to this arrangement where he warehouses the property.

What happened in the spring of 1986, as near as I can tell, is what they intended to do was to let Ward sell his parcels back to the bank for $300,000. Ward would pocket the $300,000 and that would be his commission for doing the original deal. Because the examiners were there and there was some concern that something might happen, what they decided to do, as Latham says, is get a note out very quickly, get a loan out very quickly to Ward so that he would have the $300,000 in pocket.

It would be a nonrecourse note. It would be secured by the very same property, this Holman Acres, and that way, if something happened and Ward wasn't able to do an outright open sale of the property, he could still get to the same result by simply defaulting on the note, in which case since it is nonrecourse the note would go back to the bank and the money would stay with Ward.

You have tracts 27 and 28 of Holman Acres, which is both the subject of this note and this loan, secures this nonrecourse loan, which is what you know about. You know about the nonrecourse loan?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I came to learn about the nonrecourse loan.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel, please don't do that. I've listened to a 15-minute filibuster, I let her go over the time, reading of the records. When we are trying to examine the witness, you may not follow it, fine. You may want to ask amplifying questions, but I am going to ask you, please, not to interrupt. Go ahead.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK, you know about the $300,000 loan that was secured by Holman Acres because you have told us about that. I gather you don't know much about the option, which covers the very same piece of property; is that right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I had reviewed it to some extent, but I was not aware of that. You seem to have a better understanding of it than I, so—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, I have had the benefit of looking at Mr. Latham's testimony.

Let me ask you this. The fact that you have this same piece of Holman Acres property, which is both the security for this loan and also the subject of this option that was prepared by Mrs. Clinton, what do you remember, in connection with anything you knew about in the preparation of this trial, about what efforts were being made to find out on the part of the bank how this option came to be written? Did anybody ask you, was there some effort made by the lawyers for the bank to figure out how this option for Holman Acres was prepared and agreed to?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sure if they knew about it they would have investigated that deal. We looked at so many aspects of that case and it drug on for months. I don't recall it exactly—in fact, we changed attorneys when the Resolution Trust Corporation moved cases to Federal court.

I am sure that at some point, this option was reviewed extensively. I just don't have enough knowledge about that to discuss it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's what puzzles me about it. I look at the case. I see that the option is really the centerpiece of this litigation, over $300,000 or $400,000. It kind of shows up in the transaction, no one really seems to know how it comes up. Mr. Ward testified in the trial that he didn't prepare the option. The option clearly lies at the center of this mystery about how Ward gets the commission.

We learned that the option wasn't prepared simply by someone inside the bank or even by Webster Hubbell, but the person who prepared the option and the billing records show that on the day the option was prepared, Mrs. Clinton talked to Mr. Hubbell. We now know Mrs. Clinton, not Mr. Hubbell, prepared the option and talked to Mr. Hubbell about it—I'm sorry, to Mr. Ward about it.

My question is this: In all my experience, when your people are having a case, a trial about a document like an option that's central to the case, the first thing they do is they run out and find the lawyer who wrote the agreement because they want to know what the lawyer said about the option.

This is not your responsibility, you had lawyers who were supposed to be doing this.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I beg your pardon, but I don't understand the importance of who prepared the document. I don't recall that Mrs. Clinton's name ever came up in the discussions in the investigation, the litigation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You put your finger on exactly what it is that raises the question in my mind, because if you are having a dispute, testimony back and forth, where Ward is testifying about who prepared the option, Latham is saying something different about the option, you've got $300,000 hanging on the outcome of this case, one of the first things that—and this is not your job, it is the job of the lawyers, one of the first things the lawyers should do is figure out how did this option get written, what is the background. The first thing you do is you go out and find the lawyer who wrote it and you ask the lawyer how did this get written, what were the negotiations.

You have put to me what I think is the main question. Nobody called Mrs. Clinton, no one—Mrs. Clinton's name didn't come up in connection with the preparation of the option.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't know that the attorneys for Madison were even aware that Mrs. Clinton may or may not have—I don't think that was a significant issue at that time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, it is all over the trial. There's conflicting sworn testimony about it in the case, and I think you are raising the very question I have. How is it that neither the attorneys for Mr. Ward nor the attorneys for Mr. Madison seemed to know the lawyer who drafted the option that lay at the heart of the case?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I still don't see the importance of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In any case, none of us knew about it until a couple of weeks ago, and I will tell you the importance of the case is what Mr. Latham says. Mr. Latham's testimony is that the whole loan issue was really tied to the option, and that both the loan and the option were ways—and this is from page 101. It states:

The option allows the service corporation to buy the property from Seth, then Seth receives the $300,000, and the service corporation would have the property.

In other words:

The option more concretely or more accurately reflects the nature of the transaction, that being that the service corporation owed Seth $300,000 in commissions.

What Latham swore under oath in the trial was that the option agreement was meant to be the device or the means through which Seth would take that $300,000 commission for the property and that he wouldn't be entitled to be paid yet another $300,000.

Seth said no, the option was something completely different, I am still owed that original $300,000. In deciding what that option meant—

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry. Mr. Chairman, could we have a short break? I am nodding off here.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Absolutely. Let me just confer with the Ranking Member, because we have been pushing long and hard and taking lots of hours. I'm thinking that possibly we take a lunch break now, instead of coming back in 5 or 10 minutes, come back at 1 p.m.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I don't think we have a lot of time and I don't know how much time we need on your time, although if Mr. Chertoff is going to go on and on without a question to this witness—

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, I didn't do it to be argumentative. I suggest it in the spirit of some kind of accommodation, that if you wanted, we would take a break til 1.

Senator DODD. May I make a suggestion? We are going to have cloture votes at 1:30, back to back, so we might get caught on that aspect—

The CHAIRMAN. Let's take a short break and return at 12:15.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, may I make an inquiry, what the order is relative to a few questions I might have for the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. As soon as it comes back to our side, we will come to you for some questions.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Senator Bond was here before I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Bond will ask his questions. The Minority side for whatever time they want to use.

Senator MURKOWSKI. For 10 minutes and then Senator Bond for 10 minutes and then the Minority for 10 minutes, and then I would probably have a chance.

Senator BOND. Mr. Chairman, I may not use my full 10 minutes, so I would try to have some available.

The CHAIRMAN. We will try to wrap it up by 1:30 before the first cloture vote, so we will return at 12:15 sharp.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I want to leave town on my 6 p.m. flight.

[Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an observation. I don't know how long we're going to keep Ms. Strayhorn here, but I hope at some point we can question her. I was struck that we ended, before we took the break, on the note that she was nodding off as we all sat here and listened to Mr. Chertoff.

I don't see what purpose this serves, if we get a question that's prefaced by saying well, we understand that you don't know about this, Ms. Strayhorn, but here is what Mr. Latham said. We quote extensively from Mr. Latham, and then at the end of that, Ms. Strayhorn says: "Well, you would be better served by going to Mr. Latham for that rather than me, because he is the one who would know about that." Which is, of course, what Counsel said at the beginning.

It is a strange way of proceeding. We have this witness and if there is information that she has to provide, we ought to get it from her. This process is just wasting time. We have extensive testimony on public record.

The Pillsbury Report detailed the options and agreements, and concluded that no wrongdoing had been done. If those want to be challenged, people can do that, but we ought to have witnesses who have knowledge and can respond to them.

I don't see what purpose is served by Counsel saying, I know you don't know about this, but this is what he said. Then the witness says, well, I don't know about it, he will be the better one to hear from.

Senator Dodd.

Senator DODD. Thank you, Senator Sarbanes.

I was going to make that same observation. I wasn't in the room, but I was listening to the question. Nothing is ever done as simply as we all would like. There are always some elements, and I guess we can make our point in our question, knowing full well that the witness can't answer the question. We made the point in question, that's it, so we begin to become more advocates than making legitimate inquiry.

It may have been noted already, but the reason I made the point I did at the first round that I had, was I went through and tried to calculate the pages of testimony that you've already given; 181 pages in the McDougal trial, 147 pages for the Pillsbury review, 25 pages in the Ward civil testimony.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Thank you for stating my point.

Senator DODD. The RTC IG statement, 5 pages, I don't know what the total is. That's a pretty heavy body of evidence to be able to have, in terms of the value you can provide the Committee.

I don't envy the position of the Chairman, this is a difficult job. There have been suggestions that somehow this is personal—it is not personal. I don't envy sitting there trying to manage these people on both sides who have their own views they want to pursue.

The Chairman understands the frustration our side feels in terms of not trying to get this over with quickly, but to get it done in an expeditious way and to speed it up.

We have no votes now. We have primaries all over the country so the Majority leader and others are out there. This isn't unique and isn't the first time that it's happened. We have a window here, a couple of votes this afternoon, but no more scheduled votes until the end of the month.

Here it is February 1, with no votes until February 26, and we will hopefully get through by February 29. I am willing to listen to what the Chairman has to say for a few extra weeks to speed the process along.

Ms. Strayhorn, you have repeated this probably 10,000 times, but you worked for Mr. McDougal from February 1985 until he was thrown out in July 1986, at least on that particular matter, a year and a half?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It seems like a lifetime.

Senator DODD. 10 years ago?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I started to work 11 years ago, this month, as a matter of fact, yes.

Senator DODD. I think you've done remarkably well, and most of us here have said this over and over again. To try and ask someone to go back in detail of events 10 and 11 years ago is asking a lot. I am deeply appreciative of your willingness to be here today, and your willingness to be as forthcoming. I think you have been tremendously helpful to the Committee.

I will make the plea, Mr. Chairman, I would hope we might get a longer list of witness that we can hear from in the coming days. I know that Senator Sarbanes has made that case, and others have. I think we can get the work done. We are not going to get another time like we've got right now without votes to be able to go Monday through Friday, 8 hours a day, and wrap this up.

A witness or two a day, particularly ones where we have already gotten a tremendous amount of information from, a great body of evidence exists already, my own view is, that it—we're delaying for the sake of delay. That's my personal observation. My hope is we could change that format.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to yield some time to my colleagues, Senator Sarbanes or Counsel on this side and if not for them then turn it back over so we can move right along whatever they desire.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Committee will not be meeting either tomorrow, Friday, or Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. Tomorrow is Friday.

Senator SARBANES. We are not meeting tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Senator SARBANES. Or Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. No. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

Senator SARBANES. Who will we be hearing from on Tuesday?

The CHAIRMAN. I think there is a list that's been provided, and again we have identified 60 potential witnesses. We will be having hearings again Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The staff, I would hope, is working cooperatively to furnish the Majority and Minority those witnesses and those potential witnesses, subject to buttoning down their time schedules.

For example, whether it is Ms. Strayhorn or someone else and their lawyers. In this case, it was probably easier because we didn't have to contend with some attorney and his scheduling conflicts to come. We are pursuing it.

Senator SARBANES. I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier, that I thought we should do a 4- or 5-day a week schedule. We did that back in the summer at a time when we were also trying to do legislative business. The demands and the pressures on the Members, in terms of the allocation of their time, was much greater than it is now.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say this to you: As a practical matter, I will examine the question of whether we can add, and the staff can handle the additional time. I am not going to preclude adding additional days, but I will look into having Friday sessions. We have limited resources and there is a problem preparing the witnesses, but I will look into it.

We did not go through a deposition with Ms. Strayhorn, simply to accommodate her, and we felt the accommodation was correct and proper. Someone in the media asked me if we did the right thing? Absolutely. She would have been examined privately, and if need be, to bring her in again. We decided we would just try and do it with one shot. With this witness we did the correct thing.

I will take under advisement the suggestion to add additional days, if it makes sense, and if we can get and identify more witnesses who can come in during those periods of time and who we can get in, it would be my inclination to go forward and add additional days.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, let me say I think it was very reasonable not to take Ms. Strayhorn's deposition since we have all of this material. We have her testimony at two trials, extensive testimony in the RTC inquiry conducted by Pillsbury—it is all right here and this is all public record as well.

Ms. Strayhorn has testified repeatedly in many venues and it is all available to the Committee. I agree, I don't think there was a need to take her deposition and there are other potential witnesses who are in the same position.

Senator DODD. Mr. Chairman, I was going to make the point too, in some cases where a deposition by Counsels would eliminate the need to bring them in as a public witness, thus abbreviating our time here. Of the 670 witnesses, Counsel may discover that 10 or 15 of them really don't have anything more to contribute than what they have already, so you thin down your list. As I calculate it, if you have five or six witnesses a day, 4 or 5 days a week, for two panels, in 10 to 15 days, you could complete this process.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the Senator has touched on something—even when we are not in session, the staff has been working. They are examining witnesses, reviewing documents, and that's why we are being able to put this together.

There are certain witnesses that we have precluded from examining as a result of the special prosecutor and the pending trial. One of the reasons I have indicated that I am not prepared to move today or tomorrow for an extension of time is because we do have Senator BOND. Did others in the corporation, to your knowledge, come in and work over the weekend?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think there were some people in the loan department, but at that time, I was employed by Madison Financial Corporation.

Senator BOND. At that time, what kinds of activities were you engaged in, in your work for Madison Financial, as part of that "activity" in February 1986? Were you recreating minutes of board meetings?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Actually, I was just recording—you know, doing the secretarial support.

Senator BOND. You were typing up minutes for meetings that had happened previously, and you were transcribing them; is that correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Something of that nature, yes.

Senator BOND. What else did you type up at that time that reflected on the work previously done at Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Are you referring to something specific?

Senator BOND. We are learning more about this as we go along. You typed up minutes that had been recreated previously. Do you recall if you typed up any other documents that referred to something that happened some time ago that they were preparing to put in the files in case of an examination?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Are you speaking of loan or corporate files?

Senator BOND. Corporate or loan files.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Nothing comes to mind at the moment. Maybe after some thought, right now, I cannot think of anything specific. Senator BOND. If you later do, we would appreciate it if you would let us know, but that answer is fine. I was just asking that for information.

Did the examiners, in fact, come into Madison Guaranty shortly after you completed typing up the minutes for previous activities? Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't remember exactly when I actually typed those Madison Financial Corporation minutes. I have been asked that question on several occasions, you know, if the minutes were generated, which I agreed to that, but I can't remember when. Senator BOND. I am not asking you the specific date. Do you recall if it was shortly thereafter, within a few days or a week or longer, that the examiners came to Madison Guaranty?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm sorry, I just can't—

Senator BOND. That's all right.

Ms. STRAYHORN [continuing]. Narrow that time period down.

Senator BOND. That's fine.

Do you ever recall seeing Mrs. Clinton visit the offices where you worked for Mr. McDougal? Did you see her at Madison Financial or Madison Guaranty?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I only recall seeing Mrs. Clinton one time, and I don't even remember what date that was. But, yes, she visited with Mr. McDougal for a short period, but I only recall seeing her maybe once.

Senator BOND. That was in Mr. McDougal's office?

Ms. STRAYHORN. She met with him in his office on one occasion,

Ms. STRAYHORN. She met with him in his office on one occasion, yes.

Senator BOND. That would have been in the period you worked for Mr. McDougal which you said was February of 1985 until Mr. McDougal departed in the summer of 1986?

Ms. STRAYHORN. She visited the office in the savings and loan, so it was early on.

Senator BOND. After you went to work there and prior to the time that Mr. McDougal—

Ms. STRAYHORN. Prior to the time he vacated his office, yes.

Senator BOND. To your knowledge, that's the only meeting they had on the premises of Madison Financial or Madison Guaranty?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's the only one I can recall.

Senator BOND. Thank you Ms. Strayhorn. These points may or may not be important. We appreciate your testimony.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to yield my colleague more time than this, but that completes my questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murkowski.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Maybe I should wait for my turn.

Senator SARBANES. We will be very brief. We have only a couple of questions. Ms. Strayhorn, this letter that was shown to you, the one you signed as a legal officer in 1990. This was much later. This is when Madison was in the hands of the Federal Government people; isn't that correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Let's see, 1990? I think this was during the conservatorship, and correct me if I am wrong, but I believe Madison Guaranty was not placed in receivership until later that year, if I recall. I am not sure.

Senator SARBANES. I guess the important point is, when you were working for Mr. McDougal, you weren't a legal officer, and didn't represent yourself as a legal officer?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, definitely not.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Strayhorn, the information about typing up minutes of Madison Financial, catching up with the board minutes that had not been prepared, that was the subject of testimony that you gave back in 1989. You testified about this extensively, to the best of your recollection?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, you have to understand, too, that Madison Financial didn't have a full sitting board. It was, like, a couple of people, so they didn't always stand on formalities.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes, with a small company, I am not suggesting that Madison Financial didn't have irregularities. By the same token, when there is a small company, often the board minutes are prepared pro forma, and not necessarily contemporaneous with the calling of meetings. Is that your understanding based on your experience?

Ms. STRAYHORN. If I follow, yes sir, I believe that's the gist of it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to the meeting between Ms. Clinton and Mr. McDougal, you indicated that there was one meeting when Ms. Clinton visited Mr. McDougal at his office at the savings and loan and it was no big deal in terms of your recollection. Let me ask you whether you recall when that meeting took place. We know it was before Mr. McDougal moved out to his trailer.

Ms. STRAYHORN. It had to have been between February and February of the next year, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me see whether this refreshes your recollection. I am quoting from Mrs. Clinton's answers to the RTC:

I believe Massey approached me about presenting this proposal to Jim McDougal because he was aware that I knew him. I agreed to go see McDougal. I visited him at his office on April 23, 1985. I told him I understood Latham wanted Massey,

I am focusing on this April 23, 1985. Is that about the time that you recall a visit having taken place?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was not aware of any representation, so I don't believe I would be the one to comment. I just don't—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Not about the content of the conversation, about the time of the meeting?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I just don't recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Is there anything that you know that is inconsistent with that date?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think I would have an assessment of that, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to the question posed by the Senator from Missouri, we have the benefit of Mr. Clark's interview which was taken on October 20, 1994. Mr. Clark was the Federal Home Loan Board Bank examiner, who actually came to do the 1986 examination. He stated:

In the normal course what happens is a request letter for information is sent to the institution. And in that letter it would tell them what date we expect to arrive. Normally, that request letter would have been sent out a few weeks, at least, in advance. That was sent out from the Little Rock offices, at least as far as I know, but they would have known we would have been coming into the institution at least a few weeks ahead of time for that reason.

Does that comport with your recollection of events that, at some point prior to the arrival of the Federal Home Loan Bank examiners, there was an understanding that they would be coming?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I worked for the service corporation, and I was not aware—I mean, that was just the general attitude that, you know, that we should expect them. Whether they got notice or not, that was not privy to my area, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you very much, ma'am.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Murkowski.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR FRANK H. MURKOWSKI

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me welcome the witness. We kind of relate to responsibility in each individual witness. As I understand the situation with regard to Madison vis-a-vis Madison Financial, you were all kind of under one roof?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You were all—

Ms. STRAYHORN. For a period, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You were under the roof of the S&L, you worked out of there, but—

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe I testified to that, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. When you got a paycheck, was it Madison S&L or was it Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. My paycheck was issued at Madison Financial Corporation until such time as, after Mr. McDougal left in July and I was persuaded to come over to the S&L side, and some period shortly after that, I was changed to the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan payroll.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Were you bonded as an employee?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Was I bonded?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes. Did the bank bond you or the S&L or Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I didn't operate in a position of authority.

Senator MURKOWSKI. OK, let me ask you, you served McDougal as a personal secretary, is that how you describe your activities?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Define "personal."

Senator MURKOWSKI. In the sense—were you an officer, or did you have any activity associated with the structure of corporation? Were you the secretary of Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Not at that time, no, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Were you at any time?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was ex officio secretary for the board after I went back to the bank, and—

Senator MURKOWSKI. What timeframe was that, roughly, do you remember what year?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think the board appointed me secretary, it might be at the end of 1987. At some point.

Senator MURKOWSKI. OK. You were appointed sometime, then, secretary to the board of directors?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It was not an authority status. I took shorthand. It was more or less a—

Senator MURKOWSKI. To your knowledge, was your position one that was approved by any corporate resolution, either by Madison S&L or Madison Financial? You know what I mean, the board meets, they pass a resolution.

Ms. STRAYHORN. You mean when I was recognized as the recording secretary?

Senator MURKOWSKI. What I am attempting to determine here is, you know, the board makes the vice presidents and those actions are part of the corporate minutes, so those people—

Ms. STRAYHORN. Oh, I believe that was when the Madison Guaranty board recognized me as recording secretary, I believe that was made a part of the minutes. It was a board action—

Senator MURKOWSKI. In effect, you were the secretary for the corporation, and had been appointed by the board—in the minutes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Actually, my role was I recorded the minutes. I don't think I was the corporation's secretary at that time. I think I was an assistant corporate secretary at that time.

Senator MURKOWSKI. It would be helpful if we had some idea whether you had been appointed at any time, either by Madison S&L or Madison Financial, as a corporate officer, in any reference to the board taking an action to appoint you.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was not—like I say, I believe I may have been assistant secretary at some period for Madison Guaranty after I went to work for them.

Senator MURKOWSKI. All right. Let me move on then. Did you know a gentleman by the name of Fitzhugh who testified the other day here? He was a vice president.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Davis, yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What did he do for Madison Financial? He had the title of vice president, which he acknowledged.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Madison Financial?

Senator MURKOWSKI. It is my recollection he was vice president of Madison Financial.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was never clear on Fitzhugh's role——

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did he work with you in the same office and keep regular hours or—he was a lawyer, as I recall?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I don't think he functioned in a lawyer's status at all. I think he was more of a real estate-type person, and he worked on a couple of——

Senator MURKOWSKI. He worked——

Ms. STRAYHORN [continuing]. Projects in some capacity, but I am not exactly sure——

Senator MURKOWSKI. And you don't remember what projects he work on?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I was familiar with him and I did some secretarial support. I hate to say, but I believe he was looking at some downtown property that was for sale.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Why do you hate to say it?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Because I don't remember, but——

Senator MURKOWSKI. So you really don't know what he did, other than he was a vice president. How many people worked for the Madison Financial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. At the time I went to work?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes, when you and Fitzhugh were there.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, it was——

Senator MURKOWSKI. 10, 20?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Are you talking about contractors or——

Senator MURKOWSKI. People whose pay said Madison Financial on the paycheck.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Let me think about that.

Senator MURKOWSKI. As opposed to those who were in Madison Guaranty S&L.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I can't remember a number and I am not real certain who was working as a contractor capacity and who was working on a salaried capacity. I wouldn't want to speculate because I was not always aware of their role and their compensation arrangement.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Was it 20 people working or 50 or 10? I am trying to get a feel.

Ms. STRAYHORN. It was a minimal number. I would say 10 to 15 people at the most.

Senator MURKOWSKI. As a vice president you would assume Mr. Fitzhugh was doing something visible. I haven't been able to determine from his testimony what. Do you know if he made loans? Did he go to the loan committee meetings?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Mr. Fitzhugh worked for the financial corporation until such time he worked for the savings and loan. I was not aware he was ever involved in the loan committee actions or making any loans.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Thank you. I am going to refer to your deposition given in April 1984. On line 5, you quoted:

But Jim had always told me, you know, these people and his good old boy buddies that had known him after—known him all their life and he had never heard of them, were calling up saying . . .

Then further you state:

He gave me this crash course on FSLIC regulations, that the savings and loan could only invest up to 6 percent and until they got more assets, he couldn't buy any more land. But we know that he bought more land and got Seth Ward and bought the northern portion of the IDC and McDougal bought the southern portion.

Recognizing your statement, when you were asked if Seth Ward was used as a way to get around the regulation, you stated yes?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, that's only my perception. I realize it was a circumvention of regulations, but I didn't know how that applied to the law.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You didn't know that was a violation of the law?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No. In fact, I wasn't aware of a lot of the regulations that I was—

Senator MURKOWSKI. I am not going to dwell on the 6 percent. Other than you obviously had some knowledge that there was a regulation that suggested that 6 percent of the net worth was the maximum. When it was evident that they had gone ahead and purchased the northern portion of IDC, that would be Seth, and McDougal took the southern portion, they were certainly circumventing what you knew as a regulation, which, of course, turns out to be a violation of law?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, that was my perception.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Did you feel uneasy about knowing that at least it was in violation of what you assumed was a regulation, because when he says what he said, or you say he said, "he gave me this crash course on FSLIC regulations" that savings and loans could only invest until they got more assets, he couldn't buy any more land, and then went out and did it. Did you feel a little uneasy?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I wasn't in a position to be uneasy. It was not my decision, no.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Well, his intent, it is obvious.

You have already been asked relative to whether you have any recollection of any catch-up work being done to get affairs in order prior to the examination. I think you indicated some people worked late, but you didn't have to work on weekends and so forth. You were in charge of maintaining files and keeping a documentation, insurance current, taxes paid, so forth?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Me?

Senator MURKOWSKI. Yes.

Ms. STRAYHORN. No.

Senator MURKOWSKI. I thought you had a function keeping files.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I didn't have a function in the loan department.

Senator MURKOWSKI. What was your function, if you would describe it, very briefly?

Ms. STRAYHORN. When?

Senator MURKOWSKI. When you worked with Jim McDougal.

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think I've testified that I was secretary. I wore a lot of hats, I did a lot of things—

Senator MURKOWSKI. You said you did the shorthand so you took letters and so forth?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Senator MURKOWSKI. My final question, did you cut paychecks?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, sir.

Senator MURKOWSKI. You did not handle the payroll?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That was done in accounting.

Senator MURKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion the Senator from California made an extended statement relative to the cause of the S&L debacle, and I think the record needs to be examined with factual reality. The responsibility, to a large degree, was due to the U.S. Congress for the S&L debacle. To suggest it is appropriate to point the finger at any one Administration or any one President is, in my opinion, totally void of reality.

I know something about the finance business. I know something about the banking business and the savings and loan, mutual savings business. We deregulated the industry, and it all began about 1980 when we increased the insurance from $40,000 per individual depositor to $100,000, that was done primarily through the efforts of a couple of Members who are no longer with this body.

There were no hearings held in the Senate. The Federal Government increased their exposure dramatically by this insurance increase from $40,000 to $100,000. The deregulation of the S&L's was their downfall for the reason that the S&Ls, for an extended period of time, did a tremendous service to prospective homeowners and young buyers in this country by being able to meet their demands for home ownership. They had long-term loans at low fixed interest rates.

During that time, the S&Ls always enjoyed a higher rate that they could pay for passbook savings—we all had a little savings account, our kids had a savings account, and so forth higher than the commercial banks.

They enjoyed, if you will, the protection under the law of being able to pay more than the commercial banks, and the consequence for their ability to provide long term mortgages to the public. Deregulation simply put them out of business. As a consequence, when they had to pay the same rate that the commercial banks were paying for this savings, the commercial banks didn't hold long-term mortgages at fixed rates. The S&L's did.

They could not adjust their mortgage portfolio. They moved out in all kinds of businesses, they offered checking accounts. Their management expertise was not geared up to compete, if you will, in an unregulated market. As a consequence, they begin to fail virtually overnight, and unfortunately, some unscrupulous, people moved in. We've seen the evidence in many areas.

Let's make sure the record reflects reality, and suggest that the examiners have somehow been irresponsible in the process of moving along an institution that clearly was under scrutiny, and had been notified to set up a procedure for correction. That process continues, but you can't stay ahead of people who are out to scam the system by setting up straw men until, in most cases, it is too late.

Let us put the blame where it belongs. It belongs right here in the U.S. Congress where we initiated that movement from $40,000 to $100,000 on the insurance and deregulated an industry that simply lost its competitive advantage. It was all over, and anybody who has been a student of the financial community will tell you why it happened and where Congress was—well, history bears that out and now we are paying for it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, madam, and I wish you a good day.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Murkowski.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, we will stay on your side. I take it we are trying to conclude here.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I think if we can, in fairness to the witness and to the Members, and I thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, I have one last thing to ask you. I would like to make sure you have a copy of the January 25, 1990, letter you wrote to April Breslaw on Madison Guaranty stationery. Maybe we could stop for a moment and let the witness read the letter because I will ask some questions about it, and she should have an opportunity to look at it first.

[Pause.]

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you recognize the letter?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I take it you wrote the letter?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Just to set the stage, as of 1990, the case, Ward v. Madison which we talked about earlier, that case in State court, Mr. Ward won the original case; correct?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your letter makes reference to this, didn't the RTC try to get a new trial or reopen the matter of this commission?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I'm not sure if they requested a new trial or if they just went to the Court of Appeals.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There was a second case where the Rose Law Firm was hired by the RTC to sue the Frost accounting firm regarding an audit. With that in mind—I want to take you through the letter. This is you writing to Ms. Breslaw. Ms. Breslaw was the attorney at the FDIC responsible for the institution?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. She was responsible for the Frost case?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You wrote her a letter, you said:

It has been reported to me that during my absence from the office the Rose Law Firm requested a copy of the Borod & Huggins report, commissioned by Madison's board of directors to the law firm of Borod & Huggins, retained to investigate the operations of Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation.

What was the Borod & Huggins report?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Just what I've said. Actually, I believe it may have been required by the cease and desist order, that the savings and loan commission, a preliminary investigation into the events at Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Including these transactions involving the IDC?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then you say:

There is reluctance in releasing this report based on the following circumstances.

You say there is an attorney-client privilege issue. Can you explain what you meant—talking about the Borod & Huggins report:

A large portion of the report is dedicated to a summary of the acquisition of property, transactions surrounding the sale of that property, profits claimed by the service corporation in the sales of certain acquisitions and the compensation arrangement for Seth Ward. A major portion of this report is directly related to a lawsuit by Seth Ward, in which he obtained a $400,000 judgment against Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation.

Does that refer to Ward v. Madison you testified about earlier?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Quoting:

Madison Guaranty is attempting to obtain a new trial in Federal court and plans to file a new motion in Federal court to recover $400,000 escrowed judgment funds obtained by the father-in-law of Webb Hubbell.

That's Seth Ward, right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Quoting:

Who was associated with the Rose Law Firm and who was the lead attorney in the referenced suit by Madison.

Am I correct in understanding that at this point, Madison Guaranty, which was being supervised by the RTC, was trying to recover this $400,000, that Ward had won in the State court?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know on what basis they were asking for a new trial?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I don't recall that. That particular case was in several phases, so I can't recall all the specifics. In fact, it was still in some stage of court when I left Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember anything about the grounds or the reasons why the RTC was claiming that they had a right to recover the $400,000 that Ward had won in the State?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, the $400,000 was a bond that was posted in State court, pending an appeal. During that time, and this is just from my memory, the suit was removed by the RTC or FDIC—I can't remember, RTC I believe—to Federal court, that bond was released to Mr. Ward, on a technicality.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But putting aside the bond, your understanding at this point was they were trying to reopen that $400,000 State court judgment and get some of that money back from Mr. Ward; is that right?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, basically, yes, I think.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then you go on the next page:

The Borod & Huggins Report is only a general, preliminary investigative report compiled from investigation and voluntary interviews of persons without benefit of oath. The investigation was primarily conducted by the attorney retained for the drafting, filing, and preliminary discovery in the Frost audit suit. The Gerrish firm's work papers transferred . . .

What was the Gerrish firm doing?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Actually, the Gerrish & McCrary firm was two of the attorneys that had formerly practiced under the Borod & Huggins firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Quoting:

The Gerrish firm's work papers transferred to the Rose Law Firm would have more specific findings relating to the Frost audits at Madison than would be revealed in the investigative report.

Based on the aforementioned reasons, it is my unqualified belief that release of this report to the Rose Law Firm would not have any positive impact on Madison's recovery in the Frost suit, and may, in fact, adversely affect Madison Guaranty's interests in other litigation.

That "other litigation" refers to the continuing case against Mr. Ward?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Could you explain to us why it is that you felt that you didn't want to have the Rose Law Firm to have the Borod & Huggins report relating to this preliminary investigation of this series of transactions, and why you felt that having the Rose Law Firm get possession of that report could adversely affect Madison Guaranty's interests in the word litigation?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think that is fairly obvious, you know, the close relationship between the lead attorney in the Frost audit suit and Mr. Ward himself.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The lead attorney in the Frost audit was who?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Webb Hubbell.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Ms. Breslaw get back to you in any way or anyone else on her behalf get back to you regarding this letter?

Ms. STRAYHORN. She did not talk to me personally. I believe she may have discussed this with members of the RTC.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the result?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I think it was her decision that the Frost audit suit would be tried outside of the institution.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the decision with respect to whether the Borod & Huggins report would be turned over to the Rose Law Firm?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Apparently it was disregarded.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say "it was disregarded," you mean your request was disregarded?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I would like to follow up, thank you. First of all, with respect to the appeal that was pending in connection with the attempt to recover the $400,000 which had been awarded by judgment to Mr. Ward, what was the ultimate result?

Ms. STRAYHORN. The ultimate result was, and my last knowledge of that, it was still pending at the time I left Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were you advised that the matter was settled and substantially all that money was covered?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I did speak with one of the attorneys at some point when he told me it had been resolved and they had recovered the $400,000.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK, that part of it was resolved. With respect to your putting Ms. Breslaw on notice that you saw this possible conflict, had anybody from the Rose Firm, to your knowledge, been clamoring to get this Borod & Huggins report or were you simply alerting Ms. Breslaw to the possibility that this might constitute a problem, if it were turned over?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I believe the substance of the letter was, and I think this may not have been the first letter, I was—it was apparent to me that Ms. Breslaw wasn't aware of certain relationships and other litigation that was going on in the receivership, I believe, at the time.

I felt that it was my duty to put her on notice of certain relationships and stances our "assigned" attorneys were working under. She was working outside of that realm of the RTC staff attorneys.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you draft this letter on your own, the one in front of you, or did someone help you with that?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, this was mine.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You put her on notice, and my question was, had it come to your attention that anyone from the Rose Firm had specifically solicited the Borod & Huggins report, or was trying to get ahold of it? Or was it the case that you were trying to be cautious to make sure that it wasn't inadvertently turned over?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, apparently someone had requested a copy of that report. I can't remember if it had actually been delivered to them—maybe I just wanted her to be aware of this stance that the RTC had taken on this report on previous occasions.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me see if I can help you. We have your statement prepared on April 11, 1994, to the RTC. I guess this is an affidavit signed by you. Do you have that in front of you?

Ms. STRAYHORN. No, I believe what I have is—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me make sure that you have it.

Ms. STRAYHORN [continuing]. The law firm's?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have that, Ms. Strayhorn?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir, the RTC—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you turn to the last page of the affidavit, which would be page 5.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There it says: "I have also been shown a letter I wrote to April Breslaw dated January 25, 1990." That would be the letter that you have been referring to here today?

Ms. STRAYHORN. The previous letter, yes, I believe there was a previous letter.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. "This letter"—

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Quoting:

This letter addressed my concern with releasing the Borod & Huggins investigative report to the Rose Law Firm. I do not recall if the report was ever released to the Rose Law Firm. I would have no knowledge of any information involving the Seth Ward case being communicated to Webb Hubbell.

Is that your recollection today?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes. If I signed an affidavit.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you sign it? It has a signature there.

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's me.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I am not sure—your copy doesn't have a signature?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Yes, that's my signature.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK, my question is whether that is consistent with your recollection today, your affidavit back in 1994?

Ms. STRAYHORN. I would rely on this information, yes, but isn't this basically what I have just said?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I wanted to clarify, to put a period at the end of the paragraph that was coming along here. First, that the $400,000 was recovered by Madison or its successor in interest, from Mr. Ward. Second, that you had no reason to believe that the Borod & Huggins report was ever turned over to the Rose Law Firm, and more particularly, that Webb Hubbell ever saw that report. That's all.

Ms. STRAYHORN. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Strayhorn, I have the the January 25th letter, in which you object to the release of the report. It says—there is handwriting in the upper right-hand corner of the first page. Do you recognize the handwriting?

Ms. STRAYHORN. That's mine.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What does it say?

Ms. STRAYHORN. It says "reviewed by Don Cypert before mailing 1/29/90" and my initials.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was Don Cypert?

Ms. STRAYHORN. Donald Cypert was the specialist in charge for the RTC that was assigned to our institution.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I have no questions. I have a couple of observations I want to make, but—

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Strayhorn, we want to thank you for coming in and giving us the testimony that you did. We certainly hope that things in the future go smoother, rather than rougher. I know that you are anticipating certain things later, but we want to commend you. I think I speak for both sides in saying that you have been one of those witnesses who has attempted to spell out things as she recalls them to the best of your ability. We are deeply appreciative of your cooperation.

Ms. STRAYHORN. Well, I do want you to know that I do appreciate your consideration and the care that your staff has given me. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Ms. Strayhorn.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a need for the two staffers to get together promptly and work on a deposition schedule with respect to witnesses. We have one but it is very truncated, and it seemed to me that—in fact, I had a discussion with staff about a list of witnesses and then which ones of them we thought we would need to depose. Some of them have done extensive testimony, as had Ms. Strayhorn.

If we could have a full scale meeting, I would be happy to participate in it if the Chairman deems it advisable. Hopefully we might work out a deposition schedule so we have a clear idea of how we are proceeding, which witnesses were to be deposed, and when those depositions might be arranged.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask the Majority staff to get together with the Minority. Hopefully, after we adjourn, the two sides can meet and work out scheduling for the future witnesses.

We stand in adjournment until 10 a.m. Tuesday morning.

[Whereupon, at 1:35 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10 a.m., on Tuesday, February 6, 1996.]

 Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Dear Jim:

This letter is to set forth our agreement concerning the property commonly referred to as all the land owned by the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock.

On or about the 13th day of September, 1985, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association agreed to acquire all of Industrial Development Company of Little Rock's property except the Timex Building. In the agreement, Madison has the right to assign its rights to that agreement to any entity or individual. As part of the agreement, I have agreed to take title to all of the assets and property north of 145th Street, the water and sewer improvements, and the water and sewage treatment ponds south of 145th Street. Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association will agree to lend me on a non-recourse basis the purchase price secured only by a mortgage of those parcels and the water and sewerage.

Madison Guaranty will have an option for at least 270 days to purchase the property from me at any time during the amount of the note paid all interest thereon. It is the intention of both Madison and myself to attempt to develop all of the property acquired from I.D.C., and sell it as quickly as possible. If there is any purchase of the property or any portion thereof during the 270 day period, the sale price will be mutually approved by me and Madison Financial Corporation. The proceeds of any sale will be applied toward the promissory note, less a ten percent commission to be paid to me if the property is sold by me, or at Madison's discretion, the particular piece of property may be decided back to Madison prior to the execution of the sales transaction. If it is sold by anyone else, then the proceeds will go to Madison Guaranty, less the commission to the other seller, and a four percent commission to me.

It is also agreed, in addition to the salary I am receiving from Madison Guaranty, on all property acquired from I.D.C. sold either by me or by Madison Guaranty after the exercise of Madison's option, or on that portion of the property already acquired by Madison from I.D.C., I shall receive a ten percent commission on said sale if it is sold by me, and four percent commission if it is sold by anyone else.

Mr. James B. McDougal, President
Madison Financial Corporation
16th and Main Streets
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Dear Mr. McDougal:

This is to set forth our agreement concerning the property commonly referred to as all the land owned by the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock and certain improvements thereon.

On or about the 11th day of September, 1985, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association agreed to acquire all of the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock's property except the grounds and building commonly referred to as the Timex Building. In the agreement Madison has the right to assign its rights to any entity or individual. As part of our agreement, I have agreed to take title to all of the assets of the aforementioned property that is located immediately north of 145th Street, the water and sewer improvements, and the sewer treatment ponds, including the one located south of 145th Street. Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association will agree to lend me the purchase price for this property secured by a mortgage of those parcels and the sewer and water works. Madison Guaranty will pay $35,000.00 to me to have an option for at least 270 days from the date of acquisition to purchase the property from me at any time, in whole or in part, for at least the pro rata amount of the note plus all accrued interest; except one parcel described as follows:

Approximately 22 1/2 acres located and referred to as the Northeast Quadrant of the Interchange of Highway 65 and 145th Street. More specifically described in the attached legal description which is a part of this agreement.

It is the intention of both Madison and myself to attempt to develop all the property acquired from I.D.C. and sell it as quickly as possible. If the property or any portion thereof is sold during the 270 day period, the sale price will be mutually approved by me and Madison Financial Corporation. The proceeds of the sale will be applied toward the promissory note, less a 10% sales commission to be paid to me. At Madison's discretion, any particular piece of property may be deeded back to Madison prior to the execution of a sales transaction.

It is also agreed, in addition to the salary I am receiving from Madison Financial Corporation, I will receive 10% sales commission on all property sold, regardless who sells it, except residential property that will be located south of 145th Street, in which case I will receive 4% commission if sold by any other person.

During the term of the option period, all of the net revenues of the water works and sewer department shall be forwarded directly to Madison Guaranty for application toward the note, unless such facilities are sold sooner. Madison Financial Corporation will also be responsible for all taxes, special assessments, dues, insurance premiums, etc. during the period of this option.

I would appreciate your acknowledging and agreeing to the terms of the letter of agreement.

Sincerely,

 Seth Ward

OFFICIAL RECORD OF INTERVIEW
OFFICE OF INVESTIGATIONS
OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

CASE NUMBER: IO94-096

PARTICIPANTS: Martha Patton, Former Secretary to Webster Hubbell, Rose Law Firm
Karen Hepburn, Senior Special Agent, OIG, FDIC
Ed Slagle, Special Agent, OIG, RTC

DATE/TIME/LOCATION: 12-8-94/1:00 p.m./Little Rock, AR

INTERVIEW CONDUCTED: In Person X By Phone    

PURPOSE: To obtain information regarding her responsibilities as Webster Hubbell's secretary.

RESULTS:

Ms. Patton was interviewed and stated substantially as follows:

She was a secretary in the Litigation Section of the Rose Law Firm (Rose) for approximately six to eight years. She left Rose on December 11, 1994, to accept a job with Judge Thomas Glaze, Arkansas Supreme Court. While at Rose, she was primarily a secretary to Webster Hubbell and Jerry Jones. Her duties included typing, answering the phone and keeping Mr. Hubbell's appointment calendar. She would type letters and memorandums that Mr. Hubbell had dictated for her. While at Rose, she was not responsible for completing conflicts checks or for preparing fee bills.

She recalls that Seth Ward was one of Mr. Hubbell's clients. Mr. Ward had many businesses over the years that Mr. Hubbell did legal work for. She recalls that Mr. Ward had a Datsun dealership, a company that involved school buses and P.O.M., Inc., which was a company the Mr. Ward purchased that related to parking meters. She also recalls that Mr. Hubbell represented Mr. Ward on matters related to ~~Madison~~ Guaranty Savings and Loan Association (Madison), although she could not recall any specific issues related to Madison.

Prepared by Karen S. Hepburn Date: 12-15-94

Concurred by: E. Ed Slagle Date: 12-15-94

Results Continued

Ms. Patton was shown a copy of a letter dated December 11, 1986, from Webb Hubbell to H. Don Denton, Senior Vice President, Madison (See Attachment 1). The letter is not on Rose letterhead, rather, it has Seth Ward's name and address at the top. Ms. Patton stated that she could not recall typing this specific letter but that she believed she did because it has her initials at the bottom. She further believes she typed the letter because the type resembles the IBM typewriter that she had while at Rose.

Ms. Patton was shown a copy of a letter dated September 24, 1985, from Seth Ward to James McDougal, President, Madison Financial Corporation (See Attachment 2). The letter is not on Rose letterhead, rather, it has Mr. Ward's name and address at the top. Ms. Patton stated that she could not recall typing this specific letter either but that she believed she did because the type is similar to the IBM typewriter and the second page is formatted in the style she used while a Rose secretary. She further stated that both letters appear to be her style of typing.

She said that she had no knowledge of the issues the letters dealt with because she did not pay much attention to what she was typing other than to make sure she typed it correctly.

1 promissory note from Seth Ward to Madison Guaranty Savings &
2 Loan.

3 THE COURT: And what's the exhibit number?

4 MS. BARTLEY: Exhibit number is Defendant's
5 Exhibit 1.

6 THE COURT: We will let that be admitted.

7 (Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibit 1 was identified
8 for the record and received into evidence.)

9 MS. BARTLEY: Your Honor, I have the original of 10 that note, but I would like to substitute a copy for court
11 purposes.

12 THE COURT: That will be fine.

13 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Mr. Latham, can you identify 14 Defendant's Exhibit 1?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Is that a promissory note that Mr. Ward gave to Madison
17 Guaranty?

18 A. Yes, it is, in March of '86.

19 MS. BARTLEY: Your Honor, I offer Defendant's
20 Exhibit 1.

21 THE COURT: We've admitted it.

22 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Now, can you tell the jury what you
23 recall of the circumstances surrounding Mr. Ward borrowing
24 $400,000 from Madison Guaranty?

25 A. At that time Mr. Ward was needing about $400,000 in cash

1 for some personal reasons. The service corporation was not in
2 a position at that time, if I remember correctly, to pay him
3 the $300,000 or so that was owed in commissions. The savings
4 and loan loaned Seth the money secured by a mortgage on tracts
5 27 and 28 of Holman Acres.

6 Q. I have shown you what's already been introduced as 7 Plaintiff's Exhibit 19, a $300,000 promissory note from Madison
8 Financial Corporation to Seth Ward dated about a week later,
9 April 7th, 1986. What can you tell the jury about the 10 circumstances surrounding the making of that note?

11 A. It was discovered at that time -- I believe Seth brought 12 it to our attention -- that it was not documented anywhere that 13 the service corporation, Madison Financial, owed Seth the 14 $300,000 for commissions. Seth was concerned, and rightly so,
15 that should something happen to the people that, you know, were 16 cognizant of this, there would be no documentation. Seth would 17 not be able to prove that that corporation owed him some money.
18 We structured this note as evidence of that debt.

19 Q. Did any money actually change hands?

20 A. No. The consideration in essence was already given.
21 The money was already owed to Seth as commissions. Seth did 22 not pay cash to the service corporation for this. This was 23 evidence of a debt that was already owed by the service
24 corporation to Seth.

25 Q. Now, was Mr. Ward concerned also because there were

1 federal examiners at Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

2 A. I think that may have been of some concern to him as 3 well.

4 Q. I want you to look at now what's been introduced as 5 Defendant's Exhibit J, an option to purchase tracts 27 and 28
6 of Holman Acres. Can you tell the jury about the circumstances
7 surrounding the financial corporation taking an option out on 8 this property?

9 A. Yes. I know this is confusing, but the loan was done
10 really at that time in lieu of the option. The option more 11 concretely or more accurately reflects the nature of the 12 transaction, that being that the service corporation owed Seth
13 $300,000 in commissions. In the initial purchase of all of 14 that property, Seth retained tracts 27 and 28 of Holman Acres
15 as his commission, which was later to be bought by the service
16 corporation. The option allows the service corporation to buy 17 the property from Seth, thus Seth receives the $300,000, and 18 the service corporation would have the property.

19 The note was done very quickly to make sure that that 20 debt was evidenced should something happen to anybody to 21 protect Seth. The note, however, would have left, if that was 22 the way it was finally structured, would have left Seth with 23 the $300,000 plus the property, which was not the intent of the 24 transaction.

25 MR. JENNINGS: If the Court please, we object to

1 that statement as being intent to vary the terms of the written
2 agreement by oral testimony.

3 THE COURT: Objection be denied.

4 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Mr. Latham --

5 MR. JENNINGS: May I ask this witness what's the 6 source of his information?

7 THE COURT: I'll let you cross him.

8 MR. JENNINGS: You mean later?

9 THE COURT: After while.

10 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Now, you've testified that the note
11 was to evidence -- the note given by MFC to Ward was evidence
12 of $300,000; the option was to effectuate the intent, which was 13 to purchase tracts 27 and 28 from Mr. Ward for $300,000. Then 14 Mr. Ward would have the money, and Madison Financial 15 Corporation would have the land; is that correct?

16 A. Yes, that's correct.

17 Q. Now, the option is in the amount of $400,000. Do you
18 know why it's taken for 400,000?

19 A. No, other than when it was drawn up it may have been to 20 offset the note, which was also for $400,000. I believe at the 21 time the balance on the note was 300,000, that 100,000 had been 22 paid off, the 300,000 remaining being -- what I remember as 23 being the amount of the commissions. That would be the only 24 thing I could think of on the option.

25 Q. Was MFC able to exercise the option and purchase the

1 property after taking it on May 1st, 1986?

2 A. I don't believe it was at that time, no.

3 Q. Let me ask you to look at Defendant's Exhibit 4, dated 4 June 6th, 1986, which has been already introduced and which 5 bears your signature, does it not?

6 A. Yes, it does.

7 Q. Would you tell the jury -- this is a release of Mr. Ward
8 from the obligation to pay the $400,000 note. Would you tell
9 the jury about the circumstances surrounding this release?

10 A. Yes. Seth at this point in time was concerned because 11 the service corporation at that time was not able to exercise
12 that option and thereby buy the property from them and pay them
13 the $300,000 in cash. Yet he had a loan to the savings and 14 loan in which he owed money to the savings and loan, secured by 15 that property. He did not want to be in a position where the 16 service corporation could not buy the property and thereby pay
17 him the $300,000 and yet he have to pay the savings and loan
18 back the $300,000 that was owed on its note.

19 For that reason we released him from liability, not 20 liability, but we released him from personal liability and set 21 up the savings and loan's only recourse as going against the 22 land itself so that if that case happened, if the service
23 corporation could not pay Seth the $300,000, then he would -- 24 the savings and loan could take the property, and Seth would 25 not have to pay the $300,000 back to the savings and loan.

1 MR. JENNINGS: If the Court please, we want to 2 show our objection to this testimony with regard to the oral
3 agreements that differ entirely from the written agreement and 4 with regard to the alleged purpose.

5 THE COURT: You are testifying in conclusions
6 there. You might ought to rephrase your questions and not 7 testify in conclusions. Step up here a minute and let me make 8 sure. Step up here, Mr. Jennings, Ms. Bartley.

9 MS. BARTLEY: Excuse me, Your Honor.
10 (Conference at the bench between counsel and the 11 Court.)

12 (Thereupon, the following proceedings continued in 13 open court:)

14 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Mr. Latham, did you discuss this 15 release with Mr. Ward?

16 A. Yes, I did.

17 Q. And did Mr. Ward understand that this was an offset to 18 his commissions?

19 MR. JENNINGS: If the Court please, we object to 20 that as being a conclusion of the witness.

21 THE COURT: Don't lead your witness, please,
22 ma'am.

23 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) What did Mr. Ward express to you what 24 his understanding was of this release?

25 A. Well, Seth had requested this release because of just

1 what we discussed, that if the service corporation was unable
2 to pay him the $300,000, he was liable to pay the savings and
3 loan back that $300,000, the $300,000 representing his 4 commissions on the initial transaction and the purchase of the 5 property at 145th Street.

6 Q. So did you as representative of the financial 7 corporation offer to offset commissions by this release?

8 A. By the savings and loan, yes.

9 Q. Yes.

10 MR. JENNINGS: If the Court please, we object to 11 that. The savings and loan, according to them, is not a party
12 to the agreement.

13 MS. BARTLEY: Your Honor, it may not be introduced 14 yet. Let me see if I have it back here. Just a moment, Your 15 Honor.

16 Q. (By Ms. Bartley) Mr. Latham, while we are looking for 17 that exhibit, let me hand you what's been introduced as 18 Plaintiff's Exhibit 2 (sic), which is a September 24th letter
19 agreement marked void and Plaintiff's Exhibit 4, another
20 September 24th, 1985 letter agreement. Have you ever seen or 21 did you while you were at Madison Guaranty ever see either one
22 of those letter agreements?

23 A. Yes. I don't know how to differentiate. They are both 24 dated the same date. But exhibit number 4 was one that Seth
25 had brought to my attention around May or June of '86.

- 1 Q. Which one? Is that the one that is not marked void?
- 2 A. Right.
- 3 Q. The one which is not marked void, Plaintiff's Exhibit 4,
- 4 is that the one that Mr. Ward showed you in May or June?
- 5 A. That is correct.
- 6 Q. Before that time had you been aware that Mr. Ward was
- 7 claiming commission on individual pieces of property that were
- 8 sold from the IDC property?
- 9 A. Not until Seth asked me. I think he came to me asking
- 10 for an accounting of the commissions that were owed to them.
- 11 That seems like it was around May or June of '86.
- 12 Q. I hand you what's been introduced as Defendant's Exhibit
- 13 37, which is a memo from Seth Ward returning a $70,943.47 note.
- 14 Could you tell the jury what you recall about this?
- 15 A. The $70,000, in discussions I've had with both parties
- 16 here, has turned up several times. I really do not remember
- 17 anything concerning the $70,000.
- 18 Q. Did Mr. Ward return that note after being released from
- 19 personal liability on the note that's cited in that memo?
- 20 A. I believe he did.
- 21 Q. You stated that Mr. Ward wanted documentation of what
- 22 was owed him back in April of 1986 when Madison Financial
- 23 Corporation gave Mr. Ward the note for $300,000; is that
- 24 correct?
- 25 A. Correct.

1 Q. Did you find any letter agreement at that time when you
2 were looking for documentation of the $300,000 in commission?

3 A. No. At that time it appeared that there was not any 4 evidence of the amount that was owed to Seth.

5 Q. In your discussions with Mr. Ward about the May 1st
6 option to purchase Holman Acres, did Mr. Ward tell you about 7 this ~~agreement~~?

8 A. Yes. That was about the time that he was asking for an 9 accounting to find out where he stood under that agreement as 10 far as commissions were concerned.

11 Q. So that was the first time that you learned of the 12 September 24th ~~letter~~ agreement?

13 A. That was the first that I remember of it.

14 MS. BARTLEY: I pass the witness.

15 CROSS-EXAMINATION

16 BY MR. JENNINGS:

17 Q. Mr. Latham, the note executed by Mr. Ward to Madison
18 Guaranty Savings & Loan for $400,000 was dated March 31, 1986,
19 is it not?

20 A. That's correct.

21 Q. And shortly after that note was executed Mr. Ward paid
22 back $100,000 of that loan, did he not?

23 A. I believe that's correct.

24 Q. Within a matter of perhaps a week?

25 A. I think that's correct.

1 A. There was another agreement prepared. I don't know if I
2 caused it to be prepared or someone else caused it.

3 Q. Who would the someone else have been?

4 A. It could have been Mr. McDougal.

5 Q. I hand you what's been marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 4.
6 Do you recognize that?

7 (Thereupon, Plaintiff's Exhibit 4 was identified
8 for the record.)

9 A. Yes, sir, I do.

10 Q. What is that?

11 A. That's the agreement which reflects the agreement that 12 we had agreed to prior to entering the purchase of the IDC
13 property.

14 Q. By whom is that agreement signed?

15 A. It is signed by Mr. McDougal, president, Madison
16 Financial Corporation, and Seth Ward.

17 Q. What is the date on that agreement?

18 A. The date of the agreement is 24th of September 1985.

19 Q. Was it executed on that date?

20 A. No, sir. It was not executed on that date. It replaced
21 the original agreement that was executed on that date.

22 Q. So you dated it back to the date of the agreement that's 23 been introduced as 4 (sic)?

24 A. That's correct, sir.

25 Q. In what respects did this agreement, which is Exhibit 4,

OPTION TO PURCHASE REAL ESTATE

This Option granted this 1st day of May, 1986, by SETH WARD and YVONNE ANNA WARD, his wife (collectively "Grantor"), to MADISON FINANCIAL CORPORATION ("Optionee"),

W-I-T-N-E-S-S-E-T-H:

1. GRANT OF OPTION. In consideration of Optionee's payment to the Grantor of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00), and other good and valuable consideration, the receipt and adequacy of which is hereby acknowledged, Grantor hereby grants to Optionee an exclusive and irrevocable Option to Purchase the following described property together with all buildings and improvements thereon, situated in the City of Little Rock, Pulaski County, Arkansas, to-wit:

A tract of land located in the NE 1/4 SW 1/4 Section 24, T-1-S, R-12-W, Pulaski County, Arkansas, more particularly described as: Starting at an iron pin marking the intersection of the North right-of-way line of East 145th Street and the West right-of-way line of Dineen Drive; thence S89° 44' 40" E along said North right-of-way line, 22.75 ft.; thence Southeasterly and continuing along said North right-of-way line, being the arc of a 2,915 ft. radius curve to the right having an arc distance of 559.07 ft.; thence S78° 45' 20"E and continuing along said North right-of-way line, 2724.44 ft. to the point of beginning of the tract of land described herein; thence N 11° 14' 40" E and perpendicular to said North right-of-way line, 522.72 ft. to a point; thence S78° 45' 20"E and parallel with said North right-of-way line, 555.56 ft. to a point; thence S11° 14' 40" W and perpendicular to said North right-of-way line 522.72 ft. to a point on said North right-of-way line; thence N78° 45' 20" W along said North right-of-way, 555.56 ft. to the point of beginning, containing 290,402.32 sq. ft. or 6.6667 acres more or less.

2. PURCHASE PRICE. The purchase price for the property hereinabove described, together with all improvements thereon, shall be Four Hundred Thousand Dollars ($400,000.00).

3. EXPIRATION DATE. This Option shall expire at 6:00 o'clock, P.M., Central Time, on August 1, 1986.

4. FAILURE TO EXERCISE OPTION. If Optionee does not exercise this Option as herein provided, all sums paid by him hereunder shall be retained by the Grantor free of all claims of Optionee, and neither party shall have any further rights or claims against the other.

5. EXERCISE OF OPTION. This Option shall be exercised by Optionee's delivering to the Grantor written notice of such --exercise on or before the expiration date, or any extension thereof, or by Optionee's mailing such written notice of exercise by certified mail to Grantor at least two days before the expiration date, or any extension thereof; and such notice, if so mailed, shall be deemed valid and effective whether or not it actually is delivered to Grantor prior to the expiration date, or any extension thereof.

6. CLOSING REQUIREMENTS. In the event of Optionee's exercise of this Option:

a. Closing will occur within 30 days after the exercise of this Option, which date may be extended by mutual agreement;

b. The Grantor shall deliver at closing to Optionee, or his nominee, a general warranty deed conveying good and marketable title in fee simple to the aforesaid premises, free and clear of all liens, encumbrances and tenancies, except those for streets and utilities and tenancies which may be disclosed by Grantor to Optionee prior to the granting of this Option;

c. Taxes and assessments, if any, due on or before the closing date shall be paid by Grantor. Taxes and assessments, if any, for 1986 shall be prorated as of the closing date;

d. Grantor, at Grantor's sole expense, shall furnish Optionee, within 30 days after exercise of the Option, a complete abstract certified to a current date, or at Grantor's option, a commitment for an owner's title insurance policy convertible at closing to an owner's policy issued on ALTA Form B, 1970, reflecting merchantable title satisfactory to Optionee's attorney. In the event an abstract is furnished and an examination of title to said property shall disclose that the same is not good and marketable, and if the cause of such unmarketability shall not be removed by Grantor prior to the date fixed for closing, then Grantor may exercise his option to furnish Optionee a policy of title insurance satisfactory to Optionee. If marketable title cannot be conveyed at closing, any monies paid by Optionee on account of the purchase price of said property, including any sums paid as consideration for the granting of this Option, shall be refunded to Optionee;

e. The risk of loss, damage, condemnation, or destruction of the premises or improvements thereon by fire, or otherwise, until closing shall be on Grantor;

f. Revenue stamps to be placed on the Deed shall be at the expense of Grantor.

7. PAYMENT OF PURCHASE PRICE. At closing, Optionee will pay Grantor in cash an amount equal to the purchase price set out in accordance with Paragraph 2 hereof.

8. NOTICES. Any notices required hereunder shall be effective if given to the parties hereto at the following addresses, or such other address as either party may subsequently designate in writing:

OPTIONEE: Madison Financial Corporation
1308 South Main
Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

GRANTOR: Seth Ward
16th & Main

Re: Madison Guaranty vs. Frost Audit Company, et al.
 USDC No. LR-C-89-0216
 Release of Investigative Report - Borod & Huggins

Dear Ms. Breslaw:

It has been reported to me that during my absence from the office, the Rose Law Firm requested a copy of the Borod & Huggins report commissioned by Madison's board of directors to the law firm of Borod & Huggins retained to investigate the operations of Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation. There is reluctance in releasing this report based on the following circumstances.

One, the report is considered client/attorney privilege and I am sure the conservatorship would not want to waive the right to claim that privilege in litigation.

A large portion of the report is dedicated to a summary of the acquisition of property, transactions surrounding the sale of that property, profits claimed by the service corporation in the sales of certain acquisitions and the compensation arrangement for Seth Ward. A major portion of this report is directly related to a lawsuit by Seth Ward in which he obtained a $400,000 judgment against Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation. Madison Guaranty is attempting to obtain a new trial in federal court and plans to file a new motion in federal court to recover $400,000 escrowed judgment funds obtained by the father-in-law of Webb Hubbell who is associated with the Rose Law Firm and is the lead attorney in the referenced suit by Madison. These escrowed funds (in lieu of supersedeas bond) have been taken by Ward through an error in jurisdiction between the State Court of Appeals and the federal court.

Frost Audit Suit

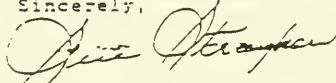

January 27, 1990

The Borod & Huggins Report is only a general, preliminary investigative report compiled from investigation and voluntary interviews by persons without benefit of oath. The investigation was primarily conducted by the attorney retained for the drafting, filing and preliminary discovery in the Frost Audit suit. The Gerrish firm's work papers transferred to the Rose Law Firm would have more specific findings relating to the Frost audits at Madison than would be revealed in the investigative report.

Based on the aforementioned reasons, it is my unqualified belief that release of this report to the Rose Law Firm would not have any positive impact on Madison's recovery in the Frost suit and may, in fact, adversely effect Madison Guaranty's interests in other litigation. Therefore, I would impose upon your good judgment to instruct the Rose firm to obtain their information through specific requests either directed to me or Lee Sorenson, the investigator assigned to this matter.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,

Sue Strayhorn
Legal Officer

INVESTIGATION OF WHITEWATER DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1996

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WHITEWATER
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS,
Washington, DC.

The Committee met at 10 a.m., in room 216 of the Hart Senate Office Building, Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (Chairman of the Committee) presiding.

OPENING COMMENT OF CHAIRMAN ALFONSE M. D'AMATO

The CHAIRMAN. Good morning.

Ms. Black and Mr. Switzer, if you have any statements or comments you would like to make, we would be pleased to receive them at this time.

Mr. Switzer, Ms. Black, stand for purposes of taking the oath.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF STEVEN A. SWITZER DEPUTY INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR AUDIT OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SWITZER. I have some introductory remarks. My name is Steven A. Switzer, and I am the Deputy Inspector General for Audit in the Office of Inspector General of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I was the Deputy Inspector General of the Office of Inspector General of the Resolution Trust Corporation until December 31, 1995, when our office was merged into the FDIC Office of Inspector General.

Joining me today is Patricia M. Black, who is the Assistant Inspector General for Inspections and Legal Support and formerly the Counsel to the Inspector General at the Office of Inspector General in the Resolution Trust Corporation.

On August 3, 1995, the RTC Office of Inspector General issued its Report of Investigation Concerning the Rose Law Firm, investigation number WA-94-0016. That report addressed the RTC OIG's investigation into possible conflicts of interest of Rose Law Firm representation in its representation of the Resolution Trust Corporation, including any arising from the Rose Law Firm's representation of the agency in litigation against Frost & Company, formerly the independent auditors for Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association.

On January 15, 1996, the Special Committee requested that we review billing records of the Rose Law Firm that were produced to the Special Committee in early January 1996. These records were not available to us during our investigation or prior to the issuance of our report. The Special Committee asked us to evaluate what, if any, effect these records would have on our report.

I would like to emphasize that our review of these billing records and their impact on our report is not yet complete, but we are pleased to answer any questions that the Special Committee may have today with a regard to the results of our review to date.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Black, do you have a statement?

SWORN TESTIMONY OF PATRICIA M. BLACK
ASSISTANT INSPECTOR GENERAL FOR INSPECTIONS AND LEGAL SUPPORT, FDIC
FORMER COUNSEL TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Black and Mr. Switzer, on behalf of the Committee, I would like to thank you for your indulgence yesterday with regard to your depositions, which I believe ended last night at 8 p.m.

Ms. Black, on August 10, 1995, you testified in the House of Representatives with regard to your report that was issued on the Rose conflict issue, isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. That's right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The focus of your testimony yesterday and today will be on the Rose billing records which were recently discovered at the White House. You have never given public testimony on those billing records before today, is that right?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Switzer, you have never testified publicly on the Rose billing records and the significance of those billing records with regard to your conflicts analysis before today?

Mr. SWITZER. No, I have not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, the first time you ever gave any testimony on the significance of the Rose billing records was yesterday at your deposition?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, it was.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Black, that is also true for you, correct?

Ms. BLACK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Black, under the Model Rules of Professional Responsibility and RTC regulations, Rose was obligated to disclose to the RTC if it was representing or had represented any client who had an interest that was actually or potentially adverse to the RTC in the Frost litigation?

Ms. BLACK. The model rules are the Arkansas rules governing the behavior of attorneys and the need to disclose conflicts that attorneys might have between representation of one client and another. RTC had a number of handbooks and other issuances which go beyond the model rules and require disclosure of any potential conflict as soon as that becomes known to a law firm.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Under the model rules, if a lawyer's own conduct might be at issue in a case, a conflict issue could arise?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. A key issue in the Frost litigation was an action that Webster Hubbell was the lead attorney on behalf of the RTC against the Frost accounting firm which audited Madison's books?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Another key issue in that litigation was the extent to which Frost's audits caused Madison's losses?

Ms. BLACK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Frost claimed insider transactions involving people like Mr. McDougal were what caused the losses and whether the audits were good or bad was irrelevant?

Ms. BLACK. That was Frost's primary defense.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The extent Madison was involved in the Castle Grande transaction was important to your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. The extent to which Rose was involved and Madison's involvement, yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The RTC subpoenaed billing records and other materials from the Rose Law Firm on March 4, 1994; is that right?

Ms. BLACK. If you're referring to the RTC IG, our subpoena was March 15.

Mr. GIUFFRA. March 15. You were subsequently advised by Rose that no billing records existed?

Ms. BLACK. Rose did provide a lot of billing records with regard to the work directly for the RTC.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But with regard to the Madison representation?

Ms. BLACK. The March 15 subpoena also asked for any invoices that had been submitted to Madison itself in connection with Rose's work for them and Rose indicated that it had no such invoices.

Mr. GIUFFRA. When you learned of the discovery of these billing records at the White House, what was your reaction?

Ms. BLACK. I was curious as to what they showed.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Am I correct that when you issued your report on August 3, 1995, the Rose billing material was very sparse?

Ms. BLACK. As to their Madison representation, yes, sir, it was.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You only obtained a handful of Rose invoices with regard to the Madison representation?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, and those we found in the Madison records which RTC had inherited.

Mr. GIUFFRA. It was difficult for you to understand what work Rose had done for Madison because of the absence of this billing information?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. We had, as I said, a few bills which described in summary fashion what had been done. For the most part, there was no indication as to the precise nature of the work or when the work was done.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would you agree that billing records are typically the best available evidence for trying to ascertain the extent and nature of the law firm's work with regard to a conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. They are the best that I have seen in this case, in any event.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would you agree that the billing records that were found at the White House are very important evidence for purposes of your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. They certainly are extremely relevant evidence, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Switzer, you would agree that these billing records that were found at the White House are extremely relevant evidence for your conflicts analysis?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir, I would. I mean in the sense that we did not have that information when we did our work.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Black, in your report you included a recitation of various facts that were material to the conflicts inquiry.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would have included additional facts had this billing material been available; isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. We would have.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You might have asked additional questions of witnesses had the billing material been available?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, you might have interviewed additional witnesses had the billing material been available when you were doing your investigation?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The RTC IG did not interview Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. No, we did not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You did not interview Mrs. Clinton because you did not believe there was sufficient evidence of her involvement with regard to the Madison representation to justify an interview?

Ms. BLACK. That is essentially correct, and she, of course, had done no work for the RTC itself.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If you had had these billing records back in 1994 and 1995, would you have attempted to interview Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. I think that is quite likely.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why would you have attempted to interview Mrs. Clinton if you had these billing records available?

Ms. BLACK. To determine the extent to which Rose may have had actual or potential conflicts, which was the scope of our investigation. It is important to know what was done in connection with the representation of Madison. The billing records indicate with some specificity what was done, and they indicate that Mrs. Clinton was actively billing on a couple of matters that were of interest to us in our conflicts investigation.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you recall your House testimony where you said—and I'll quote it at page 52—"we have no evidence that Mrs. Clinton worked on Castle Grande." Do you recall that testimony?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, I do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In light of the newly discovered billing records, would you want to amplify or amend your prior testimony?

Ms. BLACK. First, let me clarify that I was using the term "Castle Grande," as we at the RTC always have, interchangeably with the IDC matter. We typically refer to it as the IDC/Castle Grande matter, and I was answering that question on that basis. That answer would not have been the same had I had the billing records.

Mr. GIUFFRA. How would you have changed your answer in light of these billing records with regard to Mrs. Clinton's role with regard to Rose's representation of Madison Guaranty?

Ms. BLACK. As to the IDC—

Mr. GIUFFRA. IDC/Castle Grande transaction.

Ms. BLACK. We still do not know what Mrs. Clinton's role was in the time period of the closing of the initial IDC purchase because we don't have the backup billing memoranda for the IDC matter number 5.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You have the invoice for the September bill and the October bill?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You don't have the billing memoranda for the September or the October bill?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct, nor do we have it for the January bill, which appears to be a compilation of work that was done between September and January. So we still don't know the precise nature of her involvement. However, we do have the billing memorandum that backs up a part of that January bill that indicates work that was done in December 1985 and January 1986. We have a billing memorandum on a general matter, which has an entry obviously IDC-related and has been so noted on the bill. That showed Mrs. Clinton was actively billing on the IDC matter.

In addition, Mrs. Clinton continued to bill during the course of 1986 on some subsequent IDC transactions that included, for example, the May 1st option agreement which gave Madison Financial an option to purchase the final parcel, 22½-acres known as Holman Acres from Seth Ward.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In your August 3rd report, you indicated that conflicting evidence existed as to whether Mrs. Clinton or Mr. Hubbell was the billing partner at Rose regarding the IDC/Castle Grande matter.

Ms. BLACK. That is correct. There was a handwritten document that appeared to be the document that opened matter number 5 within the Rose Law Firm. It was provided to us by the Rose Law Firm and the billing partner was listed as number 42. Number 42 was Mr. Hubbell within the Rose Law Firm. We asked Mr. Hubbell if he was ever the billing partner. He indicated that he was not. We were aware that Mrs. Clinton's billing code for that purpose was number 43. The billing records that we now have list Mrs. Clinton as the billing partner on Madison/IDC.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, on all Madison matters?

Ms. BLACK. On all Madison matters, that is correct. There are a total of six of them.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up on the Elmo a June 17, 1985 Rose letter to Beverly Bassett Schaffer. This letter was referenced in your report of August 3, 1995, and you described an exchange of correspondence between the Arkansas S&L Board and Mr. Massey of the Rose Law Firm. Your attention was focused to the question of the so-called direct investment limitation, which is a matter of Arkansas law.

This was a letter that was submitted to the S&L board in connection with Madison's role to open a broker-dealer subsidiary, isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it was.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Massey indicated that this proposed subsidiary would not violate the direct investment limitation; isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could, put the Rose billing record 28965 on the Elmo. This is a record reflecting time of Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Massey. This letter was dated June 17, 1985, and referenced the direct investment rule. This was an application amendment with regard to the proposal to engage in brokerage activities, and the billing record indicates that on June 17, 1985, Mrs. Clinton reviewed this application containing the discussion of the direct investment rule; isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it does.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would the fact that Mrs. Clinton reviewed this amended application which contained reference to the direct investment rule be material for purposes of your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Would it be material because a partner at the Rose Law Firm, as opposed to Mr. Massey who was a young associate, was aware of the direct investment rule?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Broader knowledge of the direct investment rule within the firm would be significant for purposes of your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why would broader knowledge of the direct investment limitation be relevant for purposes of your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. The IDC purchase was, according to the examiners—and I think it's fairly well recognized—was ultimately structured in such a way as to attempt to avoid the 6 percent limitation rule. Mr. Massey was the attorney within the Rose Law Firm who had knowledge of that 6 percent limitation. Mr. Thrash was the attorney within the Rose Law Firm who closed the IDC transaction.

When we were looking at the conflicts question, the issue arose as to whether Rose would have known that the acquisition would have been prohibited by the 6 percent limitation. The fact that Mrs. Clinton apparently reviewed—billed for reviewing a document which references that 6 percent limitation would be relevant to looking at the degree of knowledge within the Rose Law Firm, and Mrs. Clinton was the billing partner for both transactions.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, Mr. Massey did not bill time on the IDC transaction, but Mrs. Clinton did?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Isn't it also true that we now know from the Rose billing records that were discovered at the White House that Mrs. Clinton had at least 15 telephone calls or conferences with Mr. Seth Ward in connection with this IDC matter?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, 15 or 16. One day there's a billing for a telephone conference. There's a comma and it says "conference with"—that appears to be a telephone conference and a meeting. If you count that for two, that's 16.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You're aware that Mr. Ward in a sworn statement to your agency has said that he did not work with Mrs. Clinton on the IDC transaction?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, he did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This discrepancy between the billing records and Mr. Ward's sworn statement with regard to Mrs. Clinton's involvement in the Castle Grande/IDC transaction would have been something that you would have included in your conflicts investigation and analysis?

Ms. BLACK. Had we known about it, we would have indicated that Mr. Ward stated that he did not remember working with Mrs. Clinton. We would also have indicated that Mrs. Clinton had billed for conversations with Mr. Ward.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why would Mrs. Clinton's communications with Mr. Ward, who regulators have said was the straw purchaser on the IDC/Castle Grande transaction, be material for purposes of your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. Mr. Ward was an employee of Madison Financial, and he was also cited by the regulators as being a primary straw purchaser, part of the insider deals that resulted in a substantial loss to the institution.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And Mrs. Clinton's communications with Mr. Ward would be relevant for what reason?

Ms. BLACK. Again, going back to the conflicts investigation, which we were doing, the issue was whether the conduct of Rose could itself become an issue in that litigation. If it had that potential—

Mr. GIUFFRA. The question being whether Rose had knowledge of the sham nature of the transaction?

Ms. BLACK. That is a question, yes. But even if the conduct could become an issue, whether or not the conduct was proven to be misconduct, the very fact that it could become an issue is a fact which would have to—a matter which would have to be disclosed to RTC as a potential conflict.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, Rose's work on the Castle Grande/IDC transaction was never disclosed to the RTC?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir. It was not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Hubbell, who is the billing partner on the Frost matter, in fact, never disclosed it to Ms. Breslaw, according to Ms. Breslaw?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. According to Ms. Breslaw, there was no prior work disclosed by Rose with regard to Madison to her. She said that she found out about it from press reports and called Mr. Hubbell at the Department of Justice to ask him what that was all about. Mr. Hubbell's recollection was that he had told her they had done some work on a couple of minor regulatory matters for the institution.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You previously referenced that the billing records indicate that Mrs. Clinton spent 2 hours on May 1, 1986 drafting the option agreement, and that was dated May 1, 1986. Was the option agreement a way to provide commissions to Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. A second problem that we looked at or potential problem that we looked at in the conflicts investigation was the question of the litigation of Ward v. Madison. April Breslaw, the attorney involved, as well as several other RTC employees, had expressed concern about that particular litigation because of Mr. Hubbell's relationship with Seth Ward; that is to say, Mr. Hubbell is Mr. Ward's son-in-law. So there was a specific concern addressed to the Rose Law Firm——

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, wasn't the option agreement an important part of the litigation between Mr. Ward and Madison?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it was.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The fact that Mrs. Clinton had drafted the option agreement never came out at the trial?

Ms. BLACK. No, it did not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That's something that the RTC would have wanted to know at the time that it retained Madison to represent—Rose to represent the RTC in the Frost litigation?

Ms. BLACK. Because the Ward litigation also involved as a part of this same transaction an underlying note for $300,000, which was part of the damage calculations in Frost, those two cases were closely related, and the prior involvement was a matter which should have been disclosed to the RTC.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We know from the billing records Mrs. Clinton had two telephone calls with a man named Darrell Dover. Do you recall that from examining the billing records?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Dover represented IDC in connection with the sale of the property to Madison and Ward?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, the initial sale.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mrs. Clinton's communications indicate some greater involvement by Rose in the IDC/Castle Grande acquisition?

Ms. BLACK. It indicates some specifics of the involvement, and it indicates some sort of involvement by Mrs. Clinton that we were not previously aware of.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Presumably with regard to the acquisition of the property?

Ms. BLACK. I do not know what the subject of the conversation was. I know that Mr. Dover represented IDC in that transaction.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would have included the fact of those telephone calls in your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We also know from the billing records that on the day before Rose sent a letter to the Arkansas Securities Commission seeking approval of a novel preferred stock offering, that Mrs. Clinton spoke with Beverly Bassett, who was the S&L regulator?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would have included the fact that on the day before this application was submitted, Mrs. Clinton had spoken with Ms. Bassett in your conflicts analysis?

Ms. BLACK. That was a fact that we probably would have included.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could just put up on the Elmo the Hillary Clinton IDC billing analysis that the Committee has prepared. We showed this to you yesterday at your deposition——

Ms. BLACK. You did, but it's blurry. I can't read it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I apologize for that. If I could briefly summarize it, we've been able to identify 15 hours of work that Mrs. Clinton did on the IDC/Castle Grande matter, but then there's this unknown period for which Mrs. Clinton billed $1,818 which at her rate of $125 an hour would constitute 14½ hours of work. Given that we don't know—would you have reported the fact in your conflicts analysis we don't know the full extent of Mrs. Clinton's work on the IDC/Castle Grande matter?

Ms. BLACK. What we would have reported—I believe these are figures taken from the January 1986 invoice and the partial underlying billing memorandum. We would have reported that there were 15 hours that were billed and that were specifically identified in terms of the work that was done on the billing memorandum.

We would have also reported that there was a handwritten change to the total amount billed and indicated what that change was. Whether we would have extrapolated the billing rate and the number of hours that that might represent, I don't know.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The issue would be whether Mrs. Clinton, in fact, did more work on the IDC/Castle Grande matter than previously assumed?

Ms. BLACK. The difference would have been a fact that we would have reported.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And that would have been relevant to the conflicts investigation because it would have shown greater involvement by Rose in this transaction that was criticized as being a sham?

Ms. BLACK. That may well be true.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Switzer, if I could put some questions to you, sir. You've prepared a document. Let's put it up. It's Switzer Exhibit 3. Now, Mr. Switzer, you're an accountant by training?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, I am.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You've audited many law firm bills for the RTC?

Mr. SWITZER. I've managed that type of work, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We know that Mrs. Clinton was the billing partner on the Madison account. In examining the Rose Law Firm bills that were found at the White House—you've done that?

Mr. SWITZER. I'm sorry, would you repeat that, please.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You have examined the Rose Law Firm bills that were found at the White House?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we have.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Am I correct that you've identified a number of discrepancies in the Rose Law Firm Madison bills that were found at the White House?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we have. We identified some differences in there from an accounting point of view which are noteworthy to us, but we don't have an explanation for them.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The discrepancies that you have identified in the Rose bills would be the fact that the amount that's set forth in the billing memo, which sets forth the time on an hourly basis by the lawyers and the actual amount that was invoiced, there's a $5,735 discrepancy; is that right?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, that's what we determined.

Mr. GIUFFRA. With regard to the billing history, which is—what is the billing history?

Mr. SWITZER. In my terms, that's their accounting record of their overall activity. It's a summation on the—summation at the top of the documents that the Committee provided to us.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If you look at the actual invoice, you've identified a $3,170 discrepancy?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Now, obviously the greater the amount of fees collected by Rose, that would be relevant to your conflicts analysis?

Mr. SWITZER. It could have some impact and the most significant impact, of course, would be that there was or was not a conflict.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But the greater the involvement, the more likely that—

Mr. SWITZER. It would indicate greater involvement, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Normally an accountant would assume that a bill that's marked paid has, in fact, been paid; is that right?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, that's the case.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In looking at the September 20, 1985 Rose bill for IDC, which was for $654.30, you note that bill was marked paid; isn't that right?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Therefore, you assume that Madison paid the bill?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes. Basically, it was a transfer from the trust account, my understanding.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You have also noted in your deposition that the October 29, 1985 bill for $550 was marked paid?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So questions have been raised from your audit of these bills of possible double-billing or at least a discrepancy?

Mr. SWITZER. Well, that's based upon the explanation that we heard in testimony by Mr. Clark, that these amounts, for example, in the two you just used, the $654.30 and the $550, that those were, in fact, carried forward—

Mr. GIUFFRA. Into the January 30 bill?

Mr. SWITZER [continuing]. Into the January 30 bill, and the bills being marked paid would seem to suggest that they may have been paid previous to that. I understood what he said, but it didn't make sense from an accounting point of view that you got a paid bill that would have seemed to have been paid twice.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And the only way to find out whether there was double-billing would be to get the trust account records?

Mr. SWITZER. We would need to look at the trust accounting to see what the actual disbursements were and we, in fact, have asked—requested that the FDIC lawyers who have taken this over seek this information either from Rose or from the bank.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Do you know whether the trust account records still exist?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In doing audits of law firm bills, do you often attempt to ascertain whether lawyers properly bill for telephone calls and meetings within a law firm?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we typically do.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So if Lawyer Smith, for example, bills for a meeting with Lawyer Jones, you would want to see whether both of them record that meeting in their time sheets?

Mr. SWITZER. That would be an actual thing to do, to attempt to verify that. In fact, in the audit work that we did in connection with Rose, although it did not cover this Madison work specifically, we did question some $15,000 worth of intraoffice conferences.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So it's a standard procedure with regard to doing an audit of a law firm's bill?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, it is.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up the document that the Committee has prepared of attorney conference billings, now, Mr. Switzer, the Committee has identified 23 instances in which Mrs. Clinton has billed for a conference or telephone call with a lawyer at the Rose Law Firm, and the other lawyer has not billed for that same time. Would this be another area of discrepancy in the Rose bills that were found at the White House with regard to the Madison representation?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes. This would be similar to what we reported in our audit. In other words, there's a lack of verification between the two parties involved or supposedly involved in a conference where the records of one do not support the other one.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That would be something that would be relevant for your conflicts analysis as well?

Mr. SWITZER. Not directly.

Mr. GIUFFRA. It could show that the Rose Law Firm did more work for Madison than——

Mr. SWITZER. Really, it's an accounting or an auditing discrepancy. I don't think it would get at the conflicts issues.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. I am going to yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste, but first, I'm just curious. What is your conflicts analysis with respect to familial relationships?

Ms. BLACK. I guess I'm not sure I understand your question.

Senator SARBANES. If I am a lawyer, do I automatically have a conflict if a family member is on the other side? And how far does that extend?

Ms. BLACK. You do not automatically have a conflict just because any family member is on the other side. I believe the guidance to the model rules suggest that it depends on how close the relationship is, and it also talks about that being a point which you talk to your client about it, and let the client decide. If the client is comfortable——

Senator SARBANES. Are there certain family members that the relationship is presumed to be so close that it automatically is a conflict?

Ms. BLACK. I would have to look back at the comments to see if that was right, but if I understand what you are getting at, son-in-law and father-in-law, is not. With that, I am comfortable.

Senator SARBANES. The fact that your father-in-law is on the other side is not automatically a conflict?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that is correct, yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. There was one line of questioning Mr. Giuffra was putting to you. Is a greater participation or more involvement in and of itself an indication of a greater conflict problem?

Ms. BLACK. That would be something which we would certainly report as a fact for the decider of fact to look at, but what is really important is what was done.

Senator SARBANES. In other words, I could represent someone, have extensive involvement and participation, and no conflict, I take it?

Ms. BLACK. I agree.

Senator SARBANES. Or have very little involvement or participation and yet have a conflict?

Ms. BLACK. I agree with that also.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Good morning, Ms. Black. Good morning, Mr. Switzer.

Ms. BLACK. Good morning.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me start with a minor point I think that you and Mr. Switzer just testified about. That is the way you go about your audits when there's an interfirm conference lawyer A confers with lawyer B. As an auditing procedure, you look to see whether both lawyers have written down time for that conference?

Mr. SWITZER. We would look to that as a form of verification, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. A verification that the conference took place?

Mr. SWITZER. That would tend to support such an event if we didn't have other support.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you're in a normal audit situation, and that would involve a law firm that's working for the RTC, and you're auditing that law firm, and you see a conference between lawyer A and lawyer B. Lawyer A bills for it; lawyer B doesn't bill for that time. You have two possibilities: One, that the conference didn't take place and lawyer A made it up; or two, that lawyer B didn't bill the RTC for the time he spent in the conference that did take place, and therefore, the RTC got a bargain essentially?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes. By that, I mean there are two options there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That would go to the law firm's procedures perhaps and their own way of billing clients if there is an internal conference. Did you find out whether back in 1985 and 1986 the Rose Law Firm had a particular procedure as to whether they would bill clients for internal conferences charging them for each lawyer who participated?

Mr. SWITZER. None that I recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If they had such a procedure whereby they did not bill the client for both attorneys' time, would that make a difference in terms of your analysis?

Mr. SWITZER. It could. However, our audit report did not cover that period of time back then, and Rose's response was that they should have billed for both of the people who were involved in these conferences that we identified.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, we're mixing apples and oranges.

Mr. SWITZER. I understand.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We're talking about your audit, which had to do with work that the Rose Firm did for the Government, for the RTC as its client?

Mr. SWITZER. Which is subsequent to this time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. As compared with the earlier work that was done for a private client?

Mr. SWITZER. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When Rose said to you well, we should have billed for the time of both lawyers, did that mean that the bill was increased?

Mr. SWITZER. That's one of the issues we presented in our audit report to the RTC and now for the FDIC in terms of these questions of cost.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It hasn't been determined whether the Rose Firm would be credited for the extra time put in by attorneys assuming there was an internal meeting?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes. The overall issue has not been resolved at this time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go to sort of a broader picture to put all this in context. Do you have some idea of how many different law firms were retained by the RTC or FDIC in the 1980's?

Mr. SWITZER. Not offhand, no, I don't.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ballpark figure?

Mr. SWITZER. A lot is all I can say.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. More than 1,000?

Mr. SWITZER. Substantially more than 1,000.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Take a minute to confer with the people who may be able to help your recollection.

[Witness conferred with counsel.]

Mr. SWITZER. I would leave it at well over 1,000.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Different law firms. The idea of representing the RTC was in great part to maximize the recovery that the Government could obtain as the result of failed S&L's for which the Government's insurance was brought into play?

Mr. SWITZER. In general, that was a basic driving force of the RTC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was included at some point that the Government couldn't do this on its own effectively, and it would have to go to outside private law firms to help it recover these funds?

Mr. SWITZER. It was more a matter of efficiency rather than effectiveness. The Government could have done it, but we would have had to hire a lot of lawyers.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was considered desirable and beneficial to go the private route in retaining private firms to represent the Government in these proceedings?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that context, among other things, you wanted to find out whether there was a conflict of interest between the law firm whom the Government would retain to represent its interest and the matters in which those law firms would be operating?

Mr. SWITZER. That was one of the basic steps that the RTC would go through in deciding whether to retain a firm.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you tell us approximately how many law firms had billings to the RTC, to the Government in excess of $1 million?

Mr. SWITZER. I have no idea offhand.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would you like to confer to see—

Mr. SWITZER. I don't think they would either.

[Witness conferred with counsel.]

Mr. SWITZER. I wouldn't want to speculate.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. How many people were involved in auditing these law firms?

Mr. SWITZER. Well, from our staff, we had a number of auditors who participated in these audits. We also engaged public accounting firms to assist us in doing these audits.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you tell us how many firms had billings in excess of $1 million, even by estimating, was it half of the firms that you retained?

Mr. SWITZER. It would be a guess, 10, 15, 20 percent maybe, and that's the best I can come up with, would just be a guess.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was well in excess of 1,000 and it was 20 percent, we would be over—clearly over 200 law firms?

Mr. SWITZER. If my guess is right, that would be good, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, how many firms had portions of their billings disallowed as a result of the audit procedures that were instituted by the IG's office?

[Witness conferred with counsel.]

Mr. SWITZER. Between our office and CPA firms who conducted these audits on our behalf, we probably conducted between 75 and 100 of those audits and virtually every one had that problem.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When you say virtually every firm who was audited had a problem, does that mean that their billings were disallowed?

Mr. SWITZER. Some parts of their billings would have been disallowed, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You say you audited 10 percent of the well over 1,000 firms who did work for the RTC?

Mr. SWITZER. If the thousand is right and 100 is the high side of it, yes, it would be 10 percent.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Black, does that agree with any information you may have? I don't want to leave you out of this discussion.

Ms. BLACK. I am content to be left out. I was not running the audit staff, so I—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you participate in any of the audits?

Ms. BLACK. Some of them, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. About how many?

Ms. BLACK. My primary participation would be through talking to the auditors, providing them advice, answering some questions and occasionally issuing subpoenas. My personal participation, 10 to 15.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer, how many audits did you participate in?

Mr. SWITZER. Directly, probably hardly any of them other than a management capacity.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm sorry, I couldn't hear your answer.

Mr. SWITZER. Directly, very few of them because I looked at the drafted reports, as well as I would look at the issued reports. My role was as a deputy in a management position.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. As a deputy in a management position, can you say what percentage of the firms which were audited had billings that were questioned at or about the same level as the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not recall that information specifically, no, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You can't help us in terms of putting into context whether the Rose Law Firm was above or below average in terms of the firms that were audited?

Mr. SWITZER. Not off the top of my head. I would be glad to provide that information for the record.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Black.

Ms. BLACK. I can't do it right now either.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you tell us whether in the case of Rose that you attempted to audit all of the invoices?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, we did because of the nature of the representation and the issues surrounding it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you tell us whether in your experience, and to the best of your knowledge, if any other law firm in these audit procedures of over 100 firms had all of their invoices audited? [Witness conferred with counsel.]

Mr. SWITZER. Staff tells me that there was probably one or two others, but generally—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. None to your knowledge, but now on the basis of information, you're hearing maybe one or two other firms?

Mr. SWITZER. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In all of the auditing procedures that have been accomplished today?

Mr. SWITZER. Auditing 100 percent of anything is not generally routine.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Extremely unusual?

Mr. SWITZER. It is unusual, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you say there was well over 1,000 firms involved, 10 percent of the firms were audited and of all the firms that were audited, maybe 1 percent of those had all of their invoices audited. We're talking about very special scrutiny that was placed on the Rose Law Firm here?

Mr. SWITZER. It was more elaborate scrutiny, if you would, than normally is experienced and we were responding to requests from the acting CEO of the RTC at that time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In connection with the disallowance of bills presented by the law firm to the RTC—first of all, let's make this very clear. I think Ms. Black alluded to it earlier. Hillary Rodham Clinton did not perform any work for the RTC?

Mr. SWITZER. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is that correct, Ms. Black?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it is.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the question of the accuracy or the appropriateness of her billing records vis-à-vis your audits of the Rose Law Firm in connection with work done for the RTC is not relevant to our discussions since she performed no work?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, going to Mr. Hubbell's work, it is not clear that Mr. Hubbell was responsible for overbilling the RTC?

Mr. SWITZER. That's what we reported, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, that was a part of the prosecution of Mr. Hubbell, was it not, Federal prosecution of Mr. Hubbell?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He has pleaded guilty to, among other things, overbilling the RTC?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We need to get straight the question of the acquisition of the IDC property as compared to regulatory work done for either Castle Grande or IDC in general. Let me start with the acquisition of the IDC property itself. Have you been made privy to Mr. Thrash's sworn testimony before this Committee?

Ms. BLACK. I have not read it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It's public testimony, but you have not read it?

Ms. BLACK. I have not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. No, I have not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Thrash testified last week before this Committee, and stated that he had no information and reason to believe that there was anything untoward in terms of the purchase of the IDC property by Madison Bank. Do you have any evidence to conflict Mr. Thrash's testimony?

Ms. BLACK. We have no evidence one way or the other, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. My answer would be the same.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have heard from also Mr. Massey and Mr. Donovan. Mr. Donovan testified along with Mr. Thrash last week. Have you had occasion to review Mr. Donovan's sworn testimony?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Mr. SWITZER. I have not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Donovan was the lawyer at the Rose Firm who was responsible for handling the regulatory matters associated with the IDC parcel.

Mr. Donovan testified that he was involved in the so-called wet/dry issue and with the sewer issue. Are both of those regulatory issues matters that were known to you prior to the recent discovery of the billing records at the White House?

Ms. BLACK. We did not know in detail what was done. We did have some bills which reflected some work that was done. I believe we talked to both of those gentlemen, and in very general terms, they indicated a recollection consistent with what you just described. They did not remember very much about it at all, though.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You have now had the occasion to review the actual time records for time put in by Mr. Donovan and Mr. Thrash and the description of the work that they performed. Is there anything in those billing records that contradicts the information you received when you interviewed Mr. Donovan and Mr. Thrash?

Ms. BLACK. The information that we received when we interviewed them was that they could not remember very much about the transactions at all, but they did work on the types of transactions that you just indicated. The billing records, in fact, do show that Mr. Thrash billed for the IDC/Castle Grande, and that Mr. Donovan billed for issues which appear to be related to the so-called wet/dry and the water and sewer issue.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Donovan and Mr. Thrash testified under oath that internally at the Rose Law Firm, that these matters were referred to as the IDC matter, and Castle Grande was not a description used internally at the Rose Law Firm for these matters. Do you have any evidence that contradicts the testimony of Mr. Donovan or Mr. Thrash in this regard?

Ms. BLACK. I have no knowledge of how they referred to it within the Rose Law Firm in 1985.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer.

Mr. SWITZER. Nor do I.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's talk about the——

Ms. BLACK. Mr. Ben-Veniste, if I could correct something I said before.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. BLACK. We did not interview Mr. Thrash. He did not provide a statement to us. We asked to interview him and the Rose Law Firm declined to make him available.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You interviewed Mr. Donovan?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The letter you referred to as being reviewed by Mrs. Clinton that was prepared by Mr. Massey, do you have that in front of you?

Ms. BLACK. Which one was that, sir?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was June 17, 1985. It's got a designation.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, I have that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Quintuple zero 84 in the left-hand corner.

Ms. BLACK. I have the document.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you match that up with Mrs. Clinton's billing records in terms of the review?

Ms. BLACK. We looked at the two in conjunction.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were shown that. The billing records, if I'm not mistaken, reflected about 18 minutes of time?

Ms. BLACK. Three-tenths of an hour, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Eighteen minutes to review the document with 11 subparagraphs, which is about 1½ minutes per part per subparagraph. Would that arithmetic be more or less correct?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know if that arithmetic makes any sense. One of the numbered paragraphs is "inapplicable". It probably didn't take a full minute to read that, but your point is it was 18 minutes to review about a page-and-a-half letter, apparently.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Looks like two pages, but I don't want to quibble with you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste, you really are.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, let's show it. That's the second page. It looks like a two-page letter. But let me ask you the bottom-line question on this issue. That is whether you have any evidence to suggest that Mrs. Clinton had any knowledge that this transaction was structured to avoid the 6 percent limitation rule, direct investment limitation rule?

Ms. BLACK. I have no evidence as to what Mrs. Clinton knew, and I believe in her answers to the RTC's interrogatory, she says she does not recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. I would say the same.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go beyond that. The 6 percent limitation rule is an Arkansas State rule, is it not, regulating Arkansas-chartered savings and loans?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's be clear on what the implications of this 6 percent limitation rule are. That rule limited savings and loans in the amount of direct investment they could make in real estate?

Ms. BLACK. Or their service corporations, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Or their service corporations. That rule was not a rule in all States, was it?

Ms. BLACK. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, California had no such rule?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know.

Mr. SWITZER. I don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Switzer, do you know?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not know what the California rule was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Have you heard of a man named Keating, who had a service corporation in California?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Just for purposes of comparison, what was the loss that resulted from Mr. Keating's endeavors?

Mr. SWITZER. I don't recall the precise number. I do know that it was much larger than what we're talking about here.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In the billions?

Mr. SWITZER. I believe that's true, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Black, do you have any further refinement on that?

Ms. BLACK. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of the 6 percent direct investment rule, this is a regulation imposed by the State of Arkansas. Do you know what enforcement steps were taken in the 1980's with respect to the direct investment rule in Arkansas for savings and loans which went above 6 percent?

Ms. BLACK. I do not.

Mr. SWITZER. I do not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To your knowledge, has anyone at your agency researched that issue?

Ms. BLACK. I have no idea, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you happen to know that there are no criminal penalties associated with violation of the 6 percent rule?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not know that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you know of other States which have a direct investment limitation?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not.

Ms. BLACK. I have no idea.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In the absence of knowledge on that subject, can you at least differentiate between a technical violation of the 6 percent rule in terms of State regulatory interest and a transaction whereby straw or sham purchasers buy and sell property for the purpose of increasing the paper value of that property?

Ms. BLACK. Those are two very different things. This was not a technical violation. This, according to the regulators, was a—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I understand that but in terms of the State reaction, if a savings and loan were found to have exceeded the 6 percent limitation, you don't know what the regulatory authorities would do vis-à-vis a savings and loan that exceeded that 6 percent?

Ms. BLACK. I suggest you ask Ms. Schaffer or Mr. Handley that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You don't know whether they'd write a letter saying you have such-and-such a period of time to divest yourself and to come back within the limitations imposed by the State?

Ms. BLACK. I have no idea what they'd do, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of your familiarity with how State regulators regulated savings and loans, would you have any reason to believe that the reaction of the State regulatory agency would be any different than simply giving the institution time to get back into compliance?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know. I do know that Mr. Handley was very concerned about that particular fact with this particular institution. I also know that this institution during that summer was rapidly losing net worth and that the regulators became aware of that at the end of that year. I don't know what they would have done, whether they would have issued a letter, whether they would have called FSLIC in for another examination or they would have asked that the institution be taken over. I really have no idea, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. They did ask that the institution be taken over and I know what the response was.

Ms. BLACK. Eventually.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Wait.

Ms. BLACK. Another response is if the examiners come in, they can remove the management and stem the losses and prevent further losses which they in fact did in the summer of 1986.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In 1986, correct.

In terms of making the distinction between the trading back and forth of assets for the purpose of artificially increasing their paper value, those were transactions that occurred at the Madison Bank subsequent to the Rose Law Firm's representation of that bank. Is that so?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir. That was during the representation as well.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any evidence to suggest that the Rose Law Firm represented Madison in connection with any artificial transaction to raise the value of a particular piece of property?

Ms. BLACK. The May 1st option, according to testimony presented at the hearing in Ward v. Madison, was related to such a transaction. I am not saying, however, that the Rose Law Firm knew that the transaction involved was such a transaction.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's put that in context. My time is about up so I may have to come back to it. Was that option ever exercised?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, it was not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me get to a major question, which is on the basis of the new information that you have received with respect to the billing records. Do you have reason to suggest that the conclusion reached by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro adopted by the RTC, at least on an interim basis, that the representation performed by the Rose Law Firm in connection with the Frost matter was an appropriate resolution of that matter?

Ms. BLACK. My understanding is that they are reevaluating that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any reason to believe that the result reached in the representation of the RTC in the Frost litigation was in some way inappropriate on the basis of looking at these additional records?

Ms. BLACK. That the result reached in the settlement between RTC and Frost?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That's correct.

Ms. BLACK. We looked at this in connection with conflicts, and we reported information in connection with conflicts. Quite frankly, sir, I'm not a professional liability lawyer, and I would defer to the experts. I just don't know. That is a hypertechnical area of the law, and I defer to them on that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. My concern is whether, as the result of this new information, you can conclude that the Government somehow lost money or was not adequately represented by the Rose Law Firm in the matter in which the firm represented the Government?

Ms. BLACK. What I'm suggesting is that's a question which you ought to address to the FDIC as RTC successor and Pillsbury. They are the ones that evaluated that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We'll come back to that.

The CHAIRMAN. We will not review that matter repeatedly. I want to make an observation. Everyone has the right to use his or her time the way they choose. If we continue to use time in this manner, these hearings will be not only painful, but long. I have to tell you that they will continue, so it is a cooperative effort that we are going to need to move through. If we don't get the cooperation, and we get the kind of examination that in many cases wonders as to how many institutions and what percent, et cetera, we are going to be here that much longer. So I just mention it to you.

Senator Shelby.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR RICHARD C. SHELBY

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. I did that on my time. When you're on your time, you can make your observations, Senator.

Senator SHELBY. Ms. Black, this investigative report we've been talking about that came from RTC, you and Mr. Switzer both contributed to this investigative report; is that right?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, we did.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, that's right.

Senator SHELBY. This report was dated August 3, 1995; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Correct.

Senator SHELBY. Just on a time sequence basis, do you recall when the billing records that we've been discussing, Mrs. Clinton's part of the Rose Law Firm billing records were discovered at the White House, was it before or after August 3?

Ms. BLACK. You're referring to Ms. Huber's testimony?

Senator SHELBY. Huber, that's right.

Ms. BLACK. As to when she first saw them on the table? I believe she said it was the first or second weekend in August.

Senator SHELBY. Right after this came out, those records just happened to reappear at the White House as far as the time sequence. It was after August 3, wasn't it?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that was her testimony.

Senator SHELBY. Both of you, as investigators, hope you have all facts that you can put together to help make a clearer, more definitive report, would you not?

Ms. BLACK. Of course, you try to get all the facts you can.

Senator SHELBY. Sure. So if you didn't have the billing records, they were not available until after this report came out, you could not make a complete report, could you?

Ms. BLACK. Our report was as complete as it could be at that time.

Senator SHELBY. It was as complete as you could get the information at that time to make it; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Senator SHELBY. You mentioned a minute ago that in light of the billing records and other things, that the FDIC, which is successor in interest to the RTC, is reevaluating this report?

Ms. BLACK. We were asked to review——

Senator SHELBY. Review or——

Ms. BLACK [continuing]. The billing records ourselves to determine what impact it would have. We are doing that.

My understanding is that Pillsbury Madison, which is FDIC's outside counsel in that matter, is also reevaluating it at this time.

Senator SHELBY. As an investigator, when you find some information, oftentimes it leads to other information that maybe you would need to shed light on a subject?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. Does the timeliness of your report, August 3rd and then the timeliness of finding the billing records at the White House bother you at all, as far as a correlation of the reports? Does it cause you to think well, where were these records when we needed them or when we would have had them——

Ms. BLACK. I was very curious about what they had in them.

Senator SHELBY. Mr. Switzer, were you very curious about those records appearing at the White House just a few days after this investigative report was issued which you say——

Mr. SWITZER. I have really never put when they were exactly—— when they were reportedly initially found together. I focused on when they surfaced in January.

Senator SHELBY. If there's testimony by the woman who found them that it was in the first part of August——

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, I understand that now. I had never put that together.

Senator SHELBY. But if that were true, would that make——

Mr. SWITZER. Curious would be the term.

Senator SHELBY. You would become very curious as an investigator, would you not?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Would you want to open up this report and say where do we go from here with new information?

Mr. SWITZER. That is, of course, what we in essence have done.

Senator SHELBY. Just common sense, isn't it?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Doesn't information act as a road map where any investigation goes or finally leads?

Ms. BLACK. Sure.

Senator SHELBY. A little here and a little there leads to a certain place?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. If you were aware at the time of your initial investigation, which you say is incomplete and obviously, it is, Mrs. Clinton had 14 telephone conversations with Seth Ward regarding the IDC matter, would that have been relevant to your investigation possibly?

Ms. BLACK. Possibly. It would have been a fact that we would have reported.

Senator SHELBY. Same with you, Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. If you were aware, both of you, that Mrs. Clinton as a lawyer with the law firm had drafted the option between James McDougal and Seth Ward, would you think that might perhaps be relevant to your investigation?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir. It would have been.

Senator SHELBY. Why, Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. As I recall, we were operating somewhat under the impression that Webster Hubbell was the billing partner, and this would have indicated obviously a varying involvement by Mrs. Clinton.

Senator SHELBY. Did the RTC, to either one of your knowledge, attempt to gain access to these billing records before issuing this report?

Ms. BLACK. We had issued a subpoena on March 15 which would have—

Senator SHELBY. March 15, 1995?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, 1994.

Senator SHELBY. 1994 for the records?

Ms. BLACK. For the records—some of which were produced. Some were clearly covered, yes, all the invoices.

Senator SHELBY. To whom did you issue this subpoena to?

Ms. BLACK. The Rose Law Firm, and they indicated they did not have these records, and they still indicate that.

Senator SHELBY. Did you issue a subpoena to the President or his wife regarding these records?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Senator SHELBY. And did you issue a subpoena to anyone at the White House?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Mr. SWITZER. No.

Ms. BLACK. We had no indication that records at that time might be in the White House.

Senator SHELBY. Did you have any idea where these records might be?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir. We thought they had been destroyed.

Senator SHELBY. You thought they had been destroyed. Did you know if the RTC has issued a subpoena to the Clintons for these records now or if they did?

Ms. BLACK. My understanding was that they did. I have not reviewed that subpoena and I do not know exactly what it says and exactly what it might cover, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Did the billing records that you have been made aware of indicate greater representation and involvement in the Madison matters by Mrs. Clinton than previously found in this report?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Is that right, Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Did the RTC attempt to gain access to these billing records before issuing this report? You've already said yes. That was in March 1994?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Has the RTC entered into a tolling agreement with the law firm since the discovery of these billing records?

Ms. BLACK. My understanding is they have, sir.

Senator SHELBY. I have a copy of the tolling agreement. Would you say basically what a tolling agreement is to the public?

Ms. BLACK. A tolling agreement is an agreement between two parties to, if you will, extend the statute of limitation that might be applicable to a given matter.

Senator SHELBY. Mr. Switzer, what was your basic reaction when you first learned, sir, that the billing records had been found, discovered, stumbled upon in the book room of the White House after this report which you worked on was issued?

Mr. SWITZER. I guess it was more of a question whether that would have an impact on our report.

Senator SHELBY. Ms. Black or Mr. Switzer, would the fact that a law firm had close dealings, personal or financial, with a thrift or the savings and loan that it was seeking recovery from on behalf of the U.S. Government affect, in your view, the law firm's representation?

Ms. BLACK. The issue from a conflicts perspective is could it affect, and if it could affect, it must—these sorts of actual or potential conflicts must be disclosed to the client and allow the client to determine whether or not to go forward. That was not done.

Senator SHELBY. It was not done in this case, was it?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Senator SHELBY. In this case, the Rose Law Firm that's in Little Rock represented Mr. McDougal and the Madison Savings Bank; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. They represented Madison. Madison Guaranty was their client.

Senator SHELBY. Then they represented the RTC in trying to recover money from the Madison Savings Bank or the principals; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. They did, but that is not always necessarily a conflict. The firm is required to indicate to the RTC what it did do and let the RTC determine whether it's got a conflict or not.

Senator SHELBY. After disclosure?

Ms. BLACK. Sure.

Senator SHELBY. In this case, do you, Ms. Black or Mr. Switzer, recall what the Rose Law Firm disclosed to you about any possible conflicts of interest between representing the RTC, in other words, the U.S. Government, the taxpayers and their prior representation of Madison and others?

Ms. BLACK. According to the statements that April Breslaw had given to us, there was no disclosure of the prior representation by Madison by the Rose Law Firm.

According—and she indicated when she found out about it, she found out about it——

Senator SHELBY. Is this an ethical problem, a conflict of interest? Ms. BLACK. That is the issue, yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. In other words, if you have a conflict of interest, you have an ethical problem in representing one person or firm against the other; is that right, Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. You can, yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. As an investigator, as an attorney and so forth?

Mr. SWITZER. This would be the type of thing, as Ms. Black has indicated, that should have been disclosed to the RTC, for the RTC lawyers to look at and make a decision as to whether that situation would present a case where they should not have employed Rose in this particular case.

Senator SHELBY. Did you in this report get into that aspect of a conflict of interest or possible conflict of interest in the Rose Law Firm?

Ms. BLACK. To a degree we did. We discussed the applicable rules.

Senator SHELBY. To what degree, Ms. Black?

Ms. BLACK. We reported the facts and we issued the report to the RTC for its consideration and action as might be appropriate.

Senator SHELBY. Were the facts here that the Rose Law Firm did not disclose to RTC that they had a possible conflict of interest?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Is that the facts, Mr. Switzer? Is that the fact?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir, it is.

Senator SHELBY. I believe my time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Dodd.

Senator DODD. I will yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR JOHN F. KERRY

Senator KERRY. Ms. Black, the RTC IG report found that Rose had failed to disclose some actual or potential conflicts of interest; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator KERRY. And those were clearly articulated in the report which ultimately upon which the RTC made a judgment on through its outside counsel, Pillsbury Madison & Sutro; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Its outside counsel opined on that. The group within the RTC, the outside counsel conflict committee, also looked at it.

Senator KERRY. So the internal committee and the outside committee both reviewed and made an assessment of what was the basis for any judgment about an actual or potential conflict of interest?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator KERRY. You now have had a chance to review these billing records; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator KERRY. I'm just asking you as an investigator—what is in those billing records that sheds new light on the assessments previously made by these two parties, internal and external, about conflict of interest?

Ms. BLACK. I think the continuing involvement, the extent of the involvement in the IDC transaction itself is of some import.

Senator KERRY. In what sense? Can you be a little more detailed on that?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. The involvement by the Rose Law Firm in drafting the May 1st option agreement which itself became a critical piece of evidence in the Ward v. Madison trial is a very salient fact. That again is because one, RTC was in litigation. The Ward v. Madison litigation predated RTC's intervention. A judgment was rendered against Madison in August 1988.

RTC intervened, or the Federal Government intervened in February, I believe, 1989, and RTC ultimately took over the lawsuit and tried to reopen the trial. The RTC did prosecute an appeal on it. The lawsuit was quite active until the middle of 1993, I believe, at which time it was settled.

Senator KERRY. Was a judgment made about the relationship with Seth Ward in the context of the RTC IG report?

Ms. BLACK. We did not make any judgments. We just reported the facts that we found.

Senator KERRY. I mean the internal assessment and the Pillsbury assessment came up with a judgment; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator KERRY. Was there a judgment there with respect to the Seth Ward association?

Ms. BLACK. I believe, and again they did not have these billing records either, so for whatever impact that would have on their judgment. I believe they found that the Rose Law Firm—or Pillsbury said that the Rose Law Firm had represented Seth Ward. I think that's what they found.

Senator KERRY. Correct. So they were aware of it?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, they were.

Senator KERRY. This merely confirms what they were aware of?

Ms. BLACK. Sir, I think the May 1st document is an entirely new aspect. It indicates specific involvement in an ongoing case that the RTC was not aware of. I might add that the RTC had expressed specific concern about that particular case and had sought assurances that there was no involvement.

Senator KERRY. OK. What's the other aspect?

Ms. BLACK. The other—

Senator KERRY. Again, in your judgment.

Ms. BLACK. We would have reported all of the details, because those sorts of details are important to the people making judgment. So just in a general sense, there is a lot more detail here than we knew.

One of the things we did as a result of our investigation was that we asked that our report be referred to Pillsbury for consideration in connection with their review of potential liability by the Rose Law Firm, because we thought that there was relevant information in there. Although we had not gathered it for that purpose, the information in there was also relevant to that. From that perspective, the information concerning the degree of knowledge of the 6 percent limitation is relevant and it's relevant to Pillsbury's analysis.

Senator KERRY. Just so I understand it on the 6 percent issue, was that as to whether or not a presumption was made by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro with respect to knowledge of the 6 percent?

Ms. BLACK. They made the presumption only with regard to Mr. Massey, sir, and the fact that it was at that level was of some importance to them. I do not know that this information would change their analysis. I'm simply saying that it's something that we would report to them and let them determine that.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CHRISTOPHER J. DODD

Senator DODD. If I could, just on that point, page 74 of the Pillsbury report—do you have a copy of that in front of you?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, I do not.

Senator DODD. Could we get a copy, Mr. Chairman?

Senator KERRY. That's where I was going.

Senator DODD. I want to reference just the top of that page 74 while they're bringing it down to you. The report says nevertheless, counsel for the Rose Law Firm has confirmed that this document was created at the Rose Law Firm and bears word processing markings indicating that it was created by or for Mrs. Clinton, particularly the small letter "g" on the option stands for Mrs. Clinton.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator DODD. Then you go to page 75, one of the options is the assumption that in fact what the billing documents ultimately show, they made that assumption in drawing the report. I'm sorry, I apologize to my colleague.

Senator KERRY. No, this is a good point.

Ms. BLACK. On that option agreement, yes, sir, they did make that assumption. They expressly stated that they were holding the report open because they needed to look at that further, and that, as I understand it, was the whole basis underlying the tolling agreement. The report expressly says that it's being held open for that reason.

Senator KERRY. The recently discovered time records did not change their conclusion because they made the assumption in the first place. I mean, that's the point. In other words, you're trying to assert that this somehow sheds a new light on which a new judgment should be made, and what I'm suggesting is that the report makes it clear that they made the assessment based on a presumption that is confirmed by the billing records. There's nothing new because their presumption was proven correctly. So I don't see how that truly affects this.

Ms. BLACK. This report is an analysis of the potential liability of the Rose Law Firm. There was a separate report on conflicts which I do not believe did address that.

Senator KERRY. OK. So we should see whether or not in their judgment they separate the two or whether they don't?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator KERRY. OK. I yield back my time.

Senator SARBANES. Why would you be doing the conflict analysis if it wasn't related to liability? Wasn't that the purpose of the conflict analysis?

Ms. BLACK. Only in part, sir. We were doing a conflicts analysis to see if there was an underlying problem with Rose representing the RTC in this matter at all. Whether, in short, RTC rules were violated.

Senator SARBANES. For purposes of liability, for making a liability a——

Ms. BLACK. Not necessarily.

Senator SARBANES. For making a liability assertion?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, not necessarily. That could be related to a liability assertion. But as IG's, we often look at transactions, operations within the agency and with its contractors just to determine if our own internal rules have been followed and our own requirements have been followed; and that was a big part of this. Much more so than liability, from our perspective.

Mr. SWITZER. That's what we were requested to look at, Senator. By the then-deputy CEO. There had been an internal report performed by another office within the RTC that suggested there was a problem between Rose and Frost, and we were asked to review that matter as well as any other potential conflicts, as well as review all of their billings.

Senator SARBANES. A problem that would lead to the assertion of liability against Rose?

Mr. SWITZER. No, sir. It would go back to what Ms. Black was saying, a problem with respect to a potential conflict and whether they had been engaged under the proper rules—"they" being the Rose Law Firm, the rules and regulations of the RTC.

Senator SARBANES. You mean your administrative procedures?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. But not a liability on the part of Rose?

Mr. SWITZER. That was not what we were initially looking for, no, sir. As Ms. Black pointed out, this is just information for others to consider in their process.

The CHAIRMAN. We're going to take a 5-minute break.

[Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Faircloth.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR LAUCH FAIRCLOTH

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Black, according to the testimony that you gave over in the House, you had no evidence Mrs. Clinton did work on this Castle Grande; isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. That was what I testified to in the House, except for the water and sewer and the wet/dry issue. We knew she had some involvement with that, but that was very narrow.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. In Mrs. Clinton's answer to the RTC interrogation on February 4, 1994, which was under oath, Mrs. Clinton answered question number 29 on page 73.

This is why I assume these documents are here.

I don't believe I knew anything about any of these real estate parcels and projects, except I think I was generally aware at some point that Mr. McDougal was involved in some ventures which involved a real estate project on the island of Campobello. I have no specific knowledge about this.

So from these answers, you assumed that Mrs. Clinton had done no work on Castle Grande?

Ms. BLACK. From answers that she gave to questions and from the records available to us, we saw no involvement at that time, and that's why I answered the question the way I did.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I want to play a VCR tape on some answers Mrs. Clinton gave on ABC News.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have no sound, you can't very well play the tape. See if the technicians can repair that? Senator, continue and we can come back, if you want, to try to make your point.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Yes, Ms. Black, I guess the question is, was it an accident that these records appeared days after the statute of limitation expired for the Clintons? Reviewing the records, if you had them before December 31, 1995, would you have recommended that a tolling agreement be reached with Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. Sir, we would have just reported the facts and allowed the RTC legal division to take whatever action it deemed appropriate.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You've testified that this option was central to the Ward/McDougal transaction. What troubles me is how did Mrs. Clinton, who apparently represented both the seller and the buyer in this option deal—isn't that a conflict of interest in most any law firm?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know that she represented both the seller and the buyer. All I know is that she drafted the agreement and billed Madison for it.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Let me ask you, to get to the core of this thing. Is it not reasonable that any lawyer, and certainly one that some people have classified at one point as one of the 100 smartest lawyers in the country, could fiddle with this sham deal, these real estate options going back and forth, and not know that they were fake and sham deals? How could the smartest lawyer in the country, as she has been classified, go at this stuff like a blind horse to the battle, blinded and deafened, neither seeing the fire nor hearing the cannon, just go into it? Do you think that's reasonable?

Ms. BLACK. Sir, we're a factfinding entity. That's really all we do.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. If you had been the lawyer in Hillary's position, do you not think you would have suspected?

Ms. BLACK. I'm not a real estate lawyer, sir. Again, I'm a finder of fact here, presenter of fact here. I'm not comfortable with drawing conclusions or speculating.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. All right. Did we get the tape to work?

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, they tell me that they haven't been able to work that out. May I suggest, until they are able to repair the problem, that you withhold from that line of questioning.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. All right. I really have no other questions. It is just inconceivable to me that this could have gone on and on with these sham deals and that smart a lawyer not realized what they were.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Moseley-Braun.

OPENING COMMENT OF SENATOR CAROL MOSELEY-BRAUN

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. Chairman, before the next questioner continues, I would ask the Chair that in the interest of the decorum of these proceedings, that the President and First Lady be called and accorded the regard and respect due their offices and called by their full names and not by colloquial or familiar names in this hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a good point. I don't think the Senator meant any disrespect by it, but we'll note that. I think we should proceed along those lines, Senator

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. Thank you.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Could we put up on the Elmo the December 29, 1995 letter that was sent by William Collishaw, General Counsel of the RTC, to James Neal, who is Executive Director of the Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct.

Ms. BLACK, are you aware of this letter which refers to the Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct for possible investigation, whether the Rose Law Firm had conflicts of interest with regard to its representation of the RTC?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If I could just read from the third paragraph of the letter. It's based on your report, am I correct, this referral?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. It says:

We believe that the report provides a sufficient indication of the existence of possible undisclosed conflicts of interest by the Rose Law Firm such that it raises concerns about the Rose Law Firm's compliance with the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct. We, therefore, are referring this matter to your Committee for further consideration and any action you deem appropriate.

Now, you are aware of this referral?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. And did you participate in the decision to make the referral?

Ms. BLACK. That decision was made by the General Counsel's Office, sir, not our office.

Mr. SWITZER. Sir, in the letter that transmitted out report to the Acting CEO, we did suggest that this be considered.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why did you suggest to the Acting CEO that consideration be given to a referral to the Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct?

Mr. SWITZER. Because of the potential which existed. I think Ms. Black could answer that better.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Set forth in your report.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Could you again describe briefly what the basis was for this referral to the Arkansas Supreme Court?

Senator SARBANES. The Arkansas who?

Mr. GIUFFRA. The Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct.

Ms. BLACK. Our report disclosed I believe seven instances, Madison was one of them, in which we believed that we had evidence of possible or actual conflicts of interest. We referred that to the RTC, asked that they among other things consider referral to the appropriate authorities.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Black, am I correct that on March 2, 1994, Mr. Ryan asked the RTC IG to investigate the substance of a report that had been issued by the RTC Office of Contractor Oversight and Surveillance?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Could you just briefly describe the report issued by the RTC Office of Contractor Oversight and Surveillance stated?

Mr. SWITZER. It got to the issue of a conflict or potential conflict with respect to the Frost litigation.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Ryan asked your offices to go and do a further investigation of that matter; correct?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir, he did.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You commenced your investigation, I believe it was on March 2; correct?

Mr. SWITZER. It would have been immediate upon receiving that request.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up on the Elmo the March 1, 1994 memos from Harold Ickes, the Deputy Chief of Staff at the White House, to the First Lady, and I will just read the first paragraph.

Attached is a copy of W. Neil Eggleston's 28 February 1994 memorandum to me regarding certain issues involving the RTC and the Rose Law Firm ["Rose"]. Attached to that memo are copies of the FDIC report dated 17 February 1994, concerning possible conflicts of interest regarding Rose's representation of the FDIC against Madison Guaranty, and the RTC's 8 February 1994 report concerning the same subject.

This February 8, 1994 report would be the report of the Office of Contractor Oversight and Surveillance; correct?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, the FDIC—

Mr. GIUFFRA. No, the RTC February 8, 1994 report.

Ms. BLACK. I'm having a hard time following it. There were two reports, the RTC report and then a separate FDIC report.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Your investigation was based on looking into what the RTC report had found?

Ms. BLACK. We ended up looking into both because the FDIC initially retained the Rose Law Firm. The RTC then was successor in interest to that, so both were related.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have an opportunity to explore that in depth.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Dodd.

Senator DODD. Just briefly, because I see my colleagues are here. I want to go over a couple of points, if I may, and then maybe I will turn to Mr. Ben-Veniste. I understand the Rose Law Firm, with regard to Madison, represented the RTC in one matter? Are you familiar with that?

Ms. BLACK. The Frost litigation, yes, sir.

Senator DODD. The Frost case. How would you characterize how the Rose Law Firm handled that case, the final outcome? Was it considered a good outcome by RTC standards?

Ms. BLACK. I have not reviewed that. My understanding is that Pillsbury Madison looked at that and I would defer to them.

Senator DODD. How about you, Mr. Switzer?

Mr. SWITZER. I would say the same thing, sir. I think this has been explored before in a sense of whether we got a good deal or not. I want to say, I believe the RTC decided that they had.

Senator DODD. They had done a good job?

Mr. SWITZER. That they had reached a settlement that they considered acceptable because the RTC accepted it.

Senator DODD. Well, do you remember what the amount of claims were they were talking about?

Mr. SWITZER. No, sir, I do not.

Senator DODD. Well, as I recall, and counsel can correct me, was it in the neighborhood of a $1.8 million?

Mr. GIUFFRA. I think it was about $1 million, sir.

Senator DODD. It was settled for that. So roughly a pretty good outcome is what at least we've determined or heard before, but you don't have an opinion on that?

Mr. SWITZER. I do not, no, sir.

Senator DODD. The reason I raise that obviously is because the whole issue of the conflict goes to the very essence and the question as to whether or not in fact the decision to hire the Rose Law Firm to represent the taxpayers in that matter in the Frost case would have been adversely affected as a result of a prior relationship.

Based on the outcome of the one case that they handled, suing the accountants in the Madison case, the outcome was a good outcome. Doesn't that go to the very heart of the question of whether or not the potential conflict produced any adverse results?

Ms. BLACK. I believe the Pillsbury report addressed the question of whether they felt the settlement was reasonable and answered in the affirmative. What we looked at was whether the Rose Law Firm had complied with the conflicts procedures and requirements that are in force within the RTC.

Senator DODD. I understand that. But you understand from our point here looking at this, obviously the big question would be not only from an ethical standpoint but broader than that. If in fact there had been some agreement struck here that was not in the best interest of the taxpayers, that in fact had not done a good job and in fact that potential conflict had somehow colored the settlement; that would certainly lend credence to the implications of the potential conflict. Do you understand my point?

Ms. BLACK. I understand it. I don't voice an opinion on it, although I would like to note at this point that Mr. Ben-Veniste earlier asked me a question which I misunderstood. When he asked—he asked about what effect records were having on some of the Pillsbury reports, and I answered that my understanding was that it had been reopened. Mr. Ben-Veniste, I believe, was referring to the Frost report, and my answer responded to the other Pillsbury report concerning Rose's liability—that referenced the tolling agreement and so forth. I have no knowledge whether the Frost issue has been reopened at all.

Senator DODD. OK. Let me just go back to the point I raised when I interrupted my colleague from Massachusetts, you recall I asked you about the Pillsbury report and the May 1st option. As I understand what we had here is the law firm has agreed to two extensions to the statute of limitation in the past. In December 1995, when they determined that the letter "g" on the bottom of those documents referenced Mrs. Clinton, that they at that point then were aware of the existence of the firm's involvement or her involvement. So that when they drew that conclusion regarding the May 1st option, they did so with the awareness and knowledge that in fact the law firm and specifically Mrs. Clinton was involved.

Ms. Black, you responded by saying that the case was still open in a sense. But that's not quite the case if in fact they had drawn the conclusion in December, prior to the publication of the report that in fact the law firm had been involved; is that not correct?

Ms. BLACK. There were two reports, and I think that's what's causing the confusion, sir. I don't believe that option agreement was referenced or considered with regard to, if you will, the Frost report. It was the Frost report that—in which Pillsbury addressed conflicts. So I think they indicated that at the last minute they had made this discovery and kept one report open. I do not think it had anything to do with the other report.

Senator DODD. Not the Rose Law Firm report?

Ms. BLACK. The Rose Law Firm report is the one that is open, sir. It is the Frost report that, as far as I know, is closed. I do not know if that has been reopened.

In the Frost report—

Senator DODD. Let me turn to Counsel. They may have better information.

Ms. BLACK. I don't have the report before me.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. On page 77 of the report addressing the Rose Law Firm, they concluded that they knew about the fact that Mrs. Clinton had been involved in the preparation of the option agreement. They concluded that on the basis of that, it would not be appropriate to draw any adverse inference that Mrs. Clinton knew how the deal had been structured or knew that there was anything untoward in the way that the deal had been structured as between McDougal and Ward. You will agree with that? Let me read it to you and see if it refreshes your recollection.

Ms. BLACK. It's probably best to refer to the report.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Reading:

The only solid evidence tying the Rose Law Firm to this acquisition is evidence of the innocent activity of participating in the drafting of the purchase agreement. While some evidence suggests that Hubbell could have had a role in the drafting of September 24, 1985 letter between McDougal and Ward, nothing proves he did, much less that he did so knowing it to be wrong. Similarly, while Mrs. Clinton seems to have had some role in drafting the May 1, 1986 option, nothing proves she did so knowing it to be wrong and the theories that tie this option to wrongdoing or to the straw-man arrangement are strained at best.

That is the reference—

Ms. BLACK. That is what the report says.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go back a step in connection with the hiring of the Rose Law Firm. The Rose Firm was hired by the RTC to take on an ongoing case in litigation; isn't that so?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And indeed, the case had been filed by a Mr. Gerrish, an attorney in—I believe, Little Rock. It was—

Mr. SWITZER. If I could, sir, I believe that at the time that took place, it might have been the FDIC.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it was the FDIC.

Mr. SWITZER. That was prior to the existence of the RTC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I correct myself. I believe that Mr. Gerrish was located in Memphis, Tennessee. But be that as it may, you are aware, are you not, that the FDIC had a problem with Mr. Gerrish's representation of the Government, because Mr. Gerrish at the same time was defending other parties in unrelated actions brought by the FDIC as well?

Ms. BLACK. That is what the responsible attorney told us.

Mr. SWITZER. That's what's contained in our investigative report.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, at that time the FDIC was concerned that everybody representing the FDIC be on one side of the V, as it were, in all this litigation, that they not be in a position to represent a defendant in one case and the Government in another case?

Ms. BLACK. Correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Mr. Gerrish was asked to withdraw from the litigation or resign, I'm not sure which, to be fair to him, and the Rose Firm was selected to take over the ongoing litigation against Frost?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Frost was the accountant for Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. SWITZER. The auditor, that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The auditor. The question was whether a recovery could be had against Frost in connection with the losses sustained by Madison Guaranty; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that regard, picking up the ongoing litigation, a settlement was reached which—according to the Pillsbury report, which presumes that there was at least some conflict, and I quote from the report on Frost at page 2 to 3:

The conflict does not seem to have prejudiced the RTC as the Frost case seems to have been settled on reasonable terms.

You do not have any evidence to suggest that that conclusion was erroneous, do you?

Ms. BLACK. We—I would defer to them.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, I am asking you whether you have any evidence to suggest that that conclusion that the Frost settlement was appropriate is wrong.

Ms. BLACK. We did not undertake an investigation of the Frost settlement itself.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I take that as a no, you've no such evidence?

Ms. BLACK. No, we did not look at that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I see my time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Ms. Black, at the time that the Pillsbury firm issued its report, they obviously did not have Mrs. Clinton's billing records that were found at the White House; right?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In fact, I would observe at page 66, the Pillsbury firm indicated that there may be evidence that Mrs. Clinton had something to do with the creation of the option, but that there was no timesheets available to indicate whether she, in fact, was or wasn't.

For example, in the absence of the billing records indicating Mrs. Clinton had at least 15 communications with Mr. Ward, Pillsbury really did not have all the evidence it needed to do its report; right?

Ms. BLACK. Clearly there is more evidence available now than there was then.

Mr. GIUFFRA. What I would like to do now is direct your attention to the option agreement that we now know was drafted by Mrs. Clinton. You were not aware of that fact at the time when you did your investigation; right?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, we were not.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You obviously were not aware of the billing records indicating that Mrs. Clinton spent 2 hours preparing the option and also meeting with Mr. Ward on the date the option is dated, which is May 1, 1986. What I would like to do is put up Black Exhibit 3, which we went through yesterday, and you did an excellent job trying to explain the significance of this option. If you could do so again for the Committee, that would be terrific. This is a chronology that you prepared?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is an attempt—

The CHAIRMAN. Hold on, Counsel. Let's make sure Ms. Black has it in front of her so she doesn't have to strain.

Ms. BLACK. I appreciate that. I did find it, thank you.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Could you briefly take the Committee through your chronology, and indicate the significance of this option agreement and how the option agreement fits in with the other agreements, and in particular, the September 24 backdated agreement.

Ms. BLACK. Going through the chronology, the first event is on August 20, 1985. The Madison Financial Corporate Resolution is passed allowing Ward to act for them as an employee and agent in the purchase of IDC. Comparing it back to the billing records, we know that that was drafted by Mr. Thrash.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Of the Rose Law Firm?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. On September 3, 1985, there is an agreement between McDougal and Ward where Ward is to purchase property north of 145th Street for $1.15 million, and Madison has a 270-day option to purchase it back from Ward for $1.187 million.

On September 13, 1985, IDC and Madison agree to a purchase agreement and Madison Financial Corporation makes an assignment to Ward. On September 24, 1985, there is an agreement between Ward and Madison Financial wherein Ward agrees to purchase, on a nonrecourse basis, all of the property north of 145th Street, the water and sewer works and gives Madison Financial a 270-day option to purchase the property for a prorated amount of the note plus interest. It also gives Mr. Ward a 10 percent commission on commercial sales of property and 4 percent on other sales.

Mr. GIUFFRA. There was a backdated version of this agreement?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is the second letter, and there's evidence that you have obtained indicating that this document was drafted—at least typed at the Rose Law Firm; correct?

Ms. BLACK. There is a backdated agreement that is a different version of that agreement, which excepts the 22½ acre parcel known as Holman Acres, from Madison's capability of exercising an option. It also adds a $35,000 option payment by Madison Financial to Ward.

We presented that agreement to the former secretary of Mr. Hubbell, who indicated that she thought she might have typed it, that it was her typing style and appeared to be similar to the type of her typewriter at that time. We do not know when that agreement was executed. In the litigation of Ward v. Madison, everybody agrees that it was backdated. Mr. Ward says he does not know when it was backdated. He says he does not know how it came to be drafted. He might have drafted it or caused it to be drafted, or then again someone else may have.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The difference between the two agreements is that the backdated agreement references the 22 acre parcel known as Holman Acres?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was ultimately the way for Mr. Ward to obtain his commissions for acting as the straw purchaser in connection with this transaction?

Ms. BLACK. That is what Mr. Latham testified to.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At the Ward v. Madison trial?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir. Next series of events is that on October 4, the IDC initial purchase transaction closes. Then you skip—

Mr. GIUFFRA. The Rose Law Firm attended that closing?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir. Then, during the next few months there are a series of what the examiners called "land flips."

Mr. GIUFFRA. What is a "land flip"?

Ms. BLACK. Well, Mr. Clark, I guess, referred to it as a sham transaction in which an individual who has no real interest in the property acts as straw purchaser and ultimately flips the land, if you will, to another purchaser, typically who also does not have much of an interest in it and profits—paper profits are recorded on the institution's books.

On February 25, 1986, a $70,000 unsecured note is made by Madison Guaranty. That represents the—made by Ward to Madison Guaranty. That represents the amount which within a couple of days will be left on the IDC transaction. The IDC note itself was paid off on February 28, which was when Castle Water and Sewer closes. As of that date, the only property remaining to be held by Ward is the Holman Acres property. Those series of transactions paid off all but $70,000 of the note that Ward had executed, so the parties agreed to stamp the original note "paid," and the $70,000 note was in essence substituted for it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. On March 31, 1986, Madison Guaranty gave Mr. Ward $400,000; am I correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was secured by Holman Acres and it was personal recourse to Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, and it was a personal recourse note. The parties, again at the hearing of Ward v. Madison, agreed that that occurred around tax time, they said. Mr. Ward came in and said he needed his payments on the commissions and Madison had not made those.

Mr. Ward testified in a deposition according to a summary that I have seen, that the reason Madison Financial could not pay him his commissions was that the regulators were in the institution at the time, and I believe he said "we were trying to keep those sorts of deals to a minimum."

Mr. GIUFFRA. They were concerned that the regulators would identify the sham transaction?

Ms. BLACK. That is what Mr. Ward said they were concerned about the regulators. He didn't elaborate.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Then the key date becomes April 7, when Madison Financial gives Mr. Ward a note for $300,000?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. The parties also agreed that Mr. Ward quickly paid back $100,000 on the $400,000 personal recourse note that paid it down to 300,000. Just before April 7, both parties also agree that Mr. Ward came to Mr. Latham and said:

We've got a problem here. Yes, I've got my $300,000, so I have the money that I need, but I am personally liable on this note, and I do not have anything back from you that indicates that you owe me money.

Therefore, Madison Financial executed——

Mr. GIUFFRA. That's the money he's owed from the commissions?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. Or that was money that he was given by Madison Financial—Madison Guaranty at least, in lieu of the commissions at that time. It was clearly tied.

Madison Financial then executes on April 7, a note to Mr. Ward that says we have borrowed $300,000 from you. Again the parties all agree that no money changed hands. That note was merely intended to evidence an indebtedness by Madison Financial to Ward. And sort of in a general way was intended to offset the other note.

Mr. GIUFFRA. So as of May 1, what does Mr. Ward have and what does Madison have?

Ms. BLACK. At least immediately prior to May 1, Mr. Ward has $300,000. He has a note on which he owes Madison $300,000 personally. That note is also secured by the Holman Acres property. In addition, Madison Financial has indicated to Mr. Ward that it owes him $300,000.

Again according to the testimony, at that point a couple of concerns arise. One; Mr. Ward says: these notes are offsetting. I could end up still owing you the money and if Madison Financial cannot pay me, then I question whether you're good on the $30,000 notes. He expressed concern that he remained personally liable, I believe.

And on its side, Madison Financial was concerned because Mr. Ward could end up still with the property. If it paid him the $300,000 he could pay off the note and keep the property.

At this point, the testimony of Mr. Latham and Mr. Ward diverges. Mr. Ward says at this point Madison decided——

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Black, I'm going to ask you to suspend and not because I'm not interested. I think that you have really begun to set forth in a way, and I think we'll still have to go back over this. I haven't heard it said the way you have, which obviously speaks for your knowledge on this, but time has run out.

We have not gone the 15 minutes as of yet, although we could because there are four Senators, so I want to ask Senator Sarbanes if he thinks it's worthwhile asking her to pursue this or if he wants to exercise, obviously, his time. Yes?

Senator DODD. Mr. Chairman, before we even do that, I was going to recommend that we take a recess for about 20 minutes.

We have a new colleague from Oregon who was elected last week and his swearing-in ceremony will occur in 5 minutes. I thought it would be important for all of us to be there to welcome him.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now 12:25. Let's break until 2 p.m. for lunch and to welcome our new colleague. Senator Sarbanes, we can decide whether we want Ms. Black to continue or whether you want to examine.

Senator SARBANES. Why don't we do it on this side when we come back.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

We stand in recess until 2 p.m.

[Whereupon, at 12:26 p.m., the hearing was recessed, to be reconvened at 2 p.m. this same day.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. We are waiting for Senator Sarbanes, but Mr. Ben-Veniste has some clarification questions so we'll go to him.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Black, let me see whether we can clarify one area of testimony given this morning with respect to the RTC's knowledge about Mrs. Clinton's work on the IDC matter. A portion of written interrogatories was read, and the suggestion was made that, in those interrogatories, Mrs. Clinton denied any work or knowledge of the IDC matter. Do you recall that earlier this morning?

Ms. BLACK. The line of questioning, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In fact, the question that was responded to by Mrs. Clinton was whether she had any knowledge of Castle Grande. Do you recall that?

Ms. BLACK. I don't but I know that that's an issue, yes. I don't have the interrogatories in front of me.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In order to come back and clarify that with some degree of understanding, the RTC IG knew, when you conducted your investigation that Mrs. Clinton had represented Madison in connection with various aspects of what the Rose Firm referred to as the IDC matter; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, in the Castle Water and Sewer, and the wet/dry issue, we knew that she had some involvement.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. You knew that internally the Rose Firm referred to that matter as the IDC matter and not the Castle Grande matter?

Ms. BLACK. I did not know until recently,

Mrs. Clinton indicated that within the Rose Law Firm, they referred to Castle Grande as only a one small segment of IDC. I did not realize that distinction occurred.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. On the larger, more global issue of your knowledge of the fact that Mrs. Clinton worked on the IDC matter, that was something that she had performed some work, presumably of a supervisory nature, in connection with these two regulatory matters that you had mentioned?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You knew, on the basis of the recap of fees from Madison, that that was reflected in documentary evidence?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. We primarily knew it because her name appeared on a couple of memoranda and/or transmittals, transmittal notes of those memoranda.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go to the area that was pending when we broke for lunch, which was your preparation of a chronology of events.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There is one thing that I notice that was not included on the document. It's Exhibit 3 to your deposition.

Ms. BLACK. I have it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That is the date on which the mortgage agreement was, or the note was signed by Madison and Ward with respect to Mr. Ward's interest in the property.

Ms. BLACK. Do you mean on the initial acquisition?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, there are a lot of things that are not on this chronology. This chronology is what I prepared so that I could understand the issues that were being litigated in Ward v. Madison and to try to trace the money. There are several loans that aren't on here, and that is one event that is not on here.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of imputing knowledge, and I guess part of what you were doing as an investigator was to determine whether it was reasonable for the Rose Law Firm to take the position that it did not know the details of Mr. Ward's acquisition of an interest in this property, particularly the nonrecourse loan.

Ms. BLACK. We are not trying to determine. We are just trying to report the facts.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You are trying to ascertain the facts so that someone else can come to a conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that regard, would you not say that it was important to know when the note was actually executed that reflects a nonrecourse position that Mr. Ward obtained?

Ms. BLACK. That is certainly a fact that we would report, and it is a fact that we did report in our earlier report.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes, but it is not reflected on this document.

Ms. BLACK. No, this is not a complete chronology and it was not done for that purpose. It was done so that I could understand the transactions in Ward v. Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm not being critical and I'm not suggesting that this is all-inclusive, but would you agree that it would be important to know when that mortgage note was executed?

Ms. BLACK. It is certainly a relevant fact and one that we would report, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would it not be the case, in fairness to people at Rose Law Firm who have given their testimony, that it could not be imputed to them that they knew there was a nonrecourse loan if indeed the loan was papered, the mortgage note was signed, after the closing?

Ms. BLACK. I think it was signed about 2 weeks after the closing.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Going to the substance of what you were laying out in terms of your understanding of where the option agreement fit into things in the Ward v. Madison trial, that trial occurred when?

Ms. BLACK. That trial occurred in August 1988.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it correct that the Rose Law Firm represented neither party in that trial?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct; to the best of my knowledge, they did not enter in any kind of an appearance during the 2-day trial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ward was represented by a private attorney?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I believe that he was represented by Alston Jennings?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The interests of Madison were represented by whom, if you recall?

Ms. BLACK. I cannot recall. It was not anybody with the Rose Law Firm.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was it a private firm retained by the Government as successor in interest to Madison?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, the Government was not the successor in interest to Madison at that stage. The trial occurred when Madison was still a privately owned and operated institution. The intervention did not occur until February 1989, at which time FDIC took over the institution, and RTC became the successor of interest after the passage of FIRREA in the summer 1989.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. Let's use the Government sort of as successor in interest since the distinction between FDIC and RTC, I don't think, is pertinent for these purposes. The Government took over at a point where the appellate rights were still viable, and indeed pursued the appellate claims?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct. The Government intervened and removed the litigation to Federal court.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, prior to any retrial on those issues or subsequent litigation, the matter was settled?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, in 1993.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I think the Government received $325,000 from Mr. Ward in settlement.

Ms. BLACK. They received $325,000 from Mr. Ward and released Mr. Ward from any liability concerning any activities at Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Going to the claims that were made during that trial, I take it you have given your testimony based on, at least in part, a review of the trial record in that case?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. OK. The interpretation that you have been providing to us before the break is one based on your review of the trial record?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct. I was trying to relate the position of the two parties in the litigation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that something, an exercise that the RTC retained Pillsbury Madison & Sutro to do as well?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know that they retained them to look at the Ward v. Madison litigation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Have you had occasion to review the reports of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro?

Ms. BLACK. I have reviewed two of them. I am not sure how many are out there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, I am looking at a report which is dated December 19, 1995, and it's entitled: "A Report on Certain Real Estate Loans and Investments made by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Related Entities, Prepared for the Resolution Trust Corporation by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro." Have you had the opportunity to review that document?

Ms. BLACK. I do not believe I have seen that one.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I see that my time is almost up and I do want to pursue some of the things that the Pillsbury firm found and compare them to your findings.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Faircloth.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have a videotape I would like for the Committee to watch. It's very brief. I would like for Ms. Black to comment on it after she sees it.

[Videotape played; transcription as follows.]

Hillary Clinton's legal work for a land deal regulators describe as fraudulent. In May 1995, she told the Resolution Trust Corporation, "I don't believe I knew anything about any of these real estate parcels and projects."

But after billing records showed Hillary Clinton had at least 14 conversations with Seth Ward, the major player in the deal, Mrs. Clinton told Barbara Walters she knew the project by another name.

Mrs. CLINTON. When I was asked about it last year, I didn't recognize it, I didn't remember it. The billing records show I did not do work for Castle Grande. I did work for something called IDC, which was not related to Castle Grande.

REPORTER. That is not how Susan McDougal [the Clintons' former business partner] remembers it. It was always the same thing. As far as I know, IDC and Castle Grande were one and the same.

Later in another sworn statement, Mrs. Clinton said: "It is possible that I did once know something more that would be responsive to these interrogatories, but if I did, I do not recall it now."

[End of videotape; end of transcription.]

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Ms. Black, the point is this—and I wanted to make the point after the tape—these records were found just days after the statute of limitation expired against the Clintons. The RTC and Pillsbury did not have these records when making the decision about who should or might be sued. Furthermore, when Mrs. Clinton did provide answers to the RTC and Pillsbury, they were probably misleading answers.

This is the point: Castle Grande was known as IDC, and for the First Lady to be making this very fine and gossamery distinction, in my opinion, is misleading.

Ms. Black, you have testified that you are a factfinder. Looking at the billing records, do you sense that Mrs. Clinton was more deeply involved in Castle Grande than you first suspected?

Ms. BLACK. When I have used the term "Castle Grande," I did not know anything about this transaction until a couple of years ago. I first became familiar with it by looking at the report of the regulator. He referred to the entire transaction, all the tracts of land together, as Castle Grande and IDC interchangeably. That is the way that I have referred to them. In fairness, in looking at the Rose Law Firm bills, they refer to the transaction as IDC matter number 5.

I do not know how it was referred to inside of the Rose Law Firm, except that I know, having had testimony read here to me today, that other members of the Rose Law Firm have said that that distinction was made. I can't make any judgment about it.

Subsequent to that time, the regulators referred to it as Castle Grande/IDC. That is the way RTC typically refers to it, but I don't know about inside the Rose Law Firm in 1985 and 1986.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Well, it seems very difficult for me to believe that, as smart a lady as the First Lady is, that she wouldn't have been aware that they were interchangeable terms.

With your knowledge, had these records been found before the statute of limitation and you were asked by RTC counsel for your recommendation, would it have been to get a tolling agreement?

Ms. BLACK. We do not make those recommendations. We find facts and report it to RTC, and RTC makes that decision. They don't come back and ask the IG what they should do.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Based on your review, can we assume that Seth Ward was a party to these sham transactions, and that he knew he was being used as a straw man in the transactions?

Ms. BLACK. The regulators concluded that he was one of the insiders who was clearly involved in that sort of transaction. I see no reason to disagree with them.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Let me ask you another question.

If this is the case, do you think it's possible that the First Lady could have had over 14 phone conversations while all this was going on with Seth Ward, discussing these trades, land trades, and not be aware that it was a sham deal?

Ms. BLACK. Again, I would not reach a conclusion. I would simply report the facts that conversations occurred.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Chairman, I will give the rest of any remaining time I might have to Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you, Senator. Could we please put up on the Elmo chart 1 that we used with Mr. Clark, which is the chart showing the transaction. This is just to recapitulate and put us back into where we were in your chronology.

This chart reflects the fact that Madison gave Mr. Ward a $1.15 million nonrecourse loan and Mr. Ward then obtained 650 acres from the IDC Castle Grande project, plus the sewer and water utility; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The regulators found that Mr. Ward was used as a way to circumvent the so-called direct investment limitation?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put back on the screen Ms. Black's Exhibit 3. Ms. Black, if I could just direct your attention to February 28, 1986. The sale of the Castle Water and Sewer aspect of the Seth Ward transaction closed; is that right?

Ms. BLACK. That's correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Mr. Ward engaged in a transaction and sold that portion of his property on that date; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. As of that date, all of Mr. Ward's 650 acres were also sold by him, except for the Holman Acres portion; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. As of February 28, 1986, the $1.15 million note that Mr. Ward had outstanding to Madison was paid?

Ms. BLACK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put on the Elmo billing record 29016. I want to try to show the connection between the billing records and the dates of the transactions. This billing record reflects that Mrs. Clinton had a conversation of just under an hour with Mr. Ward on February 28th, which was the date when the Castle Sewer and Water transactions closed, the date when Mr. Ward sold back the 650 acres, and also the date upon which the $1.15 million note was paid?

Ms. BLACK. It does reflect that. There was a .8-hour conversation between Mrs. Clinton and Seth Ward. It does not say what they talked about.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But the time is also billed to the IDC matter?

Ms. BLACK. Matter number 5, IDC, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If you were doing a conflicts investigation, you would at least consider this phone conversation between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Ward a reportable event?

Ms. BLACK. We would report that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would report the connection, that it occurred on the same date as the $1.15 million Ward note was paid?

Ms. BLACK. We would report both the conversation and we would report the February 28 payment of the note.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Also the transaction involving the sewer closing on the same date?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's go back to Pat Black Exhibit 3. On March 31, Madison Guaranty gives Mr. Ward this $400,000 note which is secured by Holman Acres and then that note is personal recourse; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. On the 7th Madison Financial gives Mr. Ward a note for $300,000; correct?

Ms. BLACK. That is also correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I believe you testified earlier this morning that the $300,000 was intended to compensate Mr. Ward as part of his commissions for engaging in the initial transaction which I put up on the screen originally?

Ms. BLACK. Both Latham and Ward testified at the hearing that that $300,000 was to evidence a prior indebtedness to Mr. Ward, that being the $300,000 in commissions, yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That note was dated April 7, 1986?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I would like to put up on the screen billing record 20024. Have you seen this billing record before, Ms. Black?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This is to the IDC matter?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it is.

Mr. GIUFFRA. There's a reference to a call from Mrs. Clinton on the same date that Madison Financial gives a note to Mr. Ward for $300,000, which is related to the commission, for .20, which is approximately what, about 15 minutes or so?

Ms. BLACK. 12 minutes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. A conversation with a man named Don Denton?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Who is Don Denton?

Ms. BLACK. I believe Don Denton is Harry Don Denton, who was a loan officer with Madison Guaranty.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Was Mr. Denton a loan officer in connection with the March 21-31, 1986 loan to Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. The March 3, 1986 loan to Mr. Ward has initials in the bottom left-hand corner, I believe. Those initials are HDD, which are the initials of Harry Don Denton. We have not asked him if he was—

Mr. GIUFFRA. But Mr. Denton had a connection with these loans to Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. It would appear so, yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. In doing your conflicts analysis, you would report this phone call to Mr. Denton and the fact that it occurred on the same date that Madison Financial provided a note to Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Why would you list them both as reportable events?

Ms. BLACK. They are facts which may illuminate the nature of the transaction, which may be important to an ultimate decision-maker.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would view that the factfinder could see a connection between the call to Mr. Denton and the fact that the note was issued to Mr. Ward on the same day?

Ms. BLACK. They could. We would have also asked Mr. Harry Don Denton if he was the HDD on the left-hand corner of that document, had we known.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up on the Elmo Mrs. Clinton's time record for May 1, 1986. That's 29026. This indicates that Mrs. Clinton had a conference with Mr. Ward, presumably that was a meeting; and that she had a telephone conference with Mr. Ward; and that she had a telephone conference with another person; and then that she prepared the option agreement.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That all occurred on the same date that the option is dated, which is May 1, 1986?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At the last point when we had to take the break, you were describing the significance of the option. If you could just go back into your discussion, as of May 1, 1986, where does Mr. Ward stand in terms of his indebtedness, the money he has. Where does the property stand?

Ms. BLACK. As of that date, Mr. Ward has the $70,000 unsecured note which represents the remaining amount outstanding on the initial Castle Grande loan. Mr. Ward has $300,000 outstanding on his $400,000 personal recourse note on which the Holman Acres property is the security.

Mr. GIUFFRA. He owes the bank the $300,000 on that particular part of it?

Ms. BLACK. Correct. Madison Financial owes Ward $300,000. At that point, the testimony of Mr. Ward and Mr. Latham diverges. Mr. Ward says that he doesn't know why the option of May 1 was executed. That option gives Madison Financial the right to purchase the 22-acre property for $400,000.

Mr. Latham says that the parties became concerned that they still didn't have their transaction down right, the two $300,000 notes could cancel each other out, Ward would still in effect not have his commission and he would end up with the land. What they intended was for Ward to have his commission and for Madison Financial to get the land. They executed an option agreement which was to have taken the place of the prior transactions.

According to Mr. Latham, Madison Financial was not able to exercise that option. Once again, this was during the time when the regulators were in the institution. They were in financial straights and they could not exercise the option so they could not consummate the transaction.

Shortly after that, Mr. Ward became—again, according to Mr. Latham—concerned that events were not progressing, that he was still personally liable on this $300,000 note, that Madison hadn't been able to exercise the option. He came to Latham and said: this has to change, I don't want to be liable on this note. It's about to come due, and I am not going to pay you as long as you can't pay me the $300,000 that you owe me.

Latham agreed with him, and then on June 6, 1986 Ward was released from personal liability on all of his notes that were still outstanding. I guess there was a subsequent $70,000 note which had paid off the earlier one on which there was personal recourse. Then as Mr. Latham says, he made a mistake in not getting the $300,000 note back from Mr. Ward.

Mr. GIUFFRA. On December 12, 1986 Mr. Ward quitclaims the Holman Acres property back to Madison?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We will stop right here. Where does everything stand at this point?

Ms. BLACK. On December 12, 1986 there is a quitclaim deed back to the institution, which in effect satisfies both the $400,000 note on which $300,000 remained outstanding and the $70,000 note. At that point, Madison took a loss of $470,000 minus whatever the value of that land was. In addition, there remained outstanding the $300,000 note—

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was owed to Ward?

Ms. BLACK. That was owed to Ward, so Ward has $470,000 and a note showing that Madison Financial owes him $300,000, and he sued on that note.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At that point, he's got $470,000 in cash and then another $300,000 as a note?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. That note was the subject of the suit?

Ms. BLACK. That note was the subject of the suit, that note and various other offsetting claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Black, this chronology here, when was this prepared?

Ms. BLACK. I did that Sunday.

Senator SARBANES. I see. You just did this chronology?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. For purposes of this hearing?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, I was having a hard time understanding this transaction and I wanted to be able to understand it myself. Obviously I knew this hearing was going to come up; I had been notified that I was going to be called to testify and I needed to fully understand the transaction. I did this to help myself understand it. And keep track of the various dates.

Senator SARBANES. Did you do it just out of your memory?

Ms. BLACK. No. I did it using the documents. I was in my office using documents. At one point when I was trying to understand the case, there was a more extensive version of all the dates on which loans were made in and out of Madison on a blackboard. I put some of that into computer format, the dates that I considered most significant.

Senator SARBANES. On the blackboard in your office?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Black, I think you have before you a report of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro dated December 28, 1995.

Ms. BLACK. The one entitled, "A Report on the Representation of Madison Guaranty?"

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. This was a report by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro, again made at the behest and paid for by the Resolution Trust Corporation?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you would turn to page 62 in the very last paragraph, Mr. Dover, who represented the seller of the IDC land and who has testified before this Committee in open session, stated that the principals as opposed to the lawyers put together the deal for the sale of the IDC property. Do you see that?

Ms. BLACK. The paragraph starting "Despite the absence of records?"

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes, in that paragraph.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The last full sentence of that paragraph.

Ms. BLACK. "Dover says that the principal as opposed to the lawyers put together the deal."

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. And he identified IDC's principal as Mr. Brick Lyle.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have reason to challenge that conclusion on the basis of any of the information you've seen?

Ms. BLACK. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Then that takes us—when I say that you have seen, I mean, as you sit here today.

Ms. BLACK. Pardon?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I mean, as you sit here today. With respect to the matters that you relate regarding the trial in Arkansas of the dispute between Madison Guaranty and Mr. Ward, that matter was discussed at some length in the same report that you have before you, and I refer you to page 76. Are you with me?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You see that the general subject of Ward v. Madison is discussed there. I want to draw your attention to the last paragraph, where it says that: "In other respects, McDougal and Ward seem to have resorted to self-help rather than advice of counsel. Are you with me? The last paragraph on page 76.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that regard, they identify certain of the transactions about which you've just referenced in your testimony.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. For example, the $400,000 from Madison Guaranty to Ward, the $300,000 from Ward to Madison Financial and the $70,000 running in both directions.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In taking that into consideration, that the principals resorted to self-help in terms of drafting up and making these agreements among themselves, do you have any evidence to provide to this Committee to suggest that any lawyer at the Rose Law Firm was aware of those transactions?

Ms. BLACK. I do not know whether they were aware or not. I have no evidence.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At the trial of the case, is it fair to say that the jury concluded that the version it would believe was Mr. Ward's version of events as compared with Mr. Latham's version of events?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it did. At the trial of that case, however, the Government was certainly not a party. It was the institution which did not obviously come in and report the accurate state of affairs within that institution. For example, the un rebutted evidence presented to the jury was that this transaction which resulted in the series of what the regulator referred to as land flips, resulted in something approaching a $3 million profit to the institution when in fact it would ultimately result in a $4 million loss.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What I want to focus on is the role, if any, that this option agreement played.

Ms. BLACK. All right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The land flips occurred later.

Ms. BLACK. Well, they had occurred before the litigation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Before the litigation?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But subsequent, I think we have already established that the Rose Law Firm, by anyone's analysis, had nothing to do with these papering or facilitating these land flips.

Ms. BLACK. Sir, that last transaction, that $400,000 transaction involving Holman Acres, was described by the regulators as one of the land flips.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, was it a land flip?

Ms. BLACK. It was identified in the interim report as one of those series of insider transactions, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Help us to describe how this was a land flip.

Ms. BLACK. In the May 8th report, the examiner noted that—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm sorry, the May 8th report of?

Ms. BLACK. I am sorry, of Mr. James Clark, the examiner, that:

Ward still owns a small parcel which secures another Madison Guaranty loan which will be purchased by Madison Financial.

That's the last in a series of Ward transactions that he's talking about, and that is this parcel.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But he still owned that parcel?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. Then he said, goes on to say:

Ward apparently warehoused this land to reduce Madison Financial's investment and the attendant borrowing from Madison Guaranty.

The CHAIRMAN. Mrs. Black, take your time, please. You're under no obligation to either side to race through, so just take your time.

Ms. BLACK. Reading:

In this way, limitation on Madison Guaranty's investment and its service corporation are avoided.

He then goes on to say:

In fact, $100,000 of Ward's remaining loan on the Castle Grande land appears to have been diverted to Madison Financial through a third party. By using a circuitous route, additional Madison Guaranty investment in Madison Financial was disguised as a loan to Ward.

According to the parties, this last transaction was, taking the May 1st option aside, but the loan which was secured by the property and the notes back and forth, was a method for Mr. Ward to take his commissions out of the institution. It involved highly inflating the value of that land, and it involved a lack of appraisal which was typical in all of these.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The theory of this conclusion was that this was a means of Mr. Ward taking his commissions?

Ms. BLACK. That this was a means of Mr. Ward taking his commissions as a part of, if you will, the final land transaction with the final remaining $22,000 and transferring that over to Madison Financial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The final—

Ms. BLACK. I'm sorry, 22 acres, sorry.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But you will grant me that in their analysis of the trial and all of the evidence before it, Pillsbury concluded on page 76—and I would like to get your comment on that—in the third paragraph:

If this view is accepted, then the option might be deemed a rather opaque and perhaps misleading means of documenting Ward's entitlement to commissions.

Are you with me?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Quoting:

But as noted, this is a theory the jury in Ward v. Madison rejected and it suffers from a number of problems, starting with its inconsistency with the September 24, 1985 letter and going on to its dependence on Latham and Young, witnesses whom it would be easy to impeach.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you take issue with that conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. I think the witnesses at that trial, certainly on both sides, suffer from credibility problems, having made inconsistent statements at various times. It is impossible to go back and relitigate a case. It is clear from reading the transcript in that case, as I presume you have done, that the jury did not get an accurate description of what was going on inside that institution. RTC wanted to go back and relitigate that. They were not successful in doing so, but they attempted to do so for the next 4 years.

My point in looking at this, if we can step back again and remember that we're doing a conflicts report—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. I'll get to that in a second.

Ms. BLACK. My point in looking at this is that once again, Rose's involvement in that, knowing or otherwise—and I do not know, I have no evidence one way or another on their knowledge of the series of events, but even if it was a completely unknowing involvement—the fact is that they were potential fact witnesses in this Ward v. Madison litigation that RTC was attempting to prosecute.

RTC had expressly told the Rose Law Firm that it was concerned about that litigation. It did not know that the Rose Law Firm had a connection with the underlying transactions. It only knew that there was a familial connection between Mr. Ward and Mr. Hubbell. That was enough to raise concerns and that was enough for RTC to get assurances from Rose that Mr. Hubbell had no connection with the underlying transaction. But Rose itself did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In connection with the 2 hours in conference and preparation of this option agreement and the regulatory matters that you've discussed; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In this 2 hours, I have looked at the option agreement and I'm sure you have—

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With a view toward thinking, is this something that I could prepare in 2 hours. I'm sure you've come to the same conclusion, that this would be a difficult document, even if the whole 2 hours were spent and you had all the underlying materials, to prepare in 2 hours. Do you agree with that assessment?

Ms. BLACK. It is a four-page document. About one of those pages is made up of a description of the land. I believe what Mrs. Clinton said is that it would have been very difficult for her to have drafted that from scratch in a 2-hour period. Obviously, there are forms that are available, as we all know, for various legal transactions.

I have no idea what was used. I think it is reasonable to say it would be difficult to draft that from scratch in 2 hours, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The implication being that it was presented in some other draft form for review?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. One possibility?

Ms. BLACK. That is one possibility. Another possibility is that a form was used, a previous agreement where you change the names and plug in the description. I don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now to come back, if I may, for the final question that you alluded to, you did all of this in the context of reviewing the matter for potential conflicts violation, and that would be presented to some finder of fact. Who would that finder of fact be and what are the potential results of that?

Ms. BLACK. We are not finished, so we don't have—and we wouldn't reach the conclusion, anyway. It would be presented to the FDIC legal division, who would presumably share it with their outside counsel.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The possible ramifications?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know. They would look at it from a conflicts perspective themselves. The last time that we did a report, we suggested that they send it to their outside counsel to see if the facts that we found during the course of our conflicts investigation might also impact upon their review concerning legal liability, which we knew to be ongoing at that time. We might well do something like that again.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'll come back to that. My time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

In connection with Mr. Ben-Veniste's question to you about a draft having been presented perhaps to Mrs. Clinton from which she then prepared the final option document, do you know whether the description in the option document is the same description that was in the backdated letter of September 24th?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, it is, but there were two versions of that option agreement as well, and in one of those versions, that was not the description. Instead, the description was of a 6.6-acre parcel of land known as the Levi Strauss Building. One of the parties, I think it was Ward, in a deposition of which we've seen a summary, indicated that he discovered that the 6.6-acre description was wrong, which it clearly was. Ward did not own that property. The first 2 pages of that option agreement were retyped. Mrs. Clinton's initials on the word processing code, the "g" initial was contained on the 6.6 description. It was not contained on the 22½-acre description.

Mr. CHERTOFF. A portion of the description may have been retyped after the initial draft prepared by Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. That is what Mr. Ward said and that appears to be the case from the document itself.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then it was combined in the same document?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was signed May 1?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. May 1 is the date on which we have the 2 hours of work by Mrs. Clinton, which included the conference with Seth Ward, a telephone conference with Seth Ward regarding the option, a telephone conference with Mike Schauffler and a preparation of the option?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to go back to the trial because the issue was raised about the jury verdict in that case, and I believe you quite succinctly made the point that if you review the trial record, the jury didn't have all the facts before it. Do you know what position Mr. Ward took in the case, in his sworn testimony about how the option was prepared?

Ms. BLACK. How the option was prepared?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes. Who prepared it?

Ms. BLACK. The option or the September 24 letter?

Mr. CHERTOFF. The option. I'll refresh your memory. I can give you a copy of the transcript. We can bring it down to you. At page 56, if you go to page 56, you'll see at line 13 it says:

Question: The option that they originally took out was for 6.6 acres, was it not?

Answer: I didn't prepare the option. The option that they originally prepared carried the land description for a building that was a Levi Strauss Building, which Madison purchased from me and sold to Mr. Fitzhugh.

Then he goes on down at line 23:

Question: And you don't recall why Madison Financial Corporation on May 1st took out this option to purchase tracks 27 and 28?

Answer: I would imagine that they wanted that property whether they repaid them or not. I don't know.

Is it your understanding that there was no evidence at the trial that contrary to Mr. Ward's suggestion that he didn't know how the option was prepared that, in fact, there had been discussion between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Ward regarding the option?

Ms. BLACK. Are you saying was there any evidence to that effect presented at the trial?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right.

Ms. BLACK. I do not believe there was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that the evidence that we have now before us based on the billing records discovered this January indicating that there was a telephone conference between Mr. Ward and Mrs. Clinton regarding the option is inconsistent with his sworn testimony that he didn't have knowledge about how the option was prepared and that he didn't prepare the option?

Ms. BLACK. Well, he says he didn't prepare the option. Then he says he doesn't know why it was prepared.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yet we now have evidence that indicates that, in fact, he had discussion with the lawyer who prepared the option; isn't that right?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, he did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This new evidence, which is contained in the billing records was unavailable so far as you know from reading the trial record to the jury at the trial? The jury at the trial didn't hear about this?

Ms. BLACK. So far as I know, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. As far as we know it wasn't available to Pillsbury Madison & Sutro when they prepared their report?

Ms. BLACK. They found out about the option at the last moment and therefore kept the report open to see what impact it might have on their analysis.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When they closed their report on December 28 under the gun, so to speak, they still didn't have the billing record that indicated not only that Mrs. Clinton had had some undefined role in the option, but that she had had specific conversation with Mr. Ward about the option?

Ms. BLACK. They did not have those records. They were not discovered until January.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They ran out of time basically before those records were discovered?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to go back to those issues that Mr. Ben-Veniste raised with you in the report. Because I think once and for all, we ought to get—in fairness to the people at Pillsbury, frankly, a notion of some of the things they wrote and some of the things they knew and didn't know.

If we go back to page 62, which is one of the pages that you were asked about by Mr. Ben-Veniste, it indicates, for example, that Mr. Dover said—I'll give you a chance to find that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We're into the Pillsbury report?

The CHAIRMAN. Pillsbury.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Pillsbury report, page 62. It indicates there, for example, that Mr. Dover said that the principals as opposed to the lawyers put together the deal, and he identified IDC's principal as Mr. R.A. Brick Lyle.

Are you aware that among the recently discovered billing records is an entry for November 14, 1985 indicating that Mrs. Clinton had had a conversation with Mr. Ward regarding the purchase from Brick Lyle?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir. That appears in a billing memorandum that identifies the billing category as general matter number 4. I believe the copy that I have has a circle around it with the handwritten notation "move to IDC matter number 5."

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. That is, of course, information that the Pillsbury people didn't have. Footnote 265 indicates that Mr. Ward told the Inspector General—I guess that would be you or people in your office—that he does not remember the Rose Law Firm doing any legal work for Madison Guaranty on the Castle Grande transaction or on anything else. You would agree with me in light of your review of the billing records discovered after the report was completed that that statement by Mr. Ward is absolutely contradicted by these records?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Ward's statement, upon which the Pillsbury report—

Ms. BLACK. If I may, it shows his recollection is not consistent with these records.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Without examining why he said what he did, whether it was merely a failure of memory or if it was a deliberate effort to mislead, his statements which were used and relied upon by the Pillsbury report, the statement that he does not remember the Rose Firm doing any legal work for Madison on Castle Grande or anything else, that statement is inaccurate based on what we now know from these newly discovered billing records?

Ms. BLACK. The records show that Rose did bill for that work, some work.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would also agree with me that with respect to the conclusion on which Mr. Ben-Veniste is putting a considerable amount of weight—and this is now on page 76 of the report, it's the last paragraph where it says:

Beyond this, the theory that Ward or McDougal wanted to have the Rose Law Firm document the terms that [arguably] make Ward a straw man is hard to reconcile with the fact that in other respects McDougal and Ward seem to have resorted to self-help rather than advice of counsel.

Would you agree with me that one might reevaluate that conclusion if you became aware after the report was published that, in fact, Mr. Ward had obtained or had discussions with counsel, specifically Mrs. Clinton, on approximately 14 or 15 occasions during the time that these transactions were going on?

Ms. BLACK. We would report those contacts to Pillsbury or to the legal division and from there to Pillsbury. What effect that would have, sir, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would certainly agree with me that contrary to the conclusion written by the Pillsbury people—and I say this without criticism because they're not soothsayers. They were in the same boat we all were on December 28 looking for records. I mean, we didn't know where they were either, so we were in no better position than they were. Would you agree we have evidence in the billing records that are newly discovered that indicate on 14 or 15 or 16 occasions Mr. Ward did, in fact, get some advice of counsel or had a discussion with counsel, namely Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. He was talking on 15 or 16 occasions to Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That, again, is something that the Pillsbury people couldn't put in their report because it was withheld from them.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Black, because I think Mr. Giuffra went over it, and I found it interesting that on three different occasions in which transactions that you noted took place according to your little synopsis that you made to help you keep a flow of what took place; right, it was kind of an aid for yourself; right?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir. That's all it was.

The CHAIRMAN. On those three that you noted where there were transactions that took place in terms of properties being conveyed to Seth Ward and options, on February 28, 1986, indeed there was a billing from Mrs. Clinton as it related to IDC and Seth Ward, and that's a date that's one of them for eight-tenths of an hour?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. On April 4, 1986, there was a 12-minute conversation and that's a day of another transaction that took place on the same day?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then on May 1st there was a 2-hour billing time for the option and again, that was another day in which things took place as well as a conference?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If an attorney in compiling and making this report indicated to the Pillsbury people that they didn't see any legal representation, obviously not having this, if they had this information, do you think they could have come to that conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. Again, we would report the facts and let them conclude, sir. The billing was to Madison, not to Mr. Ward.

The CHAIRMAN. But we have also the conversation with Seth Ward, the billings indicate that he was part and parcel and the other records indicate these were transactions that took place on these particular days?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I guess it's fair to say, Ms. Black, that during this period between February 28 when they close the deal, they finally get into the last stages of flipping out the land from Ward to other people. From that point on, at the three of the four critical transaction dates, Mrs. Clinton is having a conversation. On the date that they close the loan with Ward, she talks to Ward. On the date that Madison Financial executes a note to Ward, she talks to the loan officer, Denton, and on the day that the option is signed, she not only works in preparing the option, but she has a conversation with Ward about the option. These particular entries, you will agree with me, whatever the conclusion is, are relevant evidence concerning the activities of a Rose Firm lawyer at critical stages of a land flip?

Ms. BLACK. Those are all conversations which we would report.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You said in response to Mr. Ben-Veniste's question that when the RTC engaged the Rose Law Firm—I think you said this—they were very concerned, among other things, with these particular set of transactions?

Ms. BLACK. They were either at the time of engagement or shortly afterwards. The RTC—various people within RTC and within the entity that succeeded Madison raised concerns about Mr. Hubbell's connection with Mr. Ward. One of the people in the institution expressed objections to the release of the Borod & Huggins report to

Mr. Hubbell because it was involved in the litigation where Madison and Ward—because that litigation was going on and because of the things that were contained in that report, they did not want that to go to RTC. Various people within—I'm sorry, to Rose Law Firm. There were four or five people within RTC that expressed strenuous objections concerning that, and the RTC attorney—actually, then FDIC—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Breslaw.

Ms. BLACK. Ms. Breslaw, in fact, contacted Mr. Hubbell and expressed those concerns, relayed those concerns and that resulted in a letter from Mr. Hubbell indicating that he did not represent Mr. Ward in connection with his transactions with Madison or his litigation with Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But that was misleading because the firm had, in fact, represented or had been directly involved in these transactions as we now know.

Ms. BLACK. Again, from a conflicts perspective, we think that should have been disclosed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that this set of relationships, which involves direct involvement in the questioned transactions is even a much more powerful issue from a conflicts standpoint than a family relationship?

Ms. BLACK. I am sure that would certainly have been something that RTC would have wanted to know about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because that involves the firm's conduct.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Was the sanction on the conflicts inquiry that the firm shouldn't do the business? Is that the essential sanction?

Ms. BLACK. I don't know what type of sanction might flow out of that. The matter has been referred further. But again, our review was to—if you will, a compliance investigation to determine whether the Rose Law Firm had complied with the RTC requirements. That's what we were looking at.

Senator SARBANES. If someone doesn't do that, then they don't get the business; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. One would expect so.

Senator SARBANES. OK. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. On that point, the fact is—I suppose you know this—that a memorandum circulated back at the time that the Rose Law Firm wished to get RTC business to advise the lawyers in the Rose Law Firm of the position of the RTC that they would not hire firms or attorneys who are on both sides of these disputes. Were you aware of the fact that a canvass was made at the time?

Ms. BLACK. I believe I have seen that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, you were aware that the Rose Law Firm returned a portion of its retainer from Madison Guaranty at or about that time?

Ms. BLACK. I would have to look at the dates. I think you are right. I can't remember the precise dates.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I think perhaps you were quick to agree with the suggestion incorporated in the question posed by Mr. Chertoff that the option agreement was signed on May 1st. Would you take a look at it, please?

Ms. BLACK. I don't have it in front of me, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can we get a copy down there? Do you have both versions there?

Ms. BLACK. I have at least one version. One moment, please.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. One version is notarized and the other is not. Are you with me, Ms. Black?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, I do have both versions here. The first version that describes the 6.6-acre property is dated May 1st and as far as I can tell from the document, was signed that day. The second one has a different description. It is the Holman Acres property description. It is also dated May 1st. There is an acknowledgment—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. An editorial signature?

Ms. BLACK. That acknowledgment is dated May 5th.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The acknowledgment is that the parties came before the notary and signed the document on that day?

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That would lead you to conclude that while some version of this may have been prepared on May 1, which is consistent with Mrs. Clinton's time sheets, the actual and corrected version was signed on May 5th?

Ms. BLACK. That would appear to be true.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Second, I think Mr. Chertoff asked you at page 56 of the transcript of the Ward v. Madison trial without reading you the question whether he knew why the option agreement was entered into and that he could not tell. I would like you to look at the actual question, which is:

Question: And you don't recall why Madison Financial Corporation on May 1st took out this option to purchase tracks 27 and 28?

Answer: I would imagine that they wanted that property whether they repaid them or not. I don't know.

The question put to Mr. Ward was what was in Madison Financial's mind, not what was in his mind; isn't that so?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The question was not put to him as to what was in his mind?

Ms. BLACK. No. At that time he was an employee of Madison Financial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I understand that, but the contract is between the two parties, the employee and the entity itself?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to the question that was posed to you, you have now received information reflecting that Mrs. Clinton was apprised or had a conversation with Mr. Ward regarding a purchase from Brick Lyle. I would like to call your attention to that entry so it's clear on this record what that actually amounted to, and according to document DKSJN 029008, which is dated November 14, 1985—are you with me?

Ms. BLACK. No, I'm sorry, I'm not.

Yes, sir, I'm with you now.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That was for a grand total of half an hour?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There is no indication, is there, in any of the records that you have reviewed that Mrs. Clinton was in any way involved in the structuring of that transaction which had closed some weeks before?

Ms. BLACK. We do not have the billing memoranda from that time, no, sir, we don't.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to the 14 or 15 conversations with Mr. Ward that you were questioned about, I take it you did monitor the testimony in open session before this Committee last week where Mr. Donovan testified?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir, I was trying to prepare for my own.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I see. Well, let me summarize, and if I do so erroneously, I'm sure my friend, Mr. Chertoff will help me out.

Mr. Donovan testified that with respect to the vast majority of those contacts, they occurred at a time when Mr. Donovan was handling these two regulatory matters, the wet/dry matter and the sewer matter, which Ms. Clinton was supervising him and was the billing partner on. Is that consistent with your own review of Mr. Donovan's time?

Ms. BLACK. I have not broken it down that way, sir. It may well be. It would be fairly easy to figure out.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Second, Mr. Donovan testified that Mr. Ward, an older man with a somewhat prickly personality who wanted to speak to the partner in charge and that he was very happy with that arrangement, himself as a young associate at the time, and that Mr. Ward would call Ms. Clinton about matters that Mr. Donovan was working on. That's the substance of that. Would you have any reason to disagree with that interpretation of these telephone contacts between Mr. Ward and Ms. Clinton?

Ms. BLACK. I do not know why Mr. Ward called Mrs. Clinton or the other way around.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But you wouldn't have any reason to disagree with Mr. Donovan's sworn testimony?

Ms. BLACK. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To go on with the reference that Mr. Chertoff made at page 76 to page 77, it is correct, is it not—

Ms. BLACK. We're back on the Pillsbury report?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes, I'm sorry, Pillsbury report, page 77 that Pillsbury assumed for purposes of reaching its summary and conclusion that Ms. Clinton did indeed have something to do with the drafting of the option which we have been talking about here this afternoon; correct?

Ms. BLACK. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was Pillsbury's conclusion on the basis of the information presented to it that based on that information, in the absence of making the jump that somehow Ms. Clinton knew that there was something untoward in the initial arrangement between Mr. Ward and Mr. McDougal to evade the 6 percent direct investment limitation that it could not conclude that Ms. Clinton in providing whatever assistance she provided to Mr. Ward on May 1 did so with some bad motive, in derogation of some requirement or limitation?

Ms. BLACK. I believe what Pillsbury says is that: "While Mrs. Clinton seems to have some role in drafting the May 1, 1986 option, nothing proves that she did so knowing it to be wrong."

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that: "The theories that tie this option to wrongdoing or to the straw man arrangements are strained at best." That was the conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. That is what they wrote, yes, sir.

Senator DODD. I was going to make that same point.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say I appreciate our witnesses being here. These are professional people and you worked with the Government for some time, and I have great admiration and respect for people who put in these long hours. You don't anticipate spending a day in front of a Congressional hearing like this and basically it's to gather facts and information. The Pillsbury report obviously draws conclusions, and it's not your job—correct me if I'm wrong—to draw conclusions, but to provide information and facts upon which conclusions may be drawn by others as they draft reports; is that basically right?

Ms. BLACK. Absolutely.

Mr. SWITZER. Yes, sir.

Senator DODD. I appreciate the efforts on the part of some to draw you in to conclusions and I've watched you painfully try and avoid that and I respect that. I gather we're going to have a review since the tolling expires around the end of February. Is that right, March 1st? In light of where we spent most of the day today, it seems to me, with our two witnesses here in going back over to the extent that the billing records in some way would change some of the conclusions, we'll get an answer to that in a matter of days here now.

At least some of us here believe that in light of the fact that there was an awareness in mid-December about the fact that the Rose Law Firm and specifically Mrs. Clinton with the acknowledgment or recognition of this letter "g" on the document, and I heard Ms. Black say, at least as far as one of those conclusions, it's the second report and I think we're probably losing an audience here on this, but at least as far as one of those conclusions go, the Pillsbury report could base its conclusions with the awareness and knowledge of the fact the Rose Law Firm was involved and Mrs. Clinton specifically was involved.

I think a couple of points may be worth reiterating, Mr. Chairman, and one is that the report made extensive reference to the RTC IG's report. I guess it was 14 bound volumes of information that they had in which they drew their conclusions. I admire immensely the people who compiled all of that. Obviously, a significant amount of work went into that—

Ms. BLACK. Forty actually.

Senator DODD. How many?

Ms. BLACK. Forty volumes.

Senator DODD. Forty volumes as opposed to 14. Jay Stephens, the Republican appointee who was U.S. Attorney, is the one who put all this together, spent 2 years and a lot of people involved, I guess, $4 million, 40 volumes of information and again, aware in mid-December prior to the issuance of the report and their conclusions here, and I'm quoting: "The record does not establish that the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty involved misconduct warranting the institution of legal proceedings against it by the RTC." And they concluded that: "No action should be taken against the Rose Law Firm and no further resources should be expended in investigating the Rose Law Firm."

I appreciate there is some additional questions here with regard to a second part of this report, and we will get an answer to that in a few days. I don't know the answer to it. It seems to me that there's been an effort here to try and somehow discredit the Pillsbury report.

Some people didn't like the conclusions. They would have loved it had there been some huge indictment included in it. There wasn't. I think it's important that those who are witnessing this hearing understand that a lot of people did a lot of work that contributed to these conclusions. They weren't reached lightly.

The Pillsbury study was not a partisan study. There were days and months spent on this. They had a lot of information to draw conclusions. Some people don't like those conclusions, and we maybe get some additions and nuances in light of some additional information. But frankly, I suspect that had there been a different conclusion, others would be trying to figure out some way they'd like to put some twist on it. But the fact of the matter is this is what they concluded.

I appreciate immensely your spending the time preparing for these hearings today and trying to shed some light on how you gather facts and what sort of information you have to look at, and I appreciate your position. Those of us on this side of the table, I guess, place more emphasis on the effects of certain actions, where you have to look at the actions themselves.

We look at that Frost case and see a good result. In fact, from the taxpayers' standpoint a good, strong result. I gather others have reached the same conclusion. We run the film backward and say well, you get a great result in that case, the only case which they're involved, so the potential conflict didn't affect the outcome.

That is not your job. You have to look at other questions here, but from our standpoint and a taxpayer's standpoint, the question comes were we disadvantaged somehow financially as a result of that potential conflict. And maybe you'll reach different conclusions, but based on what I've seen and what others have said, the amount that was secured as a result of that settlement was about as good as you might expect in that situation.

Again, that doesn't answer your job. Your question is to look at what was going on here and so forth and does that pass the ethics test that you have to apply. I'm sure you can also appreciate from our standpoint, we look and say, was there some great effect here on all of this, and at least I don't see it based on the amount that was achieved or received in the settlement on the Frost case.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I don't have any additional questions. I'll be glad to yield whatever time I have left. I see the red light is on. I apologize.

The CHAIRMAN. Before I recognize Mr. Chertoff and put this on our time, let me make several observations. First of all, I want to commend both our witnesses. Theirs is not an easy job and it's not easy to come here, and to resist the temptation that some of us would like you to make various conclusions. There's no doubt about it, but I think you both have testified in a most forthright manner, very knowledgeable on this and it demonstrates that there are people who are dedicated to the job, do an outstanding job, and I say that you represent and epitomize that, and this is not easy and I understand that.

Second, as it relates to this Madison Pillsbury report, I think it's fair because I understand, and I remember when Mr. Stephens's firm was appointed and that was a hue and cry as it related—and indeed, there's testimony and some of it was very candid and straight forth from some of the witnesses at the White House that they were concerned about his partiality or impartiality, whichever way you want to view that and that was a very real concern.

The fact of the matter is that Mr. Stephens worked—and this comes from the firm's billing records 10 hours on this report in which thousands of hours went in. With respect to the conclusions that were made, this was not a report that exonerated the Rose Law Firm.

Indeed, page 8 it says the Rose Law Firm had a conflict under the Arkansas Model Rules of Professional Conduct in continuing with representation of RTC FDIC in the Frost case in light of the facts that A, Seth Ward was at the time a client of the Rose Law Firm. They didn't even have the benefit of seeing to the extent and to the billing and the work that was done. B, the Rose Law Firm had represented Madison Guaranty and Ward in the acquisition of Castle Grande property from IDC in which questionable loans had been made to Ward. And C, the Rose Law Firm had in its employ an attorney, Patricia Heritage, a former employee of Madison Guaranty who while at work at Madison Guaranty may have created minutes of board meetings that never took place and was a potential witness in the Frost case.

Indeed, when we review the Frost case, that much of the information that is now available never made it into the case for whatever reason. It appears pretty obvious that there was a concerted effort to keep those facts which were ordinarily, if there had been a spirited defense of any case, would have made their way in. How did this option even get into there, a key part of the case?

Mr. Chertoff has pointed out that there is no one making any assessment as it relates to the quality of the work of Pillsbury Madison & Sutro, but indeed these records were not available and these records, coupled with the other activities, shed quite a different light on it.

Finally, what they said as it relates to cost-effectiveness in bringing a suit that would not be cost-effective. It looked at some of the people. It didn't say that this is a clean bill of health, but there is a question about cost-effectiveness, and as it relates to the law firm, well, we'll see because now, this sheds some real light with respect to whether or not the Rose Law Firm in its handling, in its conduct of business should have been aware of what was taking place and what responsibility flows as it relates to partners who may or may not be undertaking activities that were inappropriate.

Clearly—and my colleague did indicate and that's the case, they will be making a recommendation with respect to this after they get an opportunity and after the RTC investigators have an opportunity to fully assimilate the new facts and new information and where it leads us.

In many cases, these facts lead us to other matters, which then continue to reveal facts so that we can get a picture.

What we're trying to do is get the picture, but certainly, this report can in no way be considered to be the clear all, the report that says there are things that were conducted that were done properly. It indicates that there were absolute breaches under the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct that the firm is not held to be blameless, and it is a question about cost-effectiveness.

And again, not to draw this out any longer, these records that were just recently revealed were not available, and they are part and parcel of the total fact picture that you need if you're going to make a complete conclusion based upon facts.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Black, in fact, I think you had observed in an answer a short while ago that there are still some detailed billing records that are not available. In fact if we try to reconstruct and I know we have about 14 hours of time Mrs. Clinton billed, that is we don't have backup for, so 14 hours relating to IDC. We don't have detailed billing records for the work on that transaction in September, October, and November 1985 even as we sit here today; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. We do not have the billing memoranda for September, October or November on matter number 5 IDC. There was a handwritten change to the January bill on Madison number 5 IDC which increased the billable amount attributed to Mrs. Clinton, and I believe if one divides her normal billing rate into that excess amount, it does roughly come to 14 hours.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Assuming, as anyone would like to, that these are—there wasn't any deliberate misbilling, there are clearly 14 hours of work for this transaction relating to this transaction that are undetailed, unaccounted for and as to which we still don't have records. We are still not in a position to make a final assessment because we don't have all the records.

But let me ask you this. You were asked earlier about what the result would be of learning about this conflict of interest, and I take it that if they had disclosed this conflict of interest up front, so to speak, they probably would not have been engaged to do the work for the RTC; right?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that April Breslaw indicated that as to some of the material that we had disclosed to her, that might have been the result.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was, of course, less than we now have, which would be much more significant?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Of course, it often happens that one discovers only after the fact that someone has concealed a conflict of interest, and at that point, you can no longer simply take the work away from them. They've done the work, but I take it then what happens is that the RTC considers, for example, whether to sue or recover the fees. Is that one option?

Ms. BLACK. I suppose they could do that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If, for example, a firm misled the RTC, if there were misleading statements or false statements, that could be the basis for even some kind of criminal investigation, I take it?

Ms. BLACK. Could you repeat that, please.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If there were, for example, false statements made in connection with obtaining the work or misleading statements, there could be a criminal investigation relating to that?

Ms. BLACK. If there was a certification made to an agency and that certification was made knowing that it was false, yes, that could be a violation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The point is that although it's true that before the fact when a conflict is revealed, the only result is to take the work away. After the fact, when the work has been done and a conflict is revealed, then there are other kinds of steps that can be taken. I take it back in 1993, for example, 3 years ago, if all this information had been available, whether, for example, to sue the Rose Law Firm or to try to recover fees or take some other kind of action, that decision would have been presented 3 years earlier than it is today, if they had all the facts back in 1993?

Ms. BLACK. I suppose so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, you have in your package a memorandum from our 1994 hearings to the First Lady from Harold Ickes dated 1 March 1994 re: Resolution Trust Corporation. I think it's in your package of materials.

Ms. BLACK. I think I've seen it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's got a 1720 at the top.

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This was a memorandum which a couple of years ago, the Committee obtained when the Committee was examining the issue of contacts between Mr. Altman, who was then the acting head of the RTC and Deputy Treasury Secretary and the White House and in particular, the Committee was examining an event in early February 1994 when Mr. Altman was considering whether he ought to recuse himself from matters relating to Madison and was urged by Mr. Nussbaum to continue in place because, among other reasons, Mr. Nussbaum didn't like or was concerned about Ms. Kulka, who would have been the next in line.

I think his concern was that she had been very aggressive in the Keating case pursuing lawyers. And of course, this memo specifically relates to the issue of—evidently it's to the First Lady from Mr. Eggleston through Mr. Ickes relating to this very issue of conflicts of interest and how the RTC might deal with that. Do you remember the Keating case? What was it that Ms. Kulka had done with respect to lawyers in the Keating case that was the subject of Mr. Nussbaum's concern?

Ms. BLACK. I remember seeing Mr. Nussbaum's concern. I think he opposed her in some litigation, but I do not know exactly what that was about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember if the case had to do with suing lawyers for their role in savings and loan—the failure of a savings and loan?

Ms. BLACK. I'm sorry, sir, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Finally, I would like to turn to one other thing. Mr. Ben-Veniste had raised the issue of people at the law firm having done work claiming that they didn't have any work or weren't associated with any of these transactions, and one of the transactions we've heard a lot about is that portion of IDC which has to do with the mobile home development, Castle Grande Estates. I believe we may even have had some testimony from Mr. Thrash at page 279 of his hearing testimony that he had no involvement in any of these transactions like Castle Grande Estates.

I would like to put up for you, so you can maybe help us a little bit, two documents. First of all, there's a Plaintiff's Exhibit 9, also marked as SW1-028, which is a memo from Jim McDougal to Seth Ward dated October 7, 1985, which is at the early part of this initial IDC transaction. It says in the second—

The CHAIRMAN. Can we wait?

Ms. BLACK. It isn't up yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's get the witness a copy. Can we get it up on the Elmo, if you have it, please.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'll read it: "Apparently there is some opposition from existing land owners at 145th Street to the placement of mobile homes on our property." And this relates, of course, to Castle Grande Estates, which is the mobile home development, which everybody agrees was Castle Grande. "I think their opposition merely arises from ignorance as to the plans. However, we do need to check to see if there is an existing Bill of Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use."

I guess we conclude from this that a Bill of Assurance is something that relates to the issue of whether you can use the property for this mobile home development.

I would like to put up Mr. Thrash's billing record and see if we can compare this with his statement that he had no involvement in the transaction such as the Castle Grande Estates. I think you have a copy of this bill.

Ms. BLACK. Is that DKS 28980?

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff, will you wait until they get a copy of it up there.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you go down to the last entry, it's hard to read. I think it's October 7, 1985, and it's under T. Thrash. It says, "Meeting with Seth Ward. Review Bill of Assurances." Would you agree with me that this appears to indicate that, in fact, directly following upon Mr. McDougal's memo to Mr. Ward, that they had to take certain steps in terms of their ability to build on this mobile home development; that, in fact, Mr. Thrash met with Mr. Ward and reviewed the relevant documents. He seems to indicate that; right?

Ms. BLACK. There is a billing for "Meeting with Seth Ward. Review Bill of Assurances."

Mr. CHERTOFF. It seems there was involvement in this very specific transaction involving Castle Grande.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to say this to you, we're going to bring Mr. Thrash back in. He testified with some specificity in regard to his representation and then not representing them as it related to these matters, as well as when it came to the question of the closing. I found his testimony quite unusual as it related to he didn't know what took place. He would have you think that the title examiner did all the legal work.

One of the questions that I think Senator Faircloth raised, well, why were you there if you were there at this closing when this rather substantial transaction took place. I think that was the one that involved over $1 million when the initial IDC properties were transferred when Madison brought them so it just raises and I say this to you, it raises questions and I was not aware of this until you just put it up.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I was just curious, Ms. Black, how do you know in response to Mr. Chertoff's question that the meeting with Seth Ward, which is indicated on this billing sheet as October 7, took place as Mr. Chertoff put it, immediately after this memorandum from——

Ms. BLACK. That's the date on the Rose Law Firm bill.

Senator SARBANES. Right.

Ms. BLACK. On the invoice, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Yes.

Ms. BLACK. On October 7, 1985, Mr. Thrash billed for "Meeting with Seth Ward. Review Bill of Assurances."

Senator SARBANES. Right.

Ms. BLACK. And my response——

Senator SARBANES. The question to you was immediately after the memo from Mr. McDougal to Mr. Ward, that Mr. Thrash had a meeting with Seth Ward. How do you know that?

Ms. BLACK. I don't, nor did I testify to that.

Senator SARBANES. I think you did and your answer to that question was——

Ms. BLACK. I believe I said in response on October 7, 1985, Mr. Thrash billed for—and then I read the bill.

Senator SARBANES. That's not how the question was put to you. I mean, the meeting could have been before the memo, couldn't it?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, and I did not intend to testify as to when something occurred.

Senator SARBANES. You have to listen to these questions very carefully.

Ms. BLACK. I did, and I answered it very carefully, and the answer was that on October 7 the billing was made. I did not agree with the question necessarily as posed. I simply read back a line on a bill.

Senator SARBANES. And did you say that your inquiry was 40 volumes?

Ms. BLACK. There were 40 bound volumes, books—we call them books, divided into four volumes.

Senator SARBANES. Pardon.

Ms. BLACK. 40 of these.

Senator SARBANES. That was whose report?

Ms. BLACK. The RTC Inspector General's report. We looked not only just at Madison. We looked at all representation by the Rose Law Firm on behalf of the RTC, 21 or 22 institutions.

Senator SARBANES. And were those reports made available to Pillsbury?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. That was part of the work material they had in preparing their report; is that correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Did your report also have a lot of backup material to it?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. How voluminous was that?

Ms. BLACK. Most of the 40 bound books were exhibits. All but four, so 36 of the 40 were a compilation of documentary evidence.

Senator SARBANES. How long did it take to prepare that report?

Ms. BLACK. The investigation began in March 1994. The report was issued August 3, 1995. A substantial delay, about a 9-month delay occurred while we were litigating over the issue of access to a client list.

Senator SARBANES. How many people worked on that?

Ms. BLACK. I think about four investigators—roughly four to five at any one time were doing the basic investigatory work.

Senator SARBANES. Four or five investigators working full-time over an 18-month period?

Ms. BLACK. I don't believe they worked full-time on it, no, sir. They worked over a period of 18 months, but not full-time.

Senator SARBANES. Of course, Pillsbury Madison picked up from there. Their study, as I understand it, cost the RTC $3.8 million?

Ms. BLACK. I have heard that figure. I don't know.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Dodd.

Senator DODD. Just briefly, Mr. Sarbanes. I had raised the question earlier whether or not the settlement in the Frost case was a good settlement. I think both witnesses indicated they weren't necessarily disagreeing with that, but you weren't drawing a conclusion about it yourselves or you weren't aware whether or not it was considered a good settlement or not. Is that fair, or is there any change in that?

Ms. BLACK. We don't reach conclusions.

Senator DODD. Let me, if I can, Mr. Chairman, because I would like to insert in the record the memo from April Breslaw, the senior attorney to Mr. Jacobs and William Roelle, the Special Counsel to the RTC. They go in some length here, several pages analyzing the settlement and conclude—in fact, they recommend, the last line says: "I recommend that we settle this matter by accepting the carrier's $1,025,000 offer." They go on at some length, Mr. Chairman. They think the present value of our settlement was $1,050,000 received in 6 months is $1,014,000, but the present value is $1,050,000.

Then they say: "To date, we have incurred approximately $150,000 in legal fees, $40,000 in expert fees. Final preparation and trial of this matter is likely to add about $75,000 in legal fees and $10,000 expert fees to our cost. Accepting the carrier's offer would therefore enable us to save about $85,000." Therefore, they conclude that the settlement figure was a good figure.

I raised the point earlier I think that's a very important piece of information, and you may recall, Mr. Chairman, earlier that it was April Breslaw that testified that it was the RTC, not the Rose Law Firm, that made the decision to accept the settlement offer and this is the memo, in effect, which confirms that and lays out why it's a good proposal. Again, I think this is the one case they had with the RTC. It goes to the heart of the question of whether or not the taxpayers got a good deal as a result of their efforts, and this memo from the RTC certainly corroborates that conclusion. I think it's important at this particular point to include that in the record, so I would like to do that with your permission, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Sure. We're taking everything in the record.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to one matter so the record is very clear—

The CHAIRMAN. Can I inquire just for a moment, Mr. Ben-Veniste, and I'll add any time back in. After Mr. Ben-Veniste gets done with his questioning, do you think you need a 5-minute break, either of you?

Ms. BLACK. How much longer are we going?

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think we're going too much longer. You know, another half hour. OK? We'll keep going. Go ahead, Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Two matters, and then I'll see whatever time, if any, remains back.

With respect to the matter of whether the option agreement was considered in the Ward v. Madison trial, you were not suggesting, were you, that that option agreement was not an exhibit in the trial and discussed. We've already covered that.

Ms. BLACK. I was not—I'm sorry?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You would not suggest that the option agreement was ignored in the Ward v. Madison trial?

Ms. BLACK. No, it was at issue in the trial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Also, out of fairness, you were asked about Ms. Breslaw, what she might have done if she had additional facts, and you referred to her testimony and the question about what she would have done would have been on the issue of whether there was a conflict of interest that would have precluded the Rose Law Firm from the representation of the RTC in the Frost litigation. That we are on the same page here, this is what we are discussing?

Ms. BLACK. OK.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The question that was put to Ms. Breslaw on page 39 of her transcript by Mr. Chertoff, and I'll read it:

Now, the nature of this transaction as it was described in the Federal Home Loan Bank Board examination was that at the same time that the bank was purchasing part of the property, they were giving Ward the money to purchase the rest of the property and taking an option to get it back later. And all of that paperwork of that fictitious transaction which was described essentially as a fraud in the bank examination report, all that paperwork regarding that transaction was handled by the Rose Law Firm. Would you agree with me that had that been brought to your attention, it would have been absolutely ridiculous to hire the Rose Law Firm to represent the RTC in a case involving the independent auditors?

That was the question put to Ms. Breslaw. That question assumes some facts that you haven't seen; isn't that so?

Ms. BLACK. It was a fairly long question.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In fact, no one has seen facts that would support all of the paperwork of that fictitious transaction which was described as a fraud in the bank examination report, all of that paperwork regarding that transaction was handled by the Rose Law Firm. Well, that isn't the case, is it?

Ms. BLACK. I do not believe that all the paperwork—if what you're asking me is, was all the paperwork from that closing and the subsequent flips that were criticized handled by the Rose Law Firm, I have seen no evidence to indicate that was the case.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And nothing regarding the nonrecourse loan made to Mr. Ward was prepared or shown, much less shown to the Rose Law Firm according to the evidence that you have seen?

Ms. BLACK. The funding of the loan postdated the closing itself. I do not know whether Rose saw it or not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The question put to Ms. Breslaw contained a number of facts that are not supported by the evidence so far as you know it.

Ms. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The question about whether or not to hire a firm back in the 1980's given the needs that the RTC had to have quality representation in important matters was one which was dealt with on a case-by-case basis?

Ms. BLACK. Yes. RTC—under FIRREA, RTC was supposed to go out and hire private contractors to do most of its work. That includes litigating cases, handling assets, and it did so on a case-by-case basis. There would typically be an agreement entered into with a law firm, and then individual assignments would come under that agreement.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. As Senator Dodd has pointed out, the proof of the pudding is really in the eating here in terms of whether the value received by the Government, the RTC, and the efforts made by these private law firms is demonstrated in the results that they got. And here, in addition to what Senator Dodd has alluded to by the RTC contemporaneously reviewing the proposed settlement agreement, we also have the benefit of the separate and independent analysis that the Pillsbury firm made of the same issue. Have you seen their conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. In the Frost report?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There at page 14, Pillsbury's report on Frost, Pillsbury concluded:

It appears from the transcripts that counsel on all sides were competent and adequately aggressive in pursuing the interests of their respective clients. In particular, the Rose Law Firm did not appear to be less than aggressive, and it was reasonably effective in pursuing legal theories and asserting the interests of the RTC.

Do you have any reason to contradict that assertion?

Ms. BLACK. Sir, we have not done nor are we qualified to do a review of the PLS work. As Senator Dodd also commented, we have tried to avoid making conclusions all day long.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I'm not asking you to make a conclusion. I'm asking you whether you have any evidence that would refute that conclusion?

Ms. BLACK. I have not attempted to gather any such evidence.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to ask because there's been some question with respect to the time that the Rose Law Firm did work with respect to a matter put up on the Elmo, the October 7, 1985 letter to Seth Ward from Jim McDougal. I have to note that Seth Ward is working for Mr. McDougal. Go down to the middle of the second paragraph. It says, "however"—I just want to note this—it reads: "We do need to check to see if there is an existing Bill of Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use."

There's a question, we've got to check to see if there's an existing Bill of Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use. Ms. Black, you see that letter?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator DODD. What's a Bill of Assurance?

The CHAIRMAN. Apparently it relates to land use, whether or not it's a permitted use of the property.

Senator DODD. Is that a uniquely Arkansas thing?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an appropriate description of whether the zoning comports. It would be the same thing.

Senator DODD. Do you need to file one of these things?

The CHAIRMAN. You would have to have your attorney or title assurance or whoever does the appropriate review of those matters.

Obviously, in land use cases, generally, it is the attorney, generally. Many times attorneys will call in real estate specialists who will check the records, check the zoning maps, go down to either the town hall or the city hall to ascertain if that use is appropriate. In this case, if it's a planned use of a trailer park or trailer homes, whether or not that property would be in accordance. The use would be in accordance with what the zoning is.

Senator DODD. That is, the seller would—the person who owned the property would—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the person who owned it or was intending to develop it. Obviously, if someone were going to develop it, they would want to know whether or not that was an assured use, and I think that's the terminology—

Senator DODD. They get that from a planning or zoning board?

The CHAIRMAN. Your attorney would ascertain again from the particular municipality who had jurisdiction over the zoning. In some cases, that would be the local town or the village or the city. There might be State requirements, but certainly your attorney in many cases would do that or he would bring in his land use expert and call.

I point out, the only reason I do this is because we get to splitting hairs. I don't mean to be splitting hairs here, but on October 7, obviously, Jim McDougal said we have to take a look and see whether or not this would be a use that would be permitted. In this case, he said, "Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use." He wants to know whether or not the planned use is one that is appropriate with the property.

On the same day, October 7, 1985, we see Mr. Thrash's Rose Law Firm billing, "Meeting with Seth Ward. Review Bill of Assurances." Look, I don't care what side is attempting to make the point. It is rather obvious from this that Mr. McDougal raised the question to Mr. Ward, and he said in this letter we have to find out whether this use is prohibited or is permitted before we go forward.

On the same day, thereafter, and I say thereafter because it's a natural consequence. One would assume that either Seth Ward checked before and said by the way, I did check and it happens to be they were in conversation on it or thereafter more logically, but not necessarily, but certainly on the same day, you have a billing record, totally independent, obtained from a different source, from the Rose Law Firm billing records and they say, "Meeting with Seth Ward. Review Bill of Assurances." I think a logical conclusion is they called upon Seth Ward to make this ascertainment.

Senator DODD. It could have gone the other way. They could have had the meeting and said this is an issue and then you had Ward saying to McDougal we have to check on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is, contrary to what has been indicated, Mr. Thrash did do work, was called upon and indeed, I think it's rather logical that the questions raised by the boss to the employer, Seth Ward, does ascertain this. The billing records indicate he does have a consultation with the Rose Law Firm. It's just logical, and if we're going to begin after this kind of thing, and I think sometimes we do the same thing on both sides, but it's just a logical conclusion, and I just had a comment because it was raised, and I thought I would comment. I don't see anything unusual. I think it would be rather unusual if the boss said hey, look, there's a question about the use of this property, and you better see if there's an existing Bill of Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use. I guess the Bill of Assurance, which would stop them from using it as planned, he went and did it. He had a conference on the same day.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, you indicated that you were going to call Mr. Thrash back to sort of ascertain this, as I understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. There are a number of points. Not only this—

Senator SARBANES. I just note that both of these documents were in the Committee's custody before Mr. Thrash came in, and he could have been asked about this when he was here.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, if we were not aware of this, and go over the depositions, some of this information as it relates to testimony that has been given or is given, comes up. If we don't have to call them, we can attempt to avoid that. But Senator Murkowski asked some questions that Mr. Thrash answered in one way, maybe as an explanation that relates to that, I don't know, but it certainly is a possibility.

Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Black, if we could put up Pat Black Exhibit Number 3, which is your chronology, just conclude it by looking at the last entry.

The CHAIRMAN. She'll never make a chronology again.

Ms. BLACK. This is the second time I have done it. I can't believe I did it twice.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Just the very last entry; it indicates that on September 30, 1993, Mr. Ward and the RTC settled the Ward/Madison litigation; that Mr. Ward paid $325,000 and then he received a full release for possible claims that might be against him for his involvement in these transactions; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. At the end of the day, how much money did Mr. Ward walk away from this with?

Ms. BLACK. At that stage, Mr. Ward had the $370,000 in note proceeds. Mr. Ward also drew down the full escrowed amount that had been posted while they were litigating the case; that's roughly $770,000. Then he paid back $325,000 so—

Mr. GIUFFRA. I believe in your deposition you testified that he walked in the end with $455,000?

Ms. BLACK. That should be about right.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Plus he had the release from liability?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. If we could put up on the Elmo Mrs. Clinton's supplemental interrogatory number 64—I believe you have a copy of it, you have seen this interrogatory; correct?

Ms. BLACK. It isn't there yet.

Mr. GIUFFRA. But you've seen it previously?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I'll read it into the record—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, wait a second.

Ms. BLACK. Interrogatory 64?

Mr. GIUFFRA. Yes. And this interrogatory asks Mrs. Clinton to describe the work that she performed with respect to Madison Guaranty matter number 5, which was the IDC matter. Mrs. Clinton's sworn interrogatory states:

I believe that the work I did on this matter consisted primarily of supervising research concerning legal issues, such as whether it would be legal to open a tasting room for a proposed brewery, in light of the fact that the land was, arguably, located in what had once been a "dry" township, and other questions relating to the provision of water and sewer service by a utility which was located within the IDC PROPERTY.

If we could put back on the Elmo your chronology. Mr. Benveniste indicated that according to Mr. Donovan, that Mrs. Clinton had done most of the work with him supervising legal research, and that's what Mrs. Clinton says in the sworn interrogatory. I just want to focus on the three entries that you focused on previously. First of all, in February 28, 1986, that was the date when the Castle Sewer and Water transaction closed and when the IDC loan was gone except for the Holman Acres portion, and the $1.15 million note by Ward was paid.

If we could put up on the Elmo 29016. That's the indication that on February 28, 1986, Mrs. Clinton had a conversation of just under an hour with Mr. Ward, and there doesn't appear to be any entries by Mr. Donovan in or around that time period. That's February 28, 1986.

If I could turn to the next date that you identified, which would be the April 7, 1986 time frame, that's when Madison Financial issued a note to Mr. Ward for $300,000. On that date we had a call for 12 minutes, and we can put that up. It's 20024. That's a call between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Don Denton. You identified him as a Madison loan officer, and he was involved in giving loans to Mr. Ward. I would observe that again we don't see any entry involving Mr. Donovan on April 7, 1986.

The last billing entry that we have discussed would be the option, and if we could put that up on the Elmo. Again we have Mrs. Clinton billing 2 hours on May 1, 1986, which is the date of the option, telephone conference with Seth Ward regarding option, telephone conference with Mike Schaufler, and then prepare option. Again, no time being billed by Mr. Donovan.

Mr. SWITZER. What was the number of the last one?

Mr. GIUFFRA. 29026.

Ms. BLACK. I have looked at all of those billing memoranda. On the first one dealing with time in February and March, while there is no time billed by Mr. Donovan on the 28th, he does bill for February 16 and March 4.

As to the April billing memorandum, though, the only entry there is by Mrs. Clinton, and I don't think there were any entries by Mr. Donovan on the third one, either.

Mr. GIUFFRA. It doesn't appear that Mr. Donovan was involved with Mrs. Clinton with regard to these communications with Mr. Ward that occurred on the dates that appear to be critical with regard to the transactions involving Mr. Ward?

Ms. BLACK. Well, on the last two he does not bill any time during that time period. On the first one, the February 28, he does not bill time on that day, but he does bill both prior to and subsequent to that day within a roughly 1-month period.

Mr. GIUFFRA. The Committee has identified approximately 29 hours of work that Mrs. Clinton did on the IDC matter; and I believe Mr. Donovan when he testified said he did approximately 22 hours of work, 7 hours less than Mrs. Clinton did on the IDC matter. Mr. Donovan testified that he believed that Mrs. Clinton had worked with Mr. Ward on the legal research that Mr. Donovan was doing, was acting as the point person. Do you think it would make sense that the partner would be doing 29 hours of work communicating with the client—

The CHAIRMAN. No. I'm not going to let you ask her that.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You are aware of Mr. Ward's sworn statement of February 29, 1994. Have you seen that? It is an interview with a special agent of the RTC Office of Inspector General.

Ms. BLACK. I'm sure I have if it's one of our interviews.

Mr. GIUFFRA. I will read that into the record; Mr. Ward's sworn statement:

I do not recall speaking to any lawyers concerning water issues in that project and certainly had no discussions with anyone concerning delivery of water services off site. I have no knowledge of ever discussing at all any issues concerning a brewery, liquor licenses or a question of whether a particular jurisdiction was wet or dry.

You are familiar with that testimony?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You would, at least, in preparing your conflicts analysis, you would flag the apparent discrepancy between Mr. Donovan's testimony and Mr. Ward's testimony?

Ms. BLACK. We would note both facts and we would have noted the bills, what the bills said if we had had those.

The CHAIRMAN. If you had the bills, you obviously would have noted the bills as well as the contradictory testimony from both?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. One more and then that's it.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Your report was issued on August 3, 1995; correct?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. We have heard testimony from Ms. Huber that she first found the billing records that have become so important here today, sometime in the first week or two of August 1995.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Let's put up The Washington Post story of August 5, 1995. Your report was not made public; am I correct?

Ms. BLACK. We made a redacted version of the Executive Summary—which was the first of four or five books—public 2 days after our report was issued.

Mr. GIUFFRA. As far as you know, this article of August 5, 1995, would be the first public reporting of your report?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that is correct. It might have been late in the day on the 4th rather than the morning of the 5th that we released it. I think it was.

Mr. GIUFFRA. This news article states:

It was not previously known that the Little Rock firm in which the First Lady, Hillary Rodham Clinton, was then a partner worked on legal issues surrounding the 1,100 acre industrial and trailer park development.

If we could turn to the second page, the very conclusion of Ms. Schmidt's article, she says:

Hillary Clinton billed Madison $4,172 for work on Castle Grande and the stock proposal according to documents released yesterday.

Do you see that?

Ms. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That was based on a billing recap that was provided to you by the Rose Law Firm?

Ms. BLACK. I believe that is where she is drawing that material.

Mr. GIUFFRA. That recap did not set forth what particular services Mrs. Clinton had provided in connection with either the Castle Grande matter or the preferred stock issue?

Ms. BLACK. It in fact—in recapping, the matter number 1, which was a stock offering, and matter number 5 were combined.

Mr. GIUFFRA. You could not tell what Mrs. Clinton did on particular dates or the specific services that she rendered for Madison?

Ms. BLACK. No, sir.

Mr. GIUFFRA. Am I correct, if someone had the billing records which we now have, you would be able to ascertain what exactly Mrs. Clinton had done for the $4,172 worth of work that she had billed for on Castle Grande in the stock proposal?

Ms. BLACK. You would be able to see with somewhat greater precision. In the billing entries, there are many things such as a conference with Seth Ward, which the subject of the conference is not identified. You could clarify substantially, but——

Mr. GIUFFRA. The billing records would allow you to clarify to some extent what she did to justify the money reflected on the billing recap?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. There's a vote. We could vote and come back.

The CHAIRMAN. We will adjourn. I think we should be able to be back in—

Senator SARBANES. Maybe we can finish.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's see if we can.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I don't know the answer to this question, but I notice that there is a matter number 6.

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What is that matter number 6?

Ms. BLACK. That involves the Babcock loan, a workout of a delinquent loan that involved Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Don Denton was an employee of Madison?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir. He was the loan officer, I believe, on the Babcock loan as well.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He was the loan officer on the Babcock loan, so that if you look at matter number 6, you find that Mrs. Clinton and others at the firm are dealing with Don Denton in connection with that matter; that would be logical?

Ms. BLACK. The first time in which I believe there is billing on the Babcock loan is April 9. The first time it is attributed to matter number 6.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The only conference that you related to us with Denton was what date that was billed to matter number 5?

Ms. BLACK. The conference billed to matter 5 was on April 7.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that was 2 days before matter number 6 began?

Ms. BLACK. Yes, sir, as far as we know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you think it might be possible that the conversation with Mr. Denton was really a matter number 6 matter that was put down as matter number 5? You can't tell, can you?

Ms. BLACK. Well, it was billed to matter number 5.

That's all I know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. But in terms of matter number 6, the billing on matter number 6 starts just at about that time?

Ms. BLACK. It starts 2 days later.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would you agree that there is the possibility that in connection with this conversation with Mr. Denton, that that possibly had to do with matter number 6?

Ms. BLACK. All I can tell you is that there was a conversation billed to matter number 5 between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Denton. I do not know the substance of that conversation.

Senator SARBANES. Matter number 6, there were repeated billings for conversations or correspondence between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Denton; is that not correct?

Ms. BLACK. I would have to look back at the memorandum, but I can recall two off the top of my head.

Senator SARBANES. Well, I think there are more than two.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you find that there were any other conversations between Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Denton that are attributed to matter number 5?

Ms. BLACK. I believe there was one.

Senator SARBANES. Actually, I have eight contacts, billings on matter number 6 involving Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Denton in a 2½ month period here.

Ms. BLACK. I haven't counted them up. That is probably correct.

The CHAIRMAN. We're going to adjourn, but let me just say that I have been advised that the Bill of Assurance is a legal covenant restricting the use of land, and so therefore that would fit in perfectly. He wanted to find out if there was, "he" being Jim McDougal, a covenant that would restrict the use of the property which would prohibit our planned use. That's what he said. So that's a Bill of Assurance, a legal covenant restricting—

Senator DODD. That would have to be filed on the land records I presume.

The CHAIRMAN. That's right.

Senator DODD. You check the land file, send an internist up to check that?

The CHAIRMAN. You would have your counsel do that, and obviously you call your lawyer and low man on the totem pole would go to check the records.

Senator DODD. That's what I used to do, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, could we include the full response of Mrs. Clinton to interrogatory number 64 about which Mr. Giuffra was asking?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator SARBANES. And I might note that in that response she did make reference to the tasting room for proposed brewery, the wet/dry township issue, provision of water and sewer service by a utility within the IDC property, and limited involvement with an option agreement between Mr. Ward and Madison Financial. So all of the subject matters touched upon were referenced in her response to the interrogatory, and I just wanted to put the entire answer in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The interrogatory has already been in the record, but it will be placed in at the appropriate place. We'll ask them to put it in the record. I want to thank Ms. Black and Mr. Switzer for their testimony and for their candor, and I believe for being outstanding witnesses and letting us know what they knew and how they came to know it. You have gone to great lengths and we are deeply appreciative. We stand in recess until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 4:25 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10 a.m., on Wednesday, February 7, 1996.]

RE: Application by Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association ("Madison") to engage in brokerage activities.

Greetings:

This letter is to respond to a memorandum dated May 22, 1985, from Mr. Charles Handley relating to the above-referenced application (the "Application"). Numerical references below relate to specifically numbered items in Mr. Handley's memorandum.

1. The Application has been amended for submission to the Arkansas Savings and Loan Supervisor, pursuant to Rule V(B) of the Rules and Regulations of the Arkansas Savings and Loan Association Board.
2. The name and address of the wholly-owned service corporation which owns all the stock of the broker-dealer is Madison Financial Corporation, 16th and Main Streets, Little Rock, Arkansas, 72206.
3. The broker-dealer is an existing entity corporation.
4. Attached as Exhibit "A" hereto are copies of charter documents, broker-dealer registration documents, and current financial statements of the broker-dealer.
5. Inapplicable.
6. Attached hereto as Exhibit "B" are copies of an unaudited balance sheet of Madison Financial Corporation, as of May 30, 1985. As is evident from this enclosure, the debt limitations on debt to unrelated parties, set forth in Rule V(B)(3)(ii), have not been exceeded.

0000084

500N149

7. Attached as Exhibit "C" are copies of Madison Guaranty financial statements as of March 31, 1985. As is evident from such enclosures, the total outstanding investment by Madison Guaranty in the capital stock, obligations or other securities of all service corporations, subsidiaries and joint ventures thereof does not exceed the limitation set forth in Rule V(C).

8. Attached as Exhibit "D" are copies of the Quarterly minimum net-worth calculation as of March 31, 1985. In order to meet the newly-imposed minimum net-worth requirements, Madison Guaranty proposes (i) to issue a new class of preferred stock (the issuance of which has been recently approved by the Arkansas Savings & Loan Supervisor), (ii) to engage in various property syndication projects to raise additional revenues, (iii) to continue its efforts to reduce operating expenses and to increase deposits, and (iv) to engage in other activities which management of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan determine to be prudent in light of new net-worth requirements.

Please note that these enclosures indicate that deficiencies in Applicant's net-worth have gradually been reduced. The Applicant anticipates that no deficiency will exist in the near future.

9. An executed consent to examine agreement on behalf of Madison Financial Corporation has previously been filed with the Arkansas Securities Commission..

10. The actual name of the broker-dealer shall be Madison Investment Corporation.

11. The address of Madison is P.O. Box 537, Augusta, Arkansas, 72006.

With this response, Madison hereby amends the Application. Such Amended Application is attached immediately hereto. Given the immediacy of the need to implement steps to infuse capital into the Association, your prompt consideration of this Application will be appreciated. Should you have questions or additional comments, please advise me.

Very truly yours,

Re: Conflicts of interest by the Rose Law Firm in connection with RTC representation

Dear Mr. Neal:

I am writing to refer to the Committee on Professional Conduct certain allegations contained in the enclosed Report of Investigation ("Report") prepared by the RTC Office of Inspector General ("OIG") regarding alleged conflicts of interest by the Rose Law Firm in its representation of the RTC as outside legal counsel.

The Report was prepared pursuant to a request on March 2, 1994, from the Deputy and Acting Chief Executive Officer, John E. Ryan, after a report was issued on February 8, 1994 by the RTC Office of Contractor Oversight and Surveillance (OCOS). OCOS addressed certain conflict of interest allegations reported in the press surrounding the Rose Law Firm's representation of the FDIC and the RTC in a lawsuit against the former independent accountants for Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association. Mr. Ryan's request fulfilled a commitment by then RTC Interim Chief Executive Officers Roger C. Altman at a February 24, 1994, hearing of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs to ask the OIG to review the OCOS report.

We believe that the Report provides a sufficient indication of the existence of possible undisclosed conflicts of interest by the Rose Law Firm such that it raises concerns about the Rose Law Firm's compliance with the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct. We therefore are referring this matter to your Committee for your further consideration and any action you deem appropriate. Accompanying this letter are the following documents: (i) the Report consisting of 35 volumes (together with all exhibits thereto), (ii) the Rose Law Firm Response to the Report, (iii) the OIG Rebuttal to the Rose Law Firm Response, and (iv) the Joint FDIC/RTC Outside Counsel Conflicts

Committee decision memorandum relating to the Report. We are also enclosing a copy of the Report on the Rose Law Firm's Conduct of the Accounting Malpractice Litigation Pertaining to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan dated December 28, 1995 prepared for the RTC by outside counsel Pillsbury Madison & Sutro L.L.P.

Given the confidential nature of the information contained in the Report and related documents, these documents should not be released publicly or to other agencies, without the permission of the RTC or its successor agency, the FDIC. I ask that you take appropriate steps to protect the confidentiality of the Report and related documents and that you contact me if you receive any requests from sources outside your Committee for any information contained in the Report.

Attached is a copy of W. Neil Eggleston's 28 February 1994 memorandum to me regarding certain issues involving the RTC and the Rose Law Firm ("Rose"). Attached to that memo are copies of the FDIC report, dated 17 February 1994, concerning possible conflicts of interest regarding Rose's representation of the FDIC against Madison Guaranty, and the RTC's 8 February 1994 report concerning the same subject.

It is my understanding that shortly after Roger Altman met with Bernie Nussbaum, me and others concerning the RTC statute of limitations, he received an opinion from an ethics officer of the Treasury Department that he, as the acting head of RTC, did not have to recuse himself from matters involving Rose/Madison Guaranty. I will confirm this situation.

Please let me know if you want to discuss the attached.

MEMORANDUM FOR HAROLD ICKES
DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFFFROM: W. NEIL EGGLESTON
ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

RE: WHITEWATER--FDIC AND RTC ROSE LAW FIRM ISSUES

The recent release of the FDIC and RTC reports addressing the possible conflict of interest of the Rose law firm in its representation of Madison Guaranty raises a number of issues.

What did the FDIC and RTC conclude, and why does it ~~seem~~ that their conclusions are inconsistent?

1. The FDIC Report.

The FDIC report was released on or about February 17, 1994. It was drafted by the Legal Division of the FDIC, and presented to FDIC Acting Chairman Hove, a Republican.

Frost & Co. was Madison Guaranty's accounting firm in 1984 and 1985. In that capacity, it prepared certain audited financial reports for Madison. The Rose firm used the 1985 audited financial statement in connection with its representation of Madison Guaranty before the Arkansas Securities Commission.

Madison Guaranty sued Frost & Co. in 1988 for the negligent preparation of financial statements. At the time, Madison was represented by the Gerrish firm. McDougal had been forced out of the management of Madison in the summer of 1986. When the FDIC took over Madison Guaranty in February 1989, it determined that the Gerrish firm had a conflict. In March 1989, the FDIC therefore replaced the Gerrish firm with the Rose law firm.

The FDIC report reviewed the time period in which the FDIC was responsible for the conservatorship of Madison Guaranty, from February 28, 1989 to August 9, 1989 (when the RTC was created and took over the conservatorship of failed savings and loans). The FDIC was thus the entity that retained the Rose law firm to pursue the Frost & Co. litigation. The FDIC report reviewed relevant FDIC and RTC documents and interviewed participants, including FDIC and RTC employees and Rose law firm lawyers.

On the factual issue of whether the Rose law firm had disclosed to the FDIC its prior representation of Madison Guaranty, the FDIC concluded that the record was unclear. The report nevertheless concluded that no conflict existed between the Rose law firm's prior representation of Madison Guaranty and its representation of the FDIC in the Frost & Co. litigation. The report concluded that the firm's representation in 1985 was not "directly adverse" to the representation in 1989.

The FDIC based its conclusion on two grounds. First, it stated that there was no evidence that the firm had any involvement in the creation of the Frost & Co. audit report that became the subject of the 1989 litigation. Second, it stated "we have found no evidence that the Firm had a close relationship with the S&L which might call into question its independence." This was one of the sentences that Senator D'Amato attacked so bitterly at the Senate Banking Committee hearing.

On the issue of whether Mr. Hubbell had disclosed his relationship with his father-in-law, Seth Ward, who was then in litigation with Madison Guaranty, the FDIC stated that it was uncertain whether Mr. Hubbell had disclosed the relationship before the FDIC retained the Rose law firm. Nevertheless, the relationship was plainly known to the FDIC within three months of retention. Mr. Hubbell agreed to the creation of an internal firm "firewall" to guard against him receiving information that might be of use to his father-in-law. At the hearing, Senator Faircloth ridiculed what he called an "imaginary firewall" through which he claimed light and heat could easily penetrate.

At the hearing, Chairman Hove testified that in 1989, FDIC standards required an actual conflict before the agency would bar a retention. Today, the FDIC's standards are much tougher and would bar a retention on the showing of an "appearance of a conflict of interest." Chairman Hove testified that under today's standards, the Rose law firm facts would present an appearance of a conflict.

Chairman Hove agreed to have the FDIC Inspector General ("IG") look into the conflict issue. It was somewhat unclear at the hearing whether the IG would look only at the process by which the FDIC arrived at its decision or would review the substantive issue. It was also unclear whether the IG would apply the actual conflict standard or the appearance of a conflict standard in its review. We should assume, however, that the IG will adopt the broadest possible interpretation of its mandate.

2. The RTC Report.

The RTC report was released on February 25, 1994 by Senator D'Amato.

The RTC report differs in two major respects from the FDIC report. First, the RTC did not interview any Rose law firm attorneys. The RTC reviewed RTC records and interviewed RTC employees only. Second, the report is factual only. The report reached no conclusion on whether the Rose law firm had a conflict. As the report describes its scope, "This investigation focused only on whether or not Rose disclosed its previous representation of Madison to the FDIC and RTC."

The RTC concluded that Rose did not disclose either its prior representation of Madison Guaranty or Mr. Hubbell's relationship with Mr. Ward.<sup>1</sup> The report acknowledges, however, that within a few months of the retention, the supervisory FDIC attorney, Ms. Breslaw, was made aware of Mr. Hubbell's relationship with Mr. Ward. Ms. Breslaw determined that no conflict existed.

The RTC did not hire the Rose law firm; rather, the retention by the FDIC took place before the RTC was even in existence. Further, the RTC acknowledges in its report that it had no outside conflicts committee, nor regulations, guidance or policy on conflicts until after 1989.

The conclusion of the RTC report is that the matter was referred to the Office of the General Counsel (Ellen Kulka) for "advice" and that it seems appropriate.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> An ultimate finding that Rose had not disclosed either the prior representation of Madison Guaranty or the Ward relationship would be a finding that Mr. Hubbell was not truthful in his recollection. Mr. Hubbell told the FDIC when it was preparing its report that he advised FDIC attorneys about the prior Rose representation of Madison Guaranty and believes that he also advised the government attorneys about his relationship with Mr. Ward. Mr. Hubbell was not interviewed by the RTC attorneys during the preparation of their report.

<sup>2</sup> As noted above, the RTC report only addressed the factual issues of representation and disclosure. The report did not attempt to apply the facts to any applicable conflicts rules or regulations. It is not clear what the RTC General Counsel, Ms. Kulka, will do with the report. The RTC has an Outside Counsels' (continued...)

At the hearing, Mr. Altman agreed to refer the RTC report to the RTC IG for review.

What sanction could be imposed if the FDIC/RTC finds that the Rose law firm had a conflict of interest or an appearance of a conflict in handling the Frost & Co. litigation in 1989 and failed to disclose that conflict?

As noted above, it is not clear whether the FDIC or the RTC will review this matter under an actual conflict standard or an appearance of a conflict standard. It would seem that to impose any sanction, the IG would have to decide that the Rose firm violated a duty that was in existence at the time, not a duty that later became more strict.

The most severe sanction that would likely flow from a finding that the Rose law firm had a duty to disclose its prior representation of Madison Guaranty and its relationship with Mr. Ward and that it breached that duty would be that the Rose law firm would be permanently barred from any further work for the RTC or the FDIC (and possibly other banking regulators). Lesser sanctions imposed by the regulatory agencies might also be possible, such as a temporary bar.

Under the facts as we now understand them, it would seem quite unlikely that the RTC could bring a civil action against the Rose firm or any of its attorneys for failure to disclose the conflict. To prevail, the RTC would have to show fraud or intentional misconduct that caused substantial loss to the institution or unjust enrichment to the Rose firm. The RTC could only really show fraud or intentional misconduct if it could demonstrate that the Rose law firm "threw" the Frost & Co. litigation because of its prior representation of Madison Guaranty.

Criminal liability for the Rose firm would seem even more remote. To prevail, the Special Counsel would have to show that Rose acted with intent to defraud the savings and loan or wilfully made false statements to the FDIC/RTC through its failure to disclose the conflict.

What civil matters is the RTC investigating, who can it sue, and why didn't we hear anything about a civil investigation until late 1993?

<sup>1</sup>(...continued)

Conflicts Committee to which she could refer the report. She could presumably also refer the report with a recommendation to the RTC Acting CEO Jack Ryan for action.

The RTC is investigating whether it has a civil tort action against anyone who caused a loss to Madison Guaranty. This would include insiders such as James and Susan McDougal and members of the Board of Madison. It also includes professionals who provided service to Madison Guaranty, such as the Rose law firm, other law firms, and accounting firms. The Frost & Co. suit is an example of a suit against a professional service provider that caused loss to Madison Guaranty through a negligent audit. The RTC could also sue outsiders, including the President and Mrs. Clinton, if the RTC found that the outsiders worked with insiders illegally to divert assets of the savings and loan. For example, if the RTC believed that the Clinton campaign knowingly received diverted Madison assets at the April 1985 fundraiser or that the Clintons knowingly received other diverted Madison Guaranty assets through Whitewater, it could bring suit. The RTC commonly sues the recipient of a loan where it has information that the borrower knew that the loan was improper.

Under the legislation creating the RTC in 1989, the RTC as conservator of a failed savings and loan had to bring a tort claim within three years of the time the RTC (or FDIC as predecessor) took over the institution. The FDIC took over Madison Guaranty on February 28, 1989. Thus, all torts had to be brought by February 28, 1992. That day passed during the campaign.

The Resolution Trust Corporation Completion Act, signed by the President on December 17, 1993, revived the possibility of a civil action. Under that legislation, a narrow class of torts--~~those involving intentional misconduct~~ and that either caused substantial loss to the institution or unjust enrichment to the defendant--were revived. The statute extended the limitations period such that this category of tort could be brought within five years of the time the RTC took over the institution.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, the statute specifically provided that the five year period would apply even if the three year limitations period had already run.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> I am unaware of any civil suits brought by the RTC prior to February 28, 1992, but I would not be surprised if it had sued McDougal and other insiders. McDougal was indicted in 1989 for bank fraud involving Madison Guaranty, and was acquitted in 1990. It would be fairly common for the RTC to pursue a civil action even after an acquittal.

<sup>5</sup> The statute of limitations for crimes involving financial institutions is 10 years from the date the illegal conduct occurred, regardless of when the RTC took over the institution.

As a result, the RTC would not have been looking into a possible civil suit involving Madison Guaranty after February 1992 and before the passage of the statute last fall. In late 1993 and early 1994, Senator D'Amato and Rep. Leach recognized that the legislation had revived the possibility of an RTC lawsuit in the Madison matter. Both took to the floor of their respective chambers, aggressively urging the RTC to commence an action before the statute expired. In early 1994, the RTC--then faced with a statute of limitations that would run by the end of February--hired the San Francisco-based law firm of Pillsbury, Madison and Sutro to assist it in determining whether to bring any civil actions arising out of Madison.<sup>6</sup>

In February 1994, the statute of limitations was extended once again, through the life of the RTC, which is expected to expire on December 31, 1995.

Now that Mr. Altman as Acting CEO of the RTC has recused himself from further involvement in Madison Guaranty matters, who at the RTC will be the decision-maker on whether to bring a civil action arising out of the failure of Madison Guaranty?

Following his testimony before the Senate Banking Committee on Thursday, Mr. Altman recused himself as Acting CEO of the RTC from any further involvement in Madison Guaranty/Whitewater matters.

---

<sup>6</sup> The partner at Pillsbury assigned to this matter is Jay Stephens, a Republican who was a member of the Reagan and Bush administrations. From 1981 to April 1986, Mr. Stephens was a political appointee at the Justice Department. By 1986, he had become Associate Deputy Attorney General. From April 1986 through March 1988, he was Deputy Counsel to the President. In that capacity, he had a role in the Iran/Contra Affair. After published reports that Oliver North had shredded documents, Mr. Stephens called Fawn Hall. When she denied (falsely) that any improper shredding had taken place, Mr. Stephens accepted her denial, and the White House issued a statement denying the shredding.

In March 1988, President Reagan appointed Mr. Stephens to be U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia. When President Clinton sought the removal of all U.S. Attorneys in April 1993, Mr. Stephens called a press conference at which he suggested that the President was acting to frustrate the investigation of Rep. Rostenkowski. At the time, Senator Dole called for hearings into what he termed the "March massacre." Until January 1994, Mr. Stephens had been considering running for the Senate.

The top official at the RTC who will be making these decisions on Madison Guaranty is Jack Ryan. Mr. Ryan was formerly with the Office of Thrift Supervision. He is a career official. His principal advisor will be Ellen Kulka, now General Counsel of the RTC, who also came from OTS. Ms. Kulka is also a career official.

We intend to nominate a person for the position of CEO of the RTC within the next few weeks. We can anticipate that any person the President nominates will be pressured to recuse from any Madison-related matters. If the person refuses to recuse and is confirmed, then that person will become the decision maker. If that person is forced to recuse to achieve confirmation, then Jack Ryan would remain the decision-maker on Madison matters at the RTC.

According to my calculations the commission on the sale of the two acres which was closed Friday was $14,500. Please advise me how you wish this check made out and I will order it paid today. Also, I need to know the name of the buyer.

Apparently there is some opposition from existing land owners at 145th Street to the placement of mobile homes on our property. I think their opposition merely arises from ignorance as to the plans. However, we do need to check to see if there is an existing Bill of Assurance on the property which would prohibit our planned use. Further, it is my understanding that the Planning Commission regulations require that adjoining land owners be given notice by registered mail of a planned subdivision. You should ask our engineer about this procedure.

We need to proceed with the staking of lots. This will give us inventory to be selling on while Allison is getting his units moved in. We need to find out from Allison how many units he is moving and a description of the units. I understood at our last meeting that he would be sending some double wides and some single wides and that we would place them in different areas. We need to arrange to get the man who will be in charge of delivering the units and contact with Mr. Randolph to coordinate site preparation.

Re: 7236 Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan
Augusta, Ark. - In Receivership

Request for Authorization to Accept Settlement Offer

RECOMMENDATION

This memorandum requests authority to settle a pending accounting malpractice case by accepting the $1,025,000 offered by CNA and Forster ("C&F"), the carrier which provided defendant Frost and Company ("Frost") with liability coverage.

C&F has not given a specific date on which its offer expires. However, our case is scheduled for trial on March 25, 1991. If authorization to accept the carrier's offer is granted by March 15, 1991, we will save the expense of the final two weeks of trial preparation. We estimate this amount to be approximately $50,000.

1 Past experience indicates that C&F displays more serious interest in settlement as a trial date approaches. In this case, we do not believe that C&F is aware that there is a real chance that our trial will be rescheduled for next Fall. If C&F becomes aware of this possibility, it may rescind the offer, invest the settlement funds, and resume bargaining with us in eight to ten months. Avoiding this contingency is another reason to evaluate the outstanding offer quickly.

Elements of the Claim

In order to prevail, we must prove the existence of:

- (1) an audit failure
- (2) which caused
- (3) loss.

1. Audit Failure

Frost audited the Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan ("Madison") financial statements for 1984 and 1985. In each instance, an unqualified opinion, i.e., one which concluded that the statements fairly reflected the S&L's financial condition, was issued. However, the FHLBB's 1986 examination found significant deficiencies in Madison's accounting treatment of real estate development projects, subsidiary investment, and reserve for loan losses. The adjustments imposed as a result of this examination rendered Madison insolvent.

Madison subsequently retained Peat, Marwick, Main and Company to re-audit the statements first evaluated by Frost. Peat, Marwick reached two conclusions: first, that Madison's internal controls were so poor that the S&L's financial statements were virtually incapable of audit and second, that there was serious question about Madison's ability to continue as a going concern. Because these were very different conclusions than those reached in the initial audits, Madison sued Frost for malpractice.

We inherited the case when Madison was placed in conservatorship in 1989.<sup>2</sup> Investigation by in-house CPA Lee Soranson of NCCC supports the conclusion that audit failure occurred. Most significant, Frost did not calculate Madison's loan loss reserve by performing detailed review of specific loans. Instead, Frost simply allotted one per cent of the outstanding balance of each relevant category of loans to the reserve. Further, Frost failed to test the adequacy of any of the appraisals in Madison's files and entirely based its past-due loan testwork on information provided by Madison's management. No attempt to verify this information through appraisal or financial statement data was made.

Our independent expert has testified that Frost should have evaluated the risk of loss in Madison's portfolio by classifying loans as bank examiners do. He's further testified that Laventhol and Horwath ("L&H"), the firm with which he was a partner until its recent bankruptcy, employed this approach to

AB0399/

Memorandum to Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Roelle

bank and S&L audits as a standard practice.

Unfortunately, our expert has only been able to produce documentation which shows that LiH routinely handled bank audits in this manner. He has not been able to document standard practice for S&L audits. Further, Frost's attorneys have discovered an S&L audit performed by another LiH partner at about the same time as those at stake in this case in which a different method of evaluating risk of loss was employed. If the case is tried, Frost's attorneys will certainly use these inconsistencies to attack the credibility of our expert.

It is, however, worth noting that the relevant accounting standards do not require that an auditor use any specific method of evaluating risk of loan loss. Instead, they require only that a method be used which considers the overall circumstances surrounding the tested transactions. In its re-audit of Madison, Peat Marvick used a different method than the one recommended by our expert, but reached the same conclusions. Because Frost did not employ any such method, we should be able to prove that its audits are flawed - regardless of the problems with our expert's testimony. Overall, our chance of prevailing on this element of the case is approximately 70 per cent.

2. Causation

In any accounting malpractice case, we must show that the relevant S&L relied on the flawed audits to make subsequent business decisions. Put another way, we must show that but for its reliance on flawed audits, the S&L would have stopped or slowed investment in the speculative projects which ultimately caused loss. In an Arkansas malpractice case, we must show that in comparison with other possible causes, the defendant auditor was more than 50% responsible for the loss which resulted from its flawed audits.

In this case, we will have a series of problems demonstrating that Madison relied on the audits to make decisions. First, Madison CEO John Lathan plead guilty to bank fraud charges last Spring. It is highly unlikely that different audits would have influenced his decision making. Second, Madison's board of directors was passive. For the most part, it did what Lathan and primary shareholder McDougal told it to do. Even today, only one <sup>3</sup> Contrary to our expert's initial testimony, it appears that LiH did not have a standard approach to S&L audits.

<sup>4</sup> McDougal was tried for bank fraud last Spring. Mainly through prosecutorial error, he was acquitted.

HQUSE

AB0400

Memorandum to Mr. Jacobs and Mr. McElle

director is willing to testify that he would have voted against additional risky real estate development lending if Madison's outside auditor had generated critical audits.

Much of the loss which underlies our case is attributable to abusive insider transactions. Consequently, if Frost is able to introduce evidence of the contributory negligence of the individuals who initiated and approved these transactions, i.e., the reckless insiders and passive outsiders, we probably have only a 40% chance of proving that auditors are more than half responsible for the loss which ensued.

In response to this problem, we have asked the court to issue an order which prevents the introduction of evidence at trial of the inappropriate manner in which the Madison directors and officers managed the institution. We've based our request on a line of cases which have held that the only evidence of audit client mismanagement admissible in an accountant liability suit is evidence that the audit client provided the accountant with false financial information to audit.

This is the first time that this argument has been made in Arkansas. Last year, it was rejected in Minnesota, another state within the 8th Circuit. It's been accepted in a scattered mix of jurisdictions across the country, including a recent 10th Circuit decision which interpreted the law of Oklahoma, Arkansas' neighbor. We estimate that we have a 50% chance of winning the motion which raises this issue.

If our evidentiary motion succeeds, our chance of proving that Frost is more than half responsible for the relevant loss improves. However, Frost will do everything possible to convince the jury that the loss occurred because of events outside its control. We believe that Frost will argue that the downturn in the Arkansas economy contributed to the loss. We also believe that Frost will claim that the FHLBB contributed to the loss by accepting Madison business plans which tolerated continued real estate development lending. Finally, Frost will attack the Arkansas regulators for failing to close Madison when it became insolvent.

We have asked the court to issue an order which prevents the introduction of evidence of regulatory contributory negligence at trial. This request is based a very strong line of cases which holds that bank and thrift regulators' duty to perform responsibly runs only to the public. It does not run to the directors, officers and other professionals affiliated with a failed institution. We are almost certain to obtain the evidentiary order which we seek on this point.

Housz

However, it was the contrast between the Frost audits and the

AB0401

results of the FHLBB 1986 examination which prompted Madison to investigate audit failure. (See above.) Consequently, Frost has subpoenaed the relevant examiner and supervisory agent. Its attorneys will certainly try to steer these individuals' testimony away from its proper purpose - confirmation that an audit failure occurred - and toward evidence of regulatory mistakes. Assuming that we obtain the order which eliminates evidence of regulatory negligence from the case, we will object to this tactic. However, the jury may find the process confusing.

In this regard, it is worth mentioning that our case is pending in a fairly widespread federal district. As a result, our jury will be drawn from both Little Rock and outlying rural areas. Consequently, there is some risk that the jury will not have the sophistication to understand the more complicated aspects of our argument.

Mr. Roelle is from

To summarize: Assuming that we win both of our evidentiary motions, i.e., that evidence of both director/officer contributory negligence and regulatory contributory negligence is officially eliminated from the case, we have approximately a 60% chance of proving that auditors are more than half responsible for the loss which underlies this action.

REMARKS:

3. Loss

Frost cannot be held responsible for loss incurred prior to its involvement with Madison. Further, Frost cannot be held liable for loss recklessly incurred by Madison after it was notified that the audits were flawed. Keeping these parameters in mind, we believe that our damage window runs from July 18, 1985 to July 11, 1986. The first of these dates reflects the point at which Madison's Board reviewed and began to rely on the C&D audit. The second reflects the point at which the board was notified of potential flaws in Frost's conclusions through receipt of the FHLBB 1986 examination and proposed Cease and Desist Order. During this period, principal advances were made which have generated approximately $7,000,000 in loss.

Financial Analysis of Proposed Settlement

The $7,000,000 policy issued by C&D is our recovery source.<sup>5</sup> The following calculations translate the above discussion into numerical terms.

<sup>5</sup> Frost is a small firm with almost insignificant resources. Absorbing the insurance policy's $50,000 deductible with <sup>100%</sup> its contribution to the settlement.

AB0402

Page 4

First scenario:

.70 (chance of proving audit failure)
x .40 (chance of proving causation if evidence of director/officer contributory negligence is admissible)
= .28
.28 x $3,000,000 (insurance policy) = $840,000

Second scenario:

.70 (chance of proving audit failure)
x .60 (chance of proving causation if evidence of director & officer contributory negligence is not admissible)
= .42
.42 x $3,000,000 (insurance policy) = $1,260,000

The difference between calculations for the two scenarios
($1,260,000 - $840,000) = $420,000.

$420,000
x .50 (chance of excluding evidence of director/officer contributory negligence by winning pending motion)
= $210,000

Improving $840,000, our causation worst case scenario, by $210,000 to reflect our chance of winning the pending evidentiary motion leaves us with a settlement figure of $1,050,000.

However, because the judge is behind schedule, he may postpone our trial. The trial of a case of this complexity will take approximately a month. A month block of court time is not likely to become available until the Fall of 1991. If time is allotted for the trial itself, jury deliberation, post judgment motions, and the court's final ruling, it becomes apparent that if the trial is not held in March of 1990, we will not received the proceeds of a judgement for six months to a year.

The present value of our $1,050,000 settlement figure received in six months is $1,014,500. The present value of our $1,050,000 settlement figure received in one year is $981,308. The current $1,025,000 offer exceeds both.

To date, we have incurred approximately $150,000 in legal fees and $40,000 in expert fees. Final preparation and trial of this matter is likely to add about $75,000 in legal fees and $10,000 in expert fees to our cost. Accepting the carrier's offer would therefore enable us to save $85,000.

AB0403

Page 7

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, I recommend that we settle this matter by accepting the carrier's $1,015,000 offer.

I believe that, based upon my time records, I conferred with Seth Ward on several occasions, and I believe that I would have discussed the legal research the firm was conducting, but I have no recollection of the content of these conversations. Also, as previously indicated, I believe that I had some limited involvement with an option agreement between Mr. Ward and Madison Financial (which appears to have been billed as a "General" rather than an "IDC" matter) although I have no recollection of that project.

Report Reveals Rose Firm Role In Land Deal

*Mrs. Clinton a Partner
At Time of Legal Work*

By Susan Schmidt
and Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post Staff Writers

The Rose Law Firm did the legal work on a 1985 land deal for Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan that involved "fictitious" transactions and led to losses large enough to bankrupt the S&L, the inspector general of the Resolution Trust Corp. reported yesterday.

The deal, which involved several prominent Arkansans, including the current governor, was criticized as early as 1986 by bank examiners who said Madison relied on a straw buyer to purchase the land. But it was not previously known that the Little Rock firm in which first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton was then a partner worked on the legal issues surrounding the 1,100-acre industrial and trailer park development.

Hillary Clinton was one of 11 Rose lawyers who worked on the project known as Castle Grande, but the exact nature of her role is not entirely clear from the summary of the RTC report.

According to RTC inspector general Jack Adair, the Rose firm represented Madison in the purchase of the land in 1985 and in state regulatory issues involving a water and sewer system and a brewery that was to be built on the site. The summary did not say whether Rose lawyers were aware of the phony nature of the land transactions.

However, Adair strongly criticized Rose for failing to disclose its involvement in the project as well as other work it did for Madison when the RTC hired the firm after the thrift failed to pursue and settle a legal case against Madison's accountants.

The firm had many other undisclosed conflicts of interest in government work it did arising out of S&L failures, the report said. Rose had conflicts of interest in six of 16 cases the government hired it to pursue between 1989 and 1994, as well as in two other cases involving the RTC in which Rose represented another party, the inspector general said.

The RTC report was the third time in less than two months the Rose Law Firm has been criticized for the way it handled its work for federal agencies involved in cleaning up the S&L crisis. In June an RTC audit questioned $446,000 of Rose's RTC bills, almost a third of what the firm was paid. On Monday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. criticized the firm for numerous conflicts of interest in its government work.

The inspector general's office forwarded the report and recommendations to agency head Jack Ryan yesterday. Officials in Adair's office declined to say what action they recommended; the RTC has been weighing whether to bring a civil claim against the firm.

In addition, the inspector general's findings have been turned over to Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, who is conducting a criminal investigation. Law firms that do work for the government are required to certify in writing whether they have any conflicting legal engagements. The deliberate failure to disclose that information is a crime.

Hillary Clinton was the billing partner on work the firm did for Madison in the mid-1980s. After the S&L failed, her onetime partner, Webster L. Hubbell, won the RTC's business in pursuing Madison's accountants. Hubbell has since pleaded guilty to defrauding the firm and his clients, including the RTC and FDIC, and reports to prison next week.

An attorney representing the Rose firm, Aiden Atkins, blamed Hubbell yesterday for failing to tell the RTC of Rose's work for Madison. "The allegedly false statements are almost entirely by Hubbell, they are all by Hubbell," Atkins said.

He said that despite the lack of disclosure, the RTC auditors were wrong in concluding the firm's past work should have barred them from working for the federal agency. "The clods who were doing the investigation had no idea of what they were looking for," he said. "They had no idea of the rules of ethics."

Atkins said Hillary Clinton's work on Castle Grande was limited to regulatory questions. "She didn't handle the closing or sale of the property," he said. "A lot of the work did not go through her."

Rose's work is likely to be examined in hearings that the House Banking Committee will conduct on Whitewater starting Monday. The panel also plans to hear testimony about how the Madison S&L was run, and about its ties to the Whitewater real estate venture co-owned by President Clinton and Hillary Clinton and Madison owner James B. McDougal and his ex-wife, Susan McDougal.

Lawyers for the Clintons had no immediate comment on the 47-page report, which is a summary of a huge document that has not been released. But the White House made available written responses from the president and his wife to a series of questions from the RTC in May that covered a range regulation from purchasing the entire 1,100-acre property outright for development, so McDougal got one of his employees, Seth Ward—Hubbell's father-in-law—to buy some of the property in his own name, with Madison providing a loan for the entire amount and promising Ward hundreds of thousands of dollars in commission for his trouble as the property was sold off. Under the terms of the loan, Madison could not sue Ward if he failed to repay the loan.

Rose lawyers prepared purchase agreements and attended the closing as counsel for the purchasers.

The Castle Grande transactions violated federal regulations, Adair, the RTC inspector general, said, because they were done without adequate appraisals and without the permission of federal regulators who were trying to rein in the free-wheeling savings and loan.

If Madison had accurately related the losses related to the Castle Grande development, the S&L would have been considered insolvent, bank examiners found when they descended on the thrift in the spring of 1986. Federal regulators demanded McDougal's ouster in mid-July, and Hillary Clinton terminated Rose's retainer arrangement with Madison three days later.

The inspector general was particularly critical of the Rose Law Firm's work on Castle Grande because its lawyers knew the thrift was already in financial trouble.

"At the time it assisted Madison Guaranty with the Castle Grande deal, Rose Law Firm was aware of regulatory concerns about the soundness of the institution, particularly its net worth, through its representation of Madison Guaranty on applications with the Arkansas Securities Department to issue preferred stock and to commence broker/dealer operations," the summary report said.

Rose's work on the stock plan is another of the undisclosed conflicts cited by the inspector general. The struggling S&L wanted approval to raise more capital by selling stock. As part of that effort, Rose presented statements prepared by the accounting firm of Frost & Co.—the organization it later sued for the RTC—showing that Madison was in good financial shape, although the thrift was actually close to insolvency, another government audit showed.

When the prospect of Madison work on the stock deal came up, Hillary Clinton said in response to RTC questions, she helped her firm work out an arrangement to assure it would be paid. But she said, "I was not 'in charge' of the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison in 1985-86, although I was the billing partner."

Instead, she said, Richard Massey, a Rose lawyer who specialized in securities, represented Madison on the stock issue before the Arkansas state securities board.

"I was not involved in the day to day work," Clinton said. As far as she knows, she said, her name appears only three times "in the many documents exchanged by Rose and the state regulators."

Hillary Clinton billed Madison $4,172 for work on Castle Grande and the stock proposal, according to documents released yesterday.

"She didn't handle the closing or sale of the property," Alden Atkins, an attorney for the Rose Law Firm, said of Hillary Rodham Clinton. "A lot of the work did not go through her."

of Whitewater issues, including the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison.

The first lady was not asked specifically about Castle Grande in the interrogatories, but she generally described her work at the Rose firm for Madison as very limited.

The Castle Grande property was one of Madison's biggest and most criticized real estate deals. The S&L was barred by state

---

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1996

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WHITEWATER
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS,
Washington, DC.

The Committee met at 10:12 a.m., in room 216 of the Hart Senate Office Building, Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (Chairman of the Committee) presiding.

OPENING COMMENTS OF CHAIRMAN ALFONSE M. D'AMATO

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hubbell.
[Witness sworn in.]

SWORN TESTIMONY OF WEBSTER L. HUBBELL FORMER ASSOCIATE ATTORNEY GENERAL U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. HUBBELL. I do promise.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I will, just for the purposes of the record, indicate that Mr. Hubbell is accompanied by his attorney; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, Senator. This is John Niels with the firm of Howrey & Simon.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hubbell, do you have any statement that you would like to give?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Hubbell, back in 1985 and 1986, you had a number of conversations with your father-in-law, Seth Ward, about his work and his dealings with Mr. McDougal in the transactions that he was engaged in with Mr. McDougal; isn't that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You talked to him about the transactions before he started to engage in them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew that he had gone to work for Madison and I knew that he was looking at various projects for Madison, and I knew one of them was the IDC property, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that he was, in fact, going to take part of the property in his own name and hold it on behalf of Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe that I knew that before the fact, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know it after the fact?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew it from Mr. Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did Mr. Ward tell you about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Sometime after the transaction closed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would that be within a couple of weeks?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm sure it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that the reason Mr. Ward took the property in his own name and held it in his name on behalf of Madison was because Madison had legal limits on the amount of property it could own directly; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am not sure that I knew as a lawyer. I knew one of the reasons that was given was that there were limits on the amount of property the holding company—not the holding company, but its real estate subsidiary could hold.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So in order to avoid that limit, Mr. Ward held some of the property in his own name; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. They structured the transaction that way, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was designed to evade a regulatory limitation; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know what it was designed to do, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew it had the effect of evading a regulatory limitation?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me go to your telephone interview this past December with, I guess, it was representatives of the RTC. I think we are going to put it in front of you right now. It is Senate 22409, page 22 of the transcript of this interview. Actually, we are going back to the bottom of page 21, the question was:

Question: At this time, September 1985, what was your understanding, if any, with respect to the reasons why Madison was not going to buy the entire property itself?

Answer: My understanding was based on what Mr. Ward told me, that maybe whoever closed the loan was—was that Madison had limits on what it could own in its own name, and so Mr. Ward was going to own part of it until it could be sold.

Is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was your sworn testimony back in December; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that during this period of time, 1985 to 1986, Mr. Ward spoke to you about his deals with Madison all the time?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I mean, you basically could not get him to stop talking about it; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Ward talked about business quite often, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And even if you were socializing, he was talking about business?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you that Mrs. Clinton had been involved in drafting the option on about 22 acres of land in Castle Grande known as Holman Acres?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Chertoff, I don't remember him telling me that. It's certainly possible that I knew it back in 1986.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mrs. Clinton tell you about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I recall, but it's certainly possible.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you used to give Mr. Ward legal help in some of his transactions as a relative?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever get asked to help him with respect to the option?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't remember. I don't believe so, but I don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I take it you know now, based on records that have recently been discovered, you have been made aware of the fact that Mrs. Clinton did, in fact, do work in preparation of the option for Holman Acres. You know that now; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I know that she prepared an option on 22 acres. If that's Holman Acres, that's fine.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You can't tell us whether you knew that back in 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I cannot.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you help us to understand why it was that Mr. Ward would have gone to Mrs. Clinton to help him draft an option rather than to you?

Mr. HUBBELL. She was representing Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was representing Ward with respect to the option?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So Mrs. Clinton was representing both Madison and Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my understanding.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your understanding—

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me go back. I am not sure I even know about the option. I mean, I knew there were discussions of options, but I am not sure I knew that Mrs. Clinton prepared it. The way it appears to me is that, like the initial transaction, the firm was representing both Mr. Ward and Madison. I don't know that, but that's the way it appears from what I have seen in the newspaper.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood at the time, back in 1985, that in fact the firm was, at least in the initial stages of the IDC purchase, representing Madison and Ward and Madison Financial?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So all three of these supposedly distinct parties, Madison Financial, which bought part of the property, Seth Ward, which bought the other part on behalf of Madison Financial, and Madison Guaranty, which did the financing, all three were represented by one firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's your understanding that throughout the work that was done involving this piece of property known as IDC, it was the Rose Law Firm that represented Ward in anything that he needed representation in?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that, and the reason I am hesitant to say that, Mike, and I am really not sure it is relevant to the inquiry, is because when the property was sold, for example, to Senator Fulbright or Governor Tucker, my understanding was that the Mitchell Firm represented everybody who was involved in those transactions. I may be wrong, that was just my understanding. So, technically, they were representing Mr. Ward in those transactions as well.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What about in the transactions where Mr. Ward was engaging in transactions with Madison? Who was representing the parties in that?

Mr. HUBBELL. You'll have to give me an example.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In the initial purchase—

Mr. HUBBELL. In the initial purchase, the Rose Firm handled the closing, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And handled it on behalf of Ward and Madison and Madison Savings & Loan; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In the preparation of the paperwork between Ward and McDougal, have you seen a letter dated September 24th that reflects an agreement between Ward and Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct, I have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that typed by your secretary?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am going to read to you from a deposition of Alston Jennings taken just yesterday. Do you know who Alston Jennings is?

Mr. HUBBELL. I sure do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He is a senior partner at Wright, Lindsey & Jennings?

Mr. HUBBELL. One of the best trial lawyers I know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have no reason to doubt the accuracy of his testimony, do you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to indicate to you at page 123—let's see if we can get it up to you.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. This is Mr. Jennings' testimony.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is Mr. Jennings' testimony, page 123, line 5.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I don't know that this witness has ever seen this testimony.

Mr. CHERTOFF. All right. If we don't have extra copies—it just came hot off the press—I will read it to you. Starting at line 5:

Question: And Mr. Ward was familiar with the preparation of all three, so if lawyers were involved, he would have been aware of that?

Answer: Absolutely.

Question: And I think this is clear, but Mr. Ward never indicated to you that Mr. Hubbell assisted him in the preparation of those letter agreements?

Answer: He indicated to me that Mr. Hubbell's secretary typed, I think, just one of the agreements.

Question: And do you recall which one that was?

Answer: I think it was the third one or the one that included the Holman Acres.

Do you remember having a discussion or seeing a document relating to this piece of property that your secretary typed?

Mr. HUBBELL. I remember that Mr. Ward would come to my office and, on occasion, ask my secretary to type letters that he had handwritten or that had been drafted somewhere else. I don't know with this particular letter that you're talking about, whether he did or didn't. I think I've testified before that it's certainly possible.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, would you agree with me that typically when he brought a document in to have your secretary type, she would bring it in and you would be sitting there with Mr. Ward and she would show it to both of you?

Mr. HUBBELL. My recollection was that he would give it to her or he would be sitting in an office and say do you mind if Martha or Debbie types this, and one or the other would come in and we would hand it to her, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would likely have seen a document after it was typed; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Likely, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now is Mr. Ward a lawyer by training?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So I take it he is not in a position to do legal drafting on the specifics of property agreements that set forth metes and bounds and all the technical lawyer stuff that you get in real property documents; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, no, I don't agree with that, not as a lawyer, but certainly he's capable of doing that because he has a brokerage license. They're trained to do that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You think he was capable of preparing and drafting legal documents that set forth transfers of land?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he used to consult with you about some of his real estate issues?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there any other lawyer you dealt with on real estate issues?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am thinking for a minute. Mr. Ward used lots of lawyers. Other than I assume you are saying lawyers within the firm?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Within the Rose Law Firm, yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Other than lawyers within the firm?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, other than lawyers within the Rose Law Firm.

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe I would be the only one that I can recall, except when I first started practicing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sorry, I didn't get the last part of that.

Mr. HUBBELL. Except when I first started practicing. He used another law firm when I first joined the Rose Law Firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Once you got underway with your practice, he used the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Most of the time, Mr. Chertoff. On occasion, he would use other lawyers.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now can you search your memory from all the conversations you had with Mr. Ward back in 1985 and 1986 in which he was constantly talking about his business and tell us why it is that Mr. Ward went to Mrs. Clinton to prepare the option on this property?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall that he did go to Mrs. Clinton, but I've seen records that he did. It doesn't surprise me that he went to Mrs. Clinton. He was aware that Mrs. Clinton and the firm was on retainer and that she was doing work for Madison, and he used Mrs. Clinton—let me go back. He did a lot of legal work with Mrs. Clinton on other issues and, therefore, it doesn't surprise me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that this kind of transactional work was not her specialty?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now when you were talking to the FDIC, later the RTC, about taking on the matter of representing them in their lawsuit against the Frost accountants, who had been the accountants for Madison back in the mid-1980's, there came a time when you had discussion with Ms. Breslaw concerning Seth Ward; isn't that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you indicate to Ms. Breslaw that your relationship with your father-in-law, Mr. Ward, was not a close one?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am going to read to you from her sworn testimony before the House of Representatives, which we'll give to you. It's pages 200 and 201. This is the testimony of April Breslaw, who is the FDIC attorney, and it regards her conversation with you concerning the Seth Ward relationship.

Now, you do remember there came a time that Ms. Breslaw contacted you because she had learned after the firm was retained that Seth Ward was your father-in-law. You remember the fact that you had a conversation with her?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I remember having more than one, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to read to you from line 21 of the statement given by Ms. Breslaw on page 200.

A few months after I had hired the Rose Firm, I learned that Seth Ward was Webster Hubbell's father-in-law and that Ward was in litigation with Madison. Under the ethical rules, an adverse interest by an in-law is not imputed to a lawyer. It is not a conflict of interest. Nevertheless, I asked Mr. Hubbell about the Ward matter. Mr. Hubbell told me that he was not representing Mr. Ward and that he would not do so in the future.

He also told me that his relationship with his father-in-law was not a close one. I recall him saying that Mr. Ward was an ardent Republican and that he was an active Democrat.

I want to ask you, did you tell Ms. Breslaw that your relationship with your father-in-law was not a close one?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't remember that, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You would agree with me that, in fact, as you have testified here, you were intimately acquainted with the details of your father-in-law's business because in 1985 and 1986, he kept talking about it with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was familiar with it. I wouldn't say intimately familiar with it. That has a different context, Mike.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You also knew that the Rose Firm had done work on transactions involving IDC; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew that we had closed the initial loan, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You also knew or came to learn during the course of the representation of the Federal Government in this case against Frost that one of the very sets of transactions that was part of the damage calculation that the Government wanted to use against Frost involved these Ward loans?

Mr. HUBBELL. One of the projects that we looked at as potential damage calculations was the IDC loans and the subsequent loans after the initial purchase.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did that prompt you at any time to go back to Ms. Breslaw and say, our firm was actually involved in some of the legal work relating to these loans; maybe we should drop this representation?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall doing that, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say you don't recall doing that, do you mean you didn't do it? Is there any possibility that you went back to Ms. Breslaw and said, we were involved in the initial IDC closing, I'm aware of the fact that Mr. Ward was involved in subsequent transactions, he's discussed it with me, and we talked about it before and after? Did you disclose any of that to Ms. Breslaw?

Mr. HUBBELL. To April, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There came a time that the FDIC in 1993 was called in to reexamine this issue of whether the Rose Law Firm had a conflict. Do you remember that?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1993?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was the first of a series of examinations of that, the last one of which was done by Ms. Black, who was here yesterday, which resulted in a referral to the Arkansas Bar Association. I want to come back to this first one. This was done by the FDIC regarding the issue of a conflict of interest when you were hired by the Government to go against the Frost Firm on Madison Guaranty. Do you remember getting a copy of the report on the retention of the Rose Law Firm which was the conclusion of the FDIC in this first investigation?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, I saw a lot of reports, Mike, so you will have to help me there.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We are going to show it to you right now and it is document S 10097.

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe I saw a draft of this.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you, in fact, fax a copy of this to the White House?

Mr. HUBBELL. I could have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Look at the top of the document. Do you see a fax line indicating this was something generated from 514-0238, DOJ/OAAG?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's your fax line; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is OAAG—

Mr. HUBBELL. I think that's my office, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you doubt this was faxed by your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know. It certainly could have been.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I take it you read this?

Mr. HUBBELL. I read a draft. I'm not sure I got the final one, but I could have. I remember reading the draft.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you get a draft?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was sent a draft.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the FDIC?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. For your comments?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I was sent a draft the morning that they were issuing the final report.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to direct your attention in particular to page 3 of the report. If you go into the middle paragraph, the full sentence about midway through the paragraph, it indicates:

Richard Donovan, a partner with the Firm who worked on the case, states that he recalls Mr. Hubbell having advised the staff attorney of prior representation of the S&L on a matter involving the Arkansas Securities Commissioner. Mr. Hubbell's recollection differs. He recalls advising the staff attorney very generally that the Firm had done a small amount of work for the S&L years earlier, but that he did not view that as amounting to a conflict. He believes the work he was aware of was lending and collection work.

Now, Mr. Hubbell, would you agree with me that in 1985 and 1986, based upon your conversations with Mr. Ward, you understood that the Rose Firm had been involved in closing the transaction in which Mr. Ward acquired some of the property on behalf of Madison Financial?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew in 1985 and 1986 that the firm had closed the IDC loan, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. From having had ongoing discussions with Mr. Ward, you were, in fact, aware generally of his business activities involving this property in 1985 and 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew there was a lot of activity, yes, and knew he was telling me who was buying up the parcels, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that this description in this report that was prepared by the FDIC, therefore, is not really an accurate representation of your degree of involvement with Mr. Ward and the firm's degree of involvement with Mr. Ward with Madison back in 1985 and 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. The report states what I recalled in 1993. It's not what we did in 1985.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But in 1992, the year before this investigation was done, you looked at the billing records and the time sheets and the printouts—

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. —that contained all the information which we now finally know about concerning the work that was done by the Rose Law Firm for Madison; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did look at the billing records.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you looked at those billing records, you saw what you described to Susan Thomases in 1992 as numerous conferences about the securities work; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I saw that the firm had numerous conferences and Mrs. Clinton had conferences on the securities matter.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your words as taken down by Ms. Thomases and attested to in this very room a month ago were "numerous conferences."

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that those records also showed, and we can give them to you in a moment, Mrs. Clinton's involvement in preparation of the option?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have seen that she prepared the option, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You saw it in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe I did, because I remember looking at the bills. I don't have any specific recollection that I looked and saw preparation of option agreement in 1992.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You saw that she had a lot of calls with Seth Ward when you looked at the bills in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you interviewed by the FDIC when they prepared this investigation a year later?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you mention any of that to them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you got this report, did you say to yourself, I know that there was more work we did for Madison than this report indicates?

Mr. HUBBELL. What this report indicates is what I told Ms. Breslaw in 1989.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What this report indicates is that the work you were aware of was lending and collection work. What this report indicates on page 2 is that in 1985, the firm represented the S&L before the Arkansas Securities Commissioner on two matters, the placement of the preferred stock and the application for the broker-dealer license. The people who wrote this report had no idea that the firm was involved in the option or closing the IDC transaction, which the regulators called a sham purchase, and you knew about that because you had looked at the records the year before in 1992.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mike, I don't want to mince words with you. I don't know what the FDIC knew. I assume they did know that. They would have a copy of the bills.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You thought they had the billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What gave you that impression?

Mr. HUBBELL. The bills were sent to the client, Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you assumed that they had the bills at Madison and therefore you didn't feel a need to lay out fully for the FDIC in 1993 what the Rose Law Firm's work had been as you had seen it just the year before when you reviewed the bills?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1993 when I was interviewed, the focus was on the retention of the Rose Firm in 1989 and what was disclosed to Ms. Breslaw at that time and I have tried to recall to the best of my memory what I disclosed to April in 1989. Now that's what I thought the issue was at that point.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The issue was what was disclosed, but it was also what wasn't disclosed; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I haven't looked at this report—I don't want to mince words with you—

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't have to look at it, Mr. Hubbell. Just from having been Associate Attorney General of the United States, Chief Justice of the Arkansas Supreme Court, would you agree with me that if the issue is whether there was an undisclosed conflict of interest, whether you made full disclosure to the RTC when they hired you, you have to understand, do you not, that it's as important to know what you didn't tell them about what was going on as what you did tell them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think what is important is what the client knew and what was disclosed at the time we were retained.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you knew that one of the things that hadn't been disclosed to the client was all this work involving the IDC and the option and your personal involvement with Mr. Ward as he discussed his business arrangements with you incessantly. That wasn't disclosed, was it?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was not disclosed by me. That does not mean the client did not know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. As far as you knew, you hadn't made the disclosure; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did not make the disclosure, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, you're not meaning to suggest to us that the client, Madison, would have gotten the printouts, that we now have discovered and that you saw back in 1992, that detail the attorney work?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I meant they had the bills.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That is right. Bills don't disclose the amount of time spent on things; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. The ones that I've seen do not, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now let me just ask you one question, and I am going to surrender the balance of my time to Senator Shelby.

The CHAIRMAN. Finish it up. He's going to take his when we swing back.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This document, this report was faxed over to the White House. Did you do that?

Mr. HUBBELL. I doubt if I personally did it. I might have asked my staff to do it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm not suggesting you personally did it. Did you direct somebody to do it?

Mr. HUBBELL. It would not surprise me, but I don't remember one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you discuss this issue with Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You never had a discussion with her about this issue of the Rose Law Firm conflict of interest investigation going on with the FDIC?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Didn't you know she was concerned about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I would only communicate on something like this with White House Counsel.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why would White House Counsel be concerned about whether back in the mid-1980's the Rose Law Firm had had a conflict with respect to the FDIC?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because more than likely, there were going to be inquiries from the press.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The press. But you understood, Mr. Hubbell, that a greater concern than inquiries from the press would be the possibility of some kind of legal action; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Did I think there was going to be legal action regarding a conflict of interest in 1989?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No. In 1993, when there was an FDIC investigation concerning this conflict issue, the issue of the Rose Law Firm conflict, you understood the FDIC wasn't investigating in order to generate press stories. You understood they were investigating to see whether legal action had to be taken of some kind; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. No. It never occurred to you that there would be any legal consequences to the investigation?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You thought they were just trying to satisfy idle curiosity?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't think it was idle curiosity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you think they were going to do if they found a conflict?

Mr. HUBBELL. If they found a conflict, and there was an action, they would take it. I have confidence in that, but I think they were being asked to investigate a situation that occurred back in 1989 and they were doing so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were doing it to determine whether they should take some kind of legal action; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know why they were doing it, but my impression was they were getting the information because they were being requested to do so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you know that at the same period of time there were discussions about whether Mr. Altman, who was the acting head of the RTC, ought to recuse himself from handling matters related to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. HUBBELL. At some point, I knew that there was discussion as to whether Mr. Altman should recuse or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you find that out?

Mr. HUBBELL. I can't tell you precisely.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell me generally.

Mr. HUBBELL. Sometime in September or October of 1993.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Of 199—

Mr. HUBBELL. 1993.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's before February 1994, when Mr. Altman actually came in to meet with Mr. Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. Maybe I'm off a year. I know at some point I heard that Bernie was saying he was talking to Mr. Altman about recusal. Whenever that occurred, that's when I knew about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That occurred in February.

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm sorry, Mike.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Nussbaum tell you about that?

Mr. HUBBELL. He told me that he was having discussions with Altman regarding recusal, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you tell him that that could have an impact on the Rose Law Firm conflict issue, which you were personally involved in?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, this is news to me because I don't think we've ever learned before that Mr. Nussbaum discussed this with you.

Mr. HUBBELL. He didn't discuss it. He told me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's still news to me. At the end of February, when Mr. Altman finally decided he was going to recuse himself because there was a threatened editorial in The New York Times, did you know that Mrs. Clinton asked to have both Mr. Ickes and Mr. Eggleston prepare a memo for her regarding the effect of all of this upon the Rose Law Firm conflict issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Your testimony is that even though you knew in 1992 that Mrs. Clinton had personally worked on the Madison Guaranty matter, that she had had numerous conversations with Seth Ward, and had worked on the option, even though you knew that in 1992, even though you knew in 1993 that this was being investigated by the FDIC, even though Mr. Nussbaum told you that he was having discussions about Mr. Altman possibly recusing himself, you never, ever had a conversation with Hillary Clinton, who was your former partner, who had worked on this matter, who had talked to Mr. Ward, and who had worked on the option, about this issue of the Rose Law Firm conflict?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct, Mike. That's absolutely correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think I'm out of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Good morning, Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. HUBBELL. Good morning.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me talk for a moment about your relationship with Mr. Seth Ward. The conversation that you had with Ms. Breslaw occurred in 1989; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And this was about the representation that we have been inquiring into in this Committee involving the IDC purchase, and the regulatory work done in connection with IDC occurred in 1985 and 1986. Now during the period 1985 and 1986, is it correct that Mr. Ward was a frequent visitor to your office at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was a frequent visitor to my office at the firm and Mrs. Clinton's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did he, from time to time, ask your secretary to type things for him?

Mr. HUBBELL. From time to time he would, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did he have his own secretary?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of. Mrs. Ward, on occasion, would type something for him, and he may have used people at Madison, but he didn't have a secretary, so to speak.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now did there come a time when Mr. Ward suffered an accident?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, he suffered an accident in the late 1980's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And I don't mean to pry into personal family relationships, but there's been some discussion about all this in the newspapers.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The accident occurred while he was helping to make some repairs or helping out in some way at your home?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct. He fell out of my window.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. He fell off a ladder out of a window?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was standing outside of a window on the second story of my house and fell and broke his back.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did your relationship with him change in some way after that accident in terms of the closeness of the relationship?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, he was in a great deal of pain, and he had also suffered some other health problems that were pretty severe, so we spent a lot of time as a family helping each other and talking about things because he was in very poor health.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go back to the question that was put to you in your telephone deposition. It was at page 23 of the transcript, which I take it you have in front of you?

Mr. NIELDS. It's been removed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Could somebody bring back that transcript, please, and it would probably be helpful to leave it there. Page 23.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you will take a look at that, were you referring to the option which was prepared by Mrs. Clinton according to her billing records on May 1st, or were you referring to documents which were dated or prepared around September 24th?

Mr. HUBBELL. When I was talking about the financing statement?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No. When you were talking about your knowledge of the arrangements made between Mr. Ward and Madison Guaranty, you were referring to documents. Were you referring to the contract dated September 24th?

Mr. HUBBELL. If you're referencing my answer, I don't believe so, but I'm sure—I think we were talking about the—you're talking about Exhibit 12?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No. I was referring to your transcript.

Mr. HUBBELL. I must be on the wrong page. Page 23?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I guess it starts on page 22 and runs over to page 23. Let me go back and ask you the questions directly, rather than referring to a prior question. You were asked about whether you considered Mr. Ward to be a straw man in that transaction, and rather than ask you a bunch of leading questions, let me just ask you to provide this Committee with your understanding of what the relationship was between Mr. Ward and Madison Guaranty at the time of this purchase.

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe that he had some arrangement with Madison, contractual arrangement, where he was paid a modest salary and would receive a commission on real estate sold. That's my understanding. That's based on oral understandings of what his deal was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What was your understanding about how it was that he came to take a portion of the IDC property in his name?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding, and that's, again, based on conversations, was that when it came close to closing, there was some concern about Madison taking all of the property in its name and that Mr. Ward offered to take a portion in his name until it was sold, if Madison would lend him the money to do so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that the extent of your knowledge?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was all after the fact.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. Do you recall discussing that knowledge with anyone at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I may have, but I don't have any recollection of it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was it your habit to discuss everything that Mr. Ward was telling you about his business dealings with everyone at the law firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, no. If anything, I would have asked the person who closed the loan what happened, but I don't recall doing that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At the time that the Rose Law Firm was being considered for representation of the Government in connection with collecting funds on behalf of Madison Guaranty, as we have learned from prior testimony, there was an existing lawsuit pending against Frost & Company, the auditors for Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And you were considered for the role of being the lead counsel in that suit?

Mr. HUBBELL. To substitute as lead trial counsel, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. At that point, you were asked, were you not, whether you had any conflict of interest?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you believe you had a conflict of interest?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in connection with that litigation, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now does a conflict of interest arise from the fact of Mr. Ward discussing his business dealings with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in my opinion.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So, putting that to the side, then the question arises as to whether anything you knew about at the Rose Firm in connection with its representation of Madison created in your mind grounds for a conflict of interest. Was there any such?

Mr. HUBBELL. With regard to that litigation, I was not aware at that time of any conflict.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And in connection with the litigation, that case was ultimately settled?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would you tell us, to the best of your recollection, the mechanics by which the settlement occurred?

Mr. HUBBELL. At some point, we began settlement negotiations with the lawyers and the insurance carrier for Frost & Company. There was an evaluation done by the insurance carrier. They used what was called a decision tree analysis, we would comment on that, and there was a lot of give and take between the insurance carrier and the client.

In any of these cases that you involve with the FDIC or the RTC, there's a lot of precedent, a lot of experience between the RTC or FDIC people and the carriers because they settle all the time. There was a lot of give and take, and there was an evaluation of the merits of the probable cause, primarily the issue being whether we could prove probable cause and what everybody's estimate of our possibility of success was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now was the RTC very active in the analysis of the settlement possibilities?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Whose decision was it to settle the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. The RTC's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did they base their decision on this decision tree and the probabilities involved—

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. —to the best of your knowledge?

Mr. HUBBELL. To the best of my knowledge. I know that I was semi-critical of the decision tree analysis, but it turned out that the RTC used it themselves and that, therefore, they liked the process and we went through it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were fully prepared to go forward with the trial of the case if that was the decision of your client?

Mr. HUBBELL. We were prepared on several occasions. It was set and then reset, and we were prepared to go to trial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now have you heard from any quarter that the settlement which was reached in that case was in any way insufficient or improper?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. In fact, the opposite, when we settled.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the client, the RTC, who made the decision to settle, was very happy with the settlement amount, which was over $1 million?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So from a standpoint of whether there was sufficient or insufficient disclosure to the RTC with respect to all the matters that the Rose Firm represented Madison on back 4 or 5 years earlier, the conclusion of the case demonstrated a result that was in all ways satisfactory to the client?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. And may I add something? You all do what you want to, but everybody seems to be focusing on the communication between me and Ms. Breslaw. Madison Guaranty was at that time still being operated by most of the people who were there in 1985 and 1986. They were aware of who Seth Ward was. There was litigation still pending involving Seth and the RTC, but I think more importantly, the actual people who were there working at Madison were now employees of the FDIC. Rightfully or wrongfully, I assumed they remembered better than I the transactions involving Castle Grande and the IDC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now from a substantive standpoint, from a dollar amount, was the Madison representation a significant representation for the Rose Law Firm in 1985 and 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in 1985 or 1986, no, it was not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. From the standpoint of subject matter, was there anything that you now know about the representation of the firm, the closing of the IDC loan, the performance of various research and other advisory functions in connection with the preferred stock offering, the broker-dealer proposal, the regulatory matters involving the wet/dry issue and the sewer issue, do any of those matters, now that you look back at them in hindsight, provide grounds that would cause you, if you were to reevaluate it, to consider that you had a substantive conflict of interest in going forward in representing the bank's interest against its former auditors?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in the Frost litigation, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go to the preparation of the documents. You have indicated here this morning that it is your belief that Mr. Ward was capable of writing documents for the purchase and sale of property. Were you aware that he had done so?

Mr. HUBBELL. With regard to this?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With regard to anything in the 1980's.

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm sure I was. Specifics don't come to mind, but I'm sure I was. He had been a broker for a while.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In connection with the investigation that was completed by Pillsbury Madison & Sutro into the representation of Madison Guaranty by the Rose Law Firm, and I call your attention to the report that's dated December 28, 1995, at page 76, it states that:

McDougal and Ward seem to have resorted to self-help rather than advice of counsel. Certainly the series of loans that they entered into in the spring of 1986 ($400,000 from Madison Guaranty to Ward; $300,000 from Ward to Madison Financial; and approximately $70,000 running in both directions) reflect a fairly unusual approach to documenting Ward's entitlement to commissions.

They go on to talk about this in the context of the meaning of these contracts. Is it fair to say that it is consistent with your experience and recollection that Mr. Ward would, from time to time, draft his own documents in connection with various contract matters?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, or they were drafted at Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me ask you this. In connection with the option agreement, which was dated May 1, 1986, that's a two-page document, had you had occasion to review it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I looked at it last night.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. According to Mrs. Clinton's billing records, her time sheets, it appears that on May 1st she spent 2 hours involved in conference with Mr. Ward, both in person and by telephone, and in drafting the document dated May 1 or some version of it.

Let me ask you, on the basis of your experience and familiarity with Mrs. Clinton's areas of specialty in the law, is it likely in your view that Mrs. Clinton drafted that document from scratch in 2 hours?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know, but my best guess is that there was a form within the firm, a form file that was pulled out and was used by Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any reason to question whether Mr. Ward brought to Mrs. Clinton on that day some version of a document or outline of a document from which to work?

Mr. HUBBELL. There's no question that the deal was brought within 2 hours. Some kind of deal was brought, and it was memorialized. It could have been already written out, or it could have been in some form in a firm form file that was used.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now having in mind that hindsight is always 20/20, the question of the firm's representation of Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial back in 1985 and 1986 as well as, in your view, Mr. Ward in connection with these matters, would pose, I think, to most lawyers a question of a conflict of interest. Normally, if people get a divorce, they try to get lawyers, one for each side. If they have a contract negotiation, usually one would get a lawyer, one for each side in the transaction. In my experience in the real world, sometimes clients who are well acquainted with one another will ask a lawyer to perform a service for both clients.

I would like you to give us your understanding, both in general terms and specifically, with respect to Ward and Madison, how things worked in Little Rock back in the mid-1980's.

Mr. HUBBELL. I would say in general terms, in the early- to mid-1980's, it was common practice for the lawyer, unless it was a real contested matter, to document a transaction between both the borrower and the lender and, usually, it was the lender's lawyer who did it. It was just common practice. We did a lot of work for another institution, not a savings and loan, and it was not uncommon for us to document the entire transaction for both parties.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me turn to another subject matter, and that is the subject matter of the billing records which have recently been turned over to this Committee on January 5, 1996. Have you had an occasion to review those records?

Mr. HUBBELL. I reviewed those records just recently.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recall having seen them previously?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I saw them in 1992.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would you tell us in your own words what you recall and the circumstances about having seen those records at that time?

Mr. HUBBELL. I recall in 1992 that the issue regarding our representation of Madison and specifically our work before the Arkansas Securities Department was of interest to Mr. Gerth of The New York Times, and that our firm was being questioned by people within the campaign about Mrs. Clinton's work in that regard. We did some work in trying to organize and pull up the files. In connection with that, bills were pulled and reviewed by myself and Mr. Foster and Mr. Massey, I believe.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What do you recall about the review of those bills at that time?

Mr. HUBBELL. I recall only what I did, and that was to look for contacts with the Arkansas Securities Department and to get a general view of what work Mrs. Clinton may have done so that the campaign was not in a position of saying something that was inaccurate.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What time of the year in 1992 do you recall having reviewed the bills?

Mr. HUBBELL. I guess we call it the winter now. Sometimes it's the spring, but now it's the winter, February and March, certainly if this weather is any indication.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So it was early in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. Early in 1992.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What do you recall about where those billing records went after you reviewed them?

Mr. HUBBELL. They were at the firm when I reviewed them.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. They were at the Rose Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now did you review them together with Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. I really couldn't tell you. I believe at least that I reviewed them and gave them to Mr. Foster.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So, to the best of your knowledge, after the review by you and Mr. Foster, Mr. Foster had possession of them at least in early 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you see them again after that review?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were those the records upon which you had a conversation with Susan Thomases?

Mr. HUBBELL. More than likely.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What was the reason for your conversation with Susan Thomases?

Mr. HUBBELL. The campaign was continuing to get inquiries. They were wanting to be clear on—if Mrs. Clinton had not done certain work, they wanted to be able to say that because it was not only the press at that point, but other people running against the President who were saying things about it, and they wanted to know what type of work she had done and what could be said.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do those records reflect that Mrs. Clinton did a substantial amount of work for Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in my opinion.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now after you reviewed the records and had your conversation with Ms. Thomases, do you recall whether you had the records in front of you when you had the conversation with Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. But it would be fair to say that you had reviewed them within that general timeframe of your conversation with him?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And the last you recall of seeing those records in 1992 was when Mr. Foster took possession of them?

Mr. HUBBELL. Either Vince and I looked at them together—there's one thing on the records that gives me some indication that I did something and then gave them to Vince.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What is that? Could we have a set of the records provided to Mr. Hubbell, please.

Mr. HUBBELL. Can I make one caveat while we're getting this?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Surely.

Mr. HUBBELL. What I have seen are Xerox copies. I don't know precisely in what format the originals are. You know what I'm saying? I have read in the paper that somebody has got red ink on one of them, but I have only seen the copies—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can I have a copy sent down? Let's have the Committee's copy, which is a color photocopy, sent down.

Mr. Hubbell, let me put in front of you what we have received, on the size of paper we have received it, which is a color copy of the billing records received from Mr. Kendall.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you said that there was something on the records that you wished to call our attention to?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm referring to DKSJ 028935.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. DKSJ 028935. OK.

Mr. HUBBELL. I am referring to what appears to be on what we call a yellow Post-Em or whatever, but there's an asterisk there. I recognize that as my asterisk or my handwriting, as bad as it is.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That appears to be a photocopy of what was a yellow sticky or a Post-it with an asterisk toward the bottom of the page?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recall why you put that asterisk there?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because, as you can see, there's some real shaky underlining right beside it. That's mine as well. It says "telephone conference with B. Bassett." If you recall, the issue then, way back when, was did Mrs. Clinton ever have any contact with the Arkansas Securities Department. When we went back to the bills, that was the only, I believe, indication on the bills of a direct contact with the Arkansas Securities Department so I underlined that. I probably gave that to Vince.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now there's more writing on the same page, if you will stay with that, also in red. It looks like felt tip pen.

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It says "HRC—this suggests 1st matter."

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recognize that handwriting?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I do.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Whose is that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Vincent Foster's.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So both of you were marking up these billing records for purposes of your review and analysis in red ink?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recall having seen Mr. Foster's handwriting on the documents back in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you recall having discussed the same issues about the sequence of events and the nature of the representation back in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. With Mr. Foster?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With Mr. Foster.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I do.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And to the best of your ability to provide an informed opinion, if you did not see Mr. Foster's handwriting back in 1992, do you have a belief as to whether the notations made by Mr. Foster were made in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have an opinion, but it's just my belief. We were both working on it, and this is what he did to ultimately give it to somebody to indicate what was going on, he highlighted what the records showed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you know who he gave it to?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So your belief is that these markings were made in 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my belief.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. And to whom did he give it, someone in the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Sarbanes, I really don't know. I would hate to guess. It looks like it's directed to Mrs. Clinton, but I do not know. It was probably given to somebody in the campaign.

Senator SARBANES. Probably somebody in the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. Probably, but I don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Chairman, our time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shelby.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR RICHARD C. SHELBY

Senator SHELBY. Thank you.

Mr. Hubbell, did you have the records printed out from the Rose Law Firm on February 12, 1992, or thereabouts?

Mr. HUBBELL. Thereabouts. Either myself or Vince Foster requested they be printed out.

Senator SHELBY. Who would have had the capability to do this, in other words, the printouts?

Mr. HUBBELL. As far as this cover printout, our accounting department.

Senator SHELBY. Now do you have the copy of the records that were produced from the White House that they found down there?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I do.

Senator SHELBY. You have looked at those records, and you're looking at them right now?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. You identified Vince Foster's handwriting and notes; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. Are his notes written in with a red script?

Mr. HUBBELL. On the copy that I received here, yes, they were.

Senator SHELBY. And you do not recall seeing the red writing, the red ink on the notes or on the records when you first looked at them in 1992, do you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator SHELBY. So you don't know, of your own knowledge, when Mr. Foster wrote what he did on these notes?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator SHELBY. You have looked through the records?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I have.

Senator SHELBY. Is there more than one occasion where Mr. Foster made some notes regarding Hillary Rodham Clinton's billing?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. There's some I've identified as my handwriting, or bad scribbling.

Senator SHELBY. Did you give the records there to Mr. Foster, or were you all working off of a different copy or what?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think I testified no, it was clear that we were working off the same copy.

Senator SHELBY. Working off the same copy?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't remember whether we were doing it together, but my best belief is that I was highlighting certain things and then giving them to Mr. Foster.

Senator SHELBY. Were these records ever turned over to Hillary Rodham Clinton by Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know.

Senator SHELBY. If you will turn to DKS 028935, would you look at that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. At the top of the page, does it say "HRC—this suggests 1st matter"?

Mr. HUBBELL. "This suggests 1st matter."

Senator SHELBY. Is that the handwriting of Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, it is.

Senator SHELBY. Do you know if he turned these copies of these records over to or discussed them with Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not.

Senator SHELBY. But it's obvious to you as a lawyer that he was going back over these records and checking billing items that Mrs. Clinton billed out for doing various amounts of work?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct. That was my understanding, and that's what I know he did.

Senator SHELBY. What happened to these records after you and Mr. Foster were finished working off the same sheet or the same records? What happened to those records?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Senator.

Senator SHELBY. Let's go back to February 1992. You were both working and making notes on the records that are before you; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right, that's correct.

Senator SHELBY. You were a partner and working in the Rose Law Firm with Mr. Foster at that time?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. Did they walk out of the office there or what happened to them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Senator SHELBY. Did you ever inquire as to where they were after February 1992? Did you ever talk to Mr. Foster about—

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I never talked to Mr. Foster. Recently I have inquired as to where they were, obviously everybody has been inquiring about where they were, but until just recently, no.

Senator SHELBY. Did you take those records out of the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator SHELBY. You did not?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator SHELBY. Do you know if Mr. Foster did?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know.

Senator SHELBY. Did you talk to Mr. Kendall about this, or did Mr. Foster, about these records?

Mr. HUBBELL. These records, no.

Senator SHELBY. Do you know if Mr. Foster talked to him about the billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe Mr. Foster would have talked to Mr. Kendall because Mr. Foster had died before Mr. Kendall was hired.

Senator SHELBY. OK. Who kept in custody these records from February 1992 until they were discovered? Can we just go through the chain here?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know.

Senator SHELBY. You have no idea?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe they were at the firm and when they left the firm, I don't know.

Senator SHELBY. How did they get to the White House?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Senator.

Senator SHELBY. You have no idea?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator SHELBY. Do you know if these records were part of the records that Mr. Foster had in his office at the White House when he was still alive?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator SHELBY. Could they have been?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, they could have been.

Senator SHELBY. Who did you talk to, Mr. Hubbell, about these billing records other than Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. I know that I talked about these with people in the campaign.

Senator SHELBY. Who would that be? Would that be President Clinton, Governor Clinton then?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, no, no.

Senator SHELBY. Would it be Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have tried to——

Senator SHELBY. Let's go back in time——

Mr. HUBBELL. I was trying to answer, Senator.

Senator SHELBY. Go ahead.

Mr. HUBBELL. I really was. I've been trying for a long time to think about who I talked to, whether I talked to Mrs. Clinton about Madison billing or not. I don't know that I did. I don't have any memory of doing it, but it seems unlikely that I wouldn't have, although Vince may have been the one who talked to Hillary about it. I did talk to, I am confident, Loretta Lynch and, according to the notes, I had some conversation with Susan Thomases.

Senator SHELBY. You talked with Susan Thomases about it. You have seen her notes from the conversation, the telephone conversation you had with her in February of 1992?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have not seen her notes. I've seen articles about her notes.

Senator SHELBY. Did you discuss these bills, these bills you have before you, with anyone at the White House from 1993 on?

Mr. HUBBELL. Talk about the bills with the White House?

Senator SHELBY. Anybody at the White House. Not with Mr. Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't talk with Mr. Nussbaum. Carolyn Huber worked at the White House, but I would have talked to her about them when she was at the Rose Firm, not when she went to the White House.

Senator SHELBY. Did you ever talk to Mr. Foster about them after he went to the White House?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator SHELBY. Who did you send this fax to, that Counsel asked you about, when you were over at the Justice Department?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe, Senator, I said I don't remember sending the fax.

Senator SHELBY. But it came from your phone number or your area over in the Justice Department, did it not?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's what it indicates, yes.

Senator SHELBY. Do you dispute that?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't.

Senator SHELBY. You're just saying you don't recall personally sending it, but you don't deny sending it, do you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, not one way or the other.

Senator SHELBY. Now who did you send it to? Did you send it to Mrs. Clinton, Mr. Lindsey, Mr. Nussbaum, Mr. Foster? Who did you send it to?

Mr. HUBBELL. It wouldn't have been Mr. Foster, Senator, as you know. He was no longer with us.

Senator SHELBY. This was subsequent to that.

Mr. HUBBELL. Most of my communication with the White House was through the White House Counsel's Office.

Senator SHELBY. Was that personally Mr. Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. I talked to Mr. Nussbaum, I talked to the new Deputy, I don't know exactly when he went on board, and I talked to Mr. Kennedy on a daily basis.

Senator SHELBY. Of your own knowledge, was the last person who had the billing records before you Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. Did you ever have any conversations with anyone, Mr. Hubbell, about whether any billing sheets or records existed after your testimony on December 1st?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. If so, with whom?

Mr. HUBBELL. With the Grand Jury in Little Rock, Arkansas, Mr. Hick Ewing, and my counsel.

Senator SHELBY. When you first heard that the billing records before you were found or discovered at the White House, what was your reaction?

Mr. HUBBELL. That Carolyn found them?

Senator SHELBY. Right.

Mr. HUBBELL. I smiled.

Senator SHELBY. Like the world?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I know Ms. Huber, and it just didn't surprise me that all of a sudden she discovered them.

Senator SHELBY. Discovered them on the table?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, discovered them in her office.

Senator SHELBY. Discovered them in her office. OK. But you had no idea where they were for the last year or two?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, no, I did not.

Senator SHELBY. Thank you.

Senator SARBANES. Senator Dodd.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What is it that you knew about Ms. Huber that caused you to smile and to make that observation?

Mr. HUBBELL. First of all, I felt sorry for her, but just that all of a sudden, oh, you're looking for the billing records, here they are. It just didn't surprise me that something like that happened. I read about it and I just smiled.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it correct, Mr. Hubbell, that you did not do any work on the IDC transactions?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. With respect to the regulatory matters involving IDC, that is the wet/dry matter or the sewer matter, did you do any work?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't do any work, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Knowing Mr. Ward as you do, Mr. Hubbell, do you think he would have had a reluctance in picking up the phone to inquire about the status of the various regulatory projects which were being handled by Rose?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't think Mr. Ward would have any involvement in the securities matter at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No. I'm talking about the latter two matters.

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There is a series of telephone conversations between Mr. Ward and Mrs. Clinton, which correspond to the work being done by Mr. Donovan and overseen by Mrs. Clinton relating to the wet/dry issue and the sewer issue. My question is directed based on your knowledge of Mr. Ward and his predilections. Would you find it unusual that he would pick up the phone and initiate contact with Mrs. Clinton about the status of those matters?

Mr. HUBBELL. I would find it not unusual at all that he would pick up the phone and, like a lot of clients, would want to know why it hadn't been done yesterday.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In fact, I take it from that answer, it would surprise you if he hadn't done so?

Mr. HUBBELL. If he wanted something, and it was important, then I would expect him to call every day until it was done.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To come back to the point I was making earlier about Mr. Alston Jennings' testimony, which was read to you from page 123 of the transcript of Mr. Jennings' deposition. And, of course, you haven't seen the transcript of that deposition, have you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I have not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, it was just taken yesterday. The question that was put to you from that deposition was:

Question: So, in your discussions with Mr. Ward, it was your understanding that neither he nor Mr. McDougal obtained any assistance from lawyers in preparing these letter agreements?

And Mr. Jennings said:

Answer: That was my very clear understanding, that the preparation of the agreements, the language of the agreements was, as far as Mr. Ward knew, not the product of any lawyer.

Then, continuing with Mr. Jennings' testimony:

Question: And Mr. Ward was familiar with the preparation of all three, so if lawyers were involved, he would have been aware of that?

Answer: Absolutely.

Question: And I think this is clear, but Mr. Ward never indicated to you that Mr. Hubbell assisted him in the preparation of those letter agreements?

Answer: He indicated to me that Mr. Hubbell's secretary typed, I think, just one of the agreements.

Question: And do you recall which one that was?

Answer: I think it was the third one or the one that included the Holman Acres.

He was questioned further at line 17:

Question: And to be as clear as we can, recognizing that this was many years ago, all three agreements were prepared over the space of a few days around September 24th?

Answer: That's correct.

Question: That's your best understanding?

Answer: Yes.

Question: And Mr. Ward was quite clear on that point?

Answer: Yes.

This is Mr. Jennings being questioned about his conversations with his former client, Mr. Ward. What I wanted to make clear, in answering that question and being referred to that transcript, was that the subject of that questioning was the early agreements for the purchase of the property, and the other agreements between Mr. Ward and Madison Bank at or around September 24, 1985, as compared with the option agreement, which was dated May 1986. That was not the subject of this questioning.

I think that would exhaust the questioning on this line for the moment, Mr. Chairman. We would cede that time back.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Senator Mack.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CONNIE MACK

Senator MACK. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator.

Senator MACK. I am going to ask that we put up on the Elmo a letter dated November 22, 1993, from Mr. Kendall back to Mr. Jones at the Rose Law Firm, and I do this for the purpose of identifying some files because that's the area of inquiry that I want to pursue. The three files, as I understand it, that are listed on here are first, the "Madison Guaranty Limited Partnership Application/Brokerage Activities," second would be the "Madison Guaranty Net Worth Preferred Stock Offering," and third, "Madison Guaranty Preferred Stock Offering." It is my understanding that you gave those files to Williams & Connolly; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Senator MACK. When did you give them to Williams & Connolly?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was when I met Mr. Kendall at his office in mid-November. I don't have the exact date in front of me.

Senator MACK. So it would have been sometime relatively near this November 22nd—

Mr. HUBBELL. Very close, yes.

Senator MACK. What prompted you to give those files to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. I gave all the files I had in my possession that related to the Clintons to Mr. Kendall in the month of November.

Senator MACK. I didn't hear that last part, I'm sorry.

Mr. HUBBELL. In the month of November.

Senator MACK. You say you gave him all of the files. Are you implying there were more files than these three that were identified?

Mr. HUBBELL. That belonged to the Clintons, yes, but not that related necessarily to Madison. I had a great deal of files in my basement, as I have told this Committee, and all of those were delivered to Mr. Kendall in November of 1993.

Senator MACK. So this letter only refers to three files?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. Let me ask you this question. There was a whole series of files, then, that you kept in your basement?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. Did you get all of those files at the same time?

Mr. HUBBELL. Within a short period of time in the month of January 1993.

Senator MACK. In the month of January 1993. Who did you get the files from?

Mr. HUBBELL. I got some of the files from Ms. Betsey Wright. I got some of the files from people within the firm who knew I was putting all the files together, including Mr. Foster.

Senator MACK. You received files from Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator MACK. And that would have been in January 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. The three files that are referenced in this letter, I got from Vince. Now, I don't remember whether it was Vince, Vince's secretary, or some other staff employee at the firm who handed them to me, but I knew what they were, and they were given to me by Vince.

Senator MACK. And this was in January 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. January 1993.

Senator MACK. What was going on in your life in January 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. A lot. I was moving to Washington, I was leaving the law firm, I was going to join the Justice Department, and I was working for the transition team at that time doing lots of things.

Senator MACK. Just one question that comes to mind. In retrospect, does it strike you as unusual that an individual, who I guess—at that time were you aware that you were going to be the Associate Attorney General?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I was not. I was not aware I was going to be Associate Attorney General. In fact, I didn't expect to be Associate Attorney General when I came to Washington.

Senator MACK. So these were given to you, then, because of your position on the transition team?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe, especially as it pertains to the Betsey Wright files, I was doing that in connection with the transition. Those files had been at the campaign. I got them, along with other files, and was going to try to determine what we were going to do with the files of the campaign and the transition.

Senator MACK. I'm just curious as to why it was you. I mean, wasn't Mr. Lindsey deeply involved?

Mr. HUBBELL. Everybody was real busy, and I was an attorney and was working on this specific issue, along with other counsels to the transition, and I knew Ms. Wright and I made the request to Ms. Wright to deliver them to me.

Senator MACK. Again, there were a number of files that came to you from different sources that were in your possession in January 1993. Betsey Wright was one of the individuals that gave you some files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Senator MACK. Vince Foster gave you some files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Either directly or through one of his people.

Senator MACK. Who else provided files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Hillary's secretary, Ms. Huber, myself.

Senator MACK. The other thing that catches your attention in this letter is the reference that these files were of the late Vince Foster, and I think you said just a moment ago specifically these three files were given to you either by Vince Foster or someone working on his behalf?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right. I think Mr. Kendall, when he wrote this letter, was actually mistaken. They weren't part of Vince Foster's files, other than that he had them at the firm, and he gave them to me. I think he was mistaken in the way he phrases this letter. I had the possession of those files from January 1993. I delivered them to Mr. Kendall.

Senator MACK. Where did Mr. Foster have these files? He wasn't the attorney of record?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. As I think we testified earlier, in 1992 there were specific issues raised about Mrs. Clinton's work before the Arkansas Securities Department, and these three files related to that.

Senator MACK. Were these original files, or were these copies?

Mr. HUBBELL. These were originals.

Senator MACK. I'm curious as to why you gave these files to the Clintons' attorney.

Mr. HUBBELL. I wanted to give the Clintons' attorney all the files that belonged to them or had any relation to them.

Senator MACK. Again, I'm not sure. There are some questions that come to mind. Why didn't these go directly back to Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. These weren't Madison files. They were Rose Law Firm files.

Senator MACK. Excuse me?

Mr. HUBBELL. These were the Rose Law Firm files on these three issues.

Senator MACK. But you said these were not Madison files. They were Whitewater files?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't say Whitewater. If I did, I'm sorry. They were Madison files. They were Rose Law Firm files on work we did for Madison Guaranty back in 1985.

Senator MACK. I really meant to ask you the question why didn't you return them to the Rose Law Firm as opposed to the Clintons' attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. Why didn't I return them? Because I was returning them to the Clintons' attorney because we kept them as part of the Clintons' files.

Senator MACK. Because you had kept them as part of the Clinton files does not make them the Clintons' files. Weren't these the Rose Law Firm's files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, they were.

Senator MACK. So why did you turn them over to the Clintons' attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did.

Senator MACK. I recognize that you did.

Mr. HUBBELL. If you think I made some conscious decision, I didn't. As soon as Mr. Kendall got them, he said he ought to send them back to the Rose Law Firm.

Senator MACK. But why did you give them to him?

Mr. HUBBELL. Why did I give them to him?

Senator MACK. Right.

Mr. HUBBELL. Because they related to the Clintons, and it was an issue that had been raised in the campaign.

Senator MACK. In your mind, the Madison files related to the Clintons. One of the things we've been hearing from the Clintons is that they had nothing to do with Madison. In fact, there was a comment about their activity being just peripheral. So what you're saying is in your mind, Madison equaled Clintons, therefore, return to Clintons' attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, Senator, that's not what I'm saying. What I'm saying is in 1992, people tried to say that Mrs. Clinton had substantial involvement at the Arkansas Securities Department when she was a lawyer at the Rose Firm. These files were the files of the Rose Firm which showed that she did not, and that's why I kept them, and Mr. Foster kept them, and then we delivered them to the Clintons' attorney who delivered them back to the firm.

Senator MACK. So you're now saying you returned them to Mr. Kendall. Did you instruct him to return them to the Rose Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not. I did not instruct him one way or the other.

Senator MACK. The other area that I want to pursue, even though my time is limited here, frankly, I'm amazed that this—I originally thought there were only three files, but I guess it was because I hadn't been paying attention earlier. There's a whole host of files that you received from many different sources that you had in your basement since January 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't have them in my basement. I had them in my possession. They ultimately ended up in my basement. I didn't have a basement until I moved to Washington.

Senator MACK. Fine. You had these files in your possession?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. Which I think is the significant point.

Mr. HUBBELL. I think so, too.

Senator MACK. You have had these files since January 1993. When did you become the Associate Attorney General?

Mr. HUBBELL. In May.

Senator MACK. And you did not turn these files over to anyone until November?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. There were some fairly significant concerns being raised about the Clintons, the White House. I believe you're aware of criminal referrals?

Mr. HUBBELL. I learned about the criminal referrals regarding some other individuals in, I believe, September, yes.

Senator MACK. The comment "other individuals" implies that there was no reference to the Clintons in those nine——

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator, I have never seen the criminal referrals. I don't know what's in them.

Senator MACK. The criminal referrals had to do with Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding was they did have to do with Madison.

Senator MACK. You had files of Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator MACK. I thought you just testified——

Mr. HUBBELL. I had the Rose Law Firm's files on work we did for Madison.

Senator MACK. Excuse me. You had Rose Law Firm files of work on Madison that you retained until November——

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. —1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator MACK. Now, you were Associate Attorney General of the United States?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator MACK. And you then turned those files over to the Clintons' attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator MACK. You don't find any problem with that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Absolutely not.

Senator MACK. Well, I think that is an indicator of the difficulties that the White House and this Administration has gotten into. I yield back my time.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR ROBERT F. BENNETT

Senator BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask one quick question and follow on with that?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator BENNETT. When Mr. Massey was here, Mr. Hubbell, he told of an instance where Mr. Foster came to him and asked him for files. Mr. Massey did not comply with that request immediately, which caused Mr. Foster to be upset and to ask him why the delay, and Mr. Massey said because I'm copying them. He insisted on making copies before turning the files over, and in the course of this examination made it clear that if he had known files that he considered to be the property of the Rose Law Firm were, in fact, being taken out of the firm, he would have raised a protest.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Senator BENNETT. Now are these the files that Mr. Massey insisted on making copies of?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know. I do believe when I took the files and left the firm, Mr. Massey had copies, but I don't know for sure what he copied. I believe he had copies when I left.

Senator BENNETT. These are the files—

Mr. HUBBELL. These are some of the files. I believe Mr. Massey made copies of all of the Madison files. That was what he told Mr. Foster he was going to do.

Senator BENNETT. OK. That's the point I wanted to discover, Mr. Chairman. If Mr. Massey's sense of legal ethics said to him, these files should not leave the law firm, at least not until I have made copies of them, but there was a sense of pressure on the part of Vince Foster that he wanted them out to the point where he was upset with Mr. Massey for delaying the supplying of the files, I find that somewhat significant.

Mr. HUBBELL. I have never read that Mr. Massey said that Mr. Foster intended to take the files. That was back in 1992 when we were both employed there.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't understand the significance of that last comment.

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, I thought the Senator was saying—maybe I'm wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. I still don't understand the significance of that comment.

Mr. HUBBELL. I thought the Senator was saying—and maybe I'm wrong—that Mr. Foster had told Mr. Massey that he was going to take the files out of the firm. I don't believe that's the truth.

Senator BENNETT. No, Mr. Foster did not tell Mr. Massey. Mr. Massey told us he was upset to discover they had been taken out of the firm. His only conversation with Mr. Foster was when Mr. Foster became upset with Mr. Massey over taking the time to make copies before delivering the files to them. It may well be if we hadn't had those copies, we might never have known about the records. I don't know.

I wanted to know if these were the same files that Mr. Massey insisted on making copies of—

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator Bennett, I disagree with that statement. I won't say anything.

Senator BENNETT. OK. I am trying to find out. So you are saying these are not the files?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I am saying you were making the implication that if Mr. Massey had not made copies, you wouldn't have these files. In fact, you have these files. Nothing was ever done with them. The originals were kept, secured, and are still in existence.

Senator BENNETT. I think that's fair, I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me—before I turn to Senator Sarbanes—make an observation. Mr. Massey, I believe, was quite upset when he ascertained that indeed the files had left the office; that is indisputable.

Mr. HUBBELL. That's fine.

The CHAIRMAN. Now let me go one step further. Had indeed the files been turned over, without copies being made, there is no reason to believe that the law firm would have had any files. The files remained at the law firm only because Mr. Massey made copies, and that was the Senator's point.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. The way I understood the Senator's point, I thought he and Mr. Hubbell had straightened it out between them.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the Senator had agreed to drop the matter, but I followed very carefully what his point was and, indeed, I wanted to make my own observation. That is my observation. Now let's put the full 10 minutes on the Senator's clock so that he can then proceed. Senator.

Senator SARBANES. As I understand it, the files that became available with respect to this matter were the files that came from Mr. Hubbell's basement. So the statement that it is only because Mr. Massey made copies that we got these files is not accurate because the files we got were, in fact, the files that were in Mr. Hubbell's basement which were then turned over to Mr. Kendall. We have this subsequent trail with respect to these files. Is that the point you were trying to make?

Mr. HUBBELL. My point is that these three files that deal with the securities issue were always, as far as I know, always intact and have never been missing or anything like that. They have always been in good shape and intact. That's the point I was trying to make.

Senator SARBANES. Now, the reason these files were, as it were, pulled or focused upon, was that queries were being raised, as I gather, during the course of the campaign. And these files were relevant to try to answer those queries?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. That's why you and Mr. Foster were seeking these files and were doing a review of the work that had been done, because questions were being raised about the amount and the nature of the work that had been done in the firm, and I take it primarily by Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. On the securities matter, yes, Senator.

Senator SARBANES. These files were part of a lot of other files that had nothing to do with any of the issues we are looking at; is that correct? I mean, in terms of what—

Mr. HUBBELL. What I turned over to Mr. Kendall?

Senator SARBANES. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I would say 99.9 percent had nothing to do with Madison Guaranty as far as I know. I am exaggerating, I am sorry. Certainly 99.9 percent is not a right number.

Senator SARBANES. But, in any event, there were a lot of files; most of which had nothing to do with any of the matters we are looking at?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Those files and these files were turned over to Mr. Kendall; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Hubbell, with respect to—

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CHRISTOPHER J. DODD

Senator DODD. May I raise one other question here before you go on, Richard? Our colleague from Utah has left and I don't have the transcripts in front of me, but it just seemed to me, and maybe my recollection isn't clear on this, that when Mr. Massey was testifying and the questions were raised as to why it was that it appeared Mr. Foster seemed impatient, I am not sure it was clear from Mr. Massey's testimony—someone can correct me here—as to why he seemed impatient, whether it was because of the press inquiries that were coming in at that time pretty heavily. I don't think Mr. Massey categorically said this was because Mr. Foster wanted to make copies of the files.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me see if I can refresh the witness' recollection with my recollection of Mr. Massey's testimony.

What he indicated in his testimony, I believe, was that Mr. Foster had come to him at the point where there had been the press inquiries. Everybody was scrambling around trying to pull information together. Mr. Foster had asked Mr. Massey to provide him with the material that Mr. Massey had, his files, relating to the Rose representation on the securities matter. That occurred on the afternoon of one day.

The next morning, Mr. Foster again asked Mr. Massey whether he had the materials for him. Mr. Massey stated that he hadn't gotten around to making the copies yet. Mr. Massey testified that he thought Mr. Foster was very abrupt with him, by reason of the fact that he had not yet gotten the material in shape sufficient to turn it over to Mr. Foster.

Mr. Massey indicated that he was in the process of photocopying them, he was doing it himself because he lacked other assistance at the firm, he had a lot of other matters to attend to, and he provided the photocopies to Mr. Foster.

Senator BENNETT. Now, my recollection is also the case that Mr. Massey's testimony was that the documents which were provided to Mr. Foster, which made their way to you in late 1992 or 1993 or thereabouts, were copies.

The record is very clear, number one, that the Committee has received all of that material, two, that Mr. Massey has been questioned extensively about it, three, that the material reflects all the work Mr. Massey did in connection with the securities representation for Madison and, four, that Mr. Massey's testimony is that there was a full set of all that material, indeed the originals of that material, in his office.

Indeed, your observation is correct in connection with the fact that Mr. Kendall perhaps unartfully described where this material came from. Mr. Foster had it at one point, but you provided it to Mr. Kendall and Mr. Kendall sent a copy or sent the copy that you had to the Rose Law Firm under the belief that this should be sent back to the Rose Law Firm.

In any event, the material was received by us from Mr. Kendall pursuant to our request for various documents. Over 50,000 pages of documents had been provided by that point, according to my recollection.

In answer to Senator Dodd's question, would it surprise you that Mr. Foster, having made a request on day one for the material from Mr. Massey and being told by Mr. Massey on day two that it was not yet available, might have been impatient?

Mr. HUBBELL. It doesn't surprise me.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, indeed, in terms of the ambience surrounding the request to collect all of these materials in order to answer the press inquiries that were being made at that time by, I take it, Mr. Gerth from The New York Times, would you agree that this was a hurry-up drill?

Mr. HUBBELL. All of them were hurry-up drills.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have some other questions that were raised earlier, but we concede.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time is remaining? Three minutes. You have 3 minutes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That will be fine.

The CHAIRMAN. We can start off with you with 3 minutes when we come back. We have been informed that there are as many as eight votes. This is going to be a very late session, so let me suggest to the witness and those who want to make accommodations for their schedule, et cetera, that we reconvene at 2:00 p.m. There is no way, even if you have just 10-minute votes, that we can continue any sooner than that. This way the Members of the Committee can attempt to do what we have to, eat lunch, et cetera.

Mr. Hubbell, this will give you an opportunity to have a break. For others who are interested, this will provide them an opportunity to do what they have to do. We will reconvene at 2 p.m. and, Mr. Ben-Veniste, you will start off.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. We stand in recess.

[Whereupon, at 11:54 a.m., the hearing was recessed, to be reconvened at 2:00 p.m. this same day.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. When we last left, Little Red Riding Hood was headed out into the woods.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that my cue to come in?

The CHAIRMAN. We will now proceed with Mr. Ben-Veniste. I don't want him to get mixed up with Little Red Riding Hood.

Mr. Ben-Veniste, you have 3 minutes. I'm going to ask that we put 5 minutes on and we'll resume.

Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I want to thank you for the extra 2 minutes. No one could confuse you with the Big Bad Wolf under those circumstances. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hubbell, let me start out where we left off earlier. It is correct, on the basis of my recollection, as Senator Bennett observed, that Mr. Massey's testimony was that he felt it was inappropriate for his files relating to the securities matter to be disseminated among people outside the firm. I want you to understand that is Mr. Massey's testimony, whether or not you agree with that proposition.

I want to go further on the issue relating to the question of the preservation of records and the issue of whether there was any suggestion connected to Mr. Foster's request of Mr. Massey that Mr. Massey provide him with a copy of the materials that Mr. Massey had generated in connection with his representation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan on the securities matter.

Now to go back in time, the request that Mr. Foster made with which you are familiar was a fact-gathering, hurry-up drill to respond to a press inquiry in early 1992 relating to the campaign and relating to work done in connection with Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The issue being whether Mr. Foster in some way was involved in some kind of an operation whereby records of the Rose Firm would be destroyed as opposed to reviewed for purposes of responding to the press inquiry, I will read from Mr. Massey's testimony before this Committee on page 94 where I am questioning him. Mr. Massey is asked:

Question: You are not suggesting here, are you, because we're dancing around this implication, that Mr. Foster was in some process to try to get the original files of the firm into somebody's hands so they could be destroyed? Was that the impression that you got?

Mr. Massey stated:

Answer: Absolutely not. That was not my impression.

Question: Because that seems to be the implication of some of the questions and you may not perceive that sitting down there but—

Mr. MASSEY. I don't perceive that.

Question: —we'll see that sliced and diced and appearing in the newspaper in some other context tomorrow unless we are very clear about it, so I want to make it very clear in my question to you as to whether you took Mr. Foster's request to you as implying that something untoward or improper was about to happen to these files?

Answer: I told you, again as I said earlier, my impression was he was putting together a—I have no reason to disbelieve him, he was putting a firm story together.

Question: Now in point of fact, Mr. Foster knew that you had made a copy of all of your materials at the time that you gave him the copy because you told him that?

Answer: Yes.

I think that's enough out of the transcript for you to be assured that it was not Mr. Massey's testimony or anyone's suggestion who was involved at the time that Mr. Foster's request was in some way related to destroying documents, but it was rather in all ways consistent with the firm being able to review the materials so as to give accurate answers to the inquiries that were being made.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have anything to add now that you have heard Mr. Massey's testimony repeated in context?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. Anybody who knew Vince Foster knows that he would never be involved in trying to assemble files so that they could be destroyed. What we were trying to do back then was assemble the files so we could know what happened. People were on the road, and we needed to find out what was in the files so that we could tell people what the truth was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, my red light is on.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hubbell, is this the fourth time you have been here?

Mr. HUBBELL. I couldn't tell you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I believe it is. You have been here a number of times.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Recognizing all that you have been through, I've made a very conscious and concerted effort to extend to you every possible courtesy. I hope you understand and realize that and I hope it's come through.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, it has, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. This may be a departure to a certain extent, but I want you to be as candid as you possibly can.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

The CHAIRMAN. Because I have some very real trouble with what I have heard so far on a particular issue, and, by the way, I don't think there should be, I am going to ask you to carefully think back to the document that you received. It is S 10097 from the FDIC, a memorandum to Chairman Hove from Douglas H. Jones, Acting General Counsel. We have referred to it before. I believe you have it in front of you.

Mr. HUBBELL. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Now share with me what we see at the top in terms of the faxing. This was obviously sent to the Justice Department by the FDIC, and you received it at 14:29; is that right? Take a look at the little fax marks.

Mr. HUBBELL. It says "sent by" and it's whited out. Then it says 2/17/94 14:29, so that's 2:30.

The CHAIRMAN. It came into the Justice Department at that point in time?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. And then what do we see transpired? You're a smart guy. You have looked at this thing. I'm asking you to give me what you would sense, by reading this document, took place?

Mr. HUBBELL. Above that, it says 2/17/94 15:01, which would be 3:00 p.m.

The CHAIRMAN. Right.

Mr. HUBBELL. It says 202-514-0238 DOJ/OAAG, which I would assume to be the Office of Associate Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. Right. They faxed it out.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I guess. I didn't deal with fax machines.

The CHAIRMAN. We received this from the White House—

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

The CHAIRMAN. —when we made our document request. So, Mr. Hubbell, is it safe to assume that this document came into either your possession or someone—I'm going to say into your possession because this document concerns—a key part of it is your testimony to the FDIC?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. Did I—

The CHAIRMAN. There's nothing wrong with this. Now look—

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what the question is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, is it safe to assume that you received this? This is the FDIC sending this to you at the Justice Department.

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know when this report came out. I recall getting a draft. I thought it was that morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Good. So you got this draft—

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I got a draft.

The CHAIRMAN. You got a draft. Is it safe to assume that it was this draft?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Senator. The reason being—and I am not trying to play games with you—I received a draft from Jack Smith. My memory was it was that morning. Now, I have been questioned by a lot of folks, and I think I have seen that fax's transmittal sheet.

The CHAIRMAN. But it did come to you?

Mr. HUBBELL. A draft did. Whether this is it or not, I don't know, but I assume it is, sure.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. A reasonable person would assume that this is the draft that you were sent from the FDIC, which encompasses some of the testimony you gave in connection with this matter which was a Rose representation?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. And the question of whether or not there was a conflict?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Within an hour, an hour plus 2 or 3 minutes—is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. —this was then sent to the White House. Now it was faxed out an hour later.

Senator SARBANES. Half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Within an hour it was sent out; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's what it appears to say.

The CHAIRMAN. And we get this, we being the Committee, from the White House; right? I am telling you we did, that we received this from the White House.

Mr. HUBBELL. I'll accept that, sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you send it there?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know. They probably asked for it.

The CHAIRMAN. They probably asked for it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall speaking to someone?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't recall, but I don't have my calendars with me. I might be able to help if I had my calendars with me.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I am going to ask Mr. Nields if you would make Mr. Hubbell's calendars available to the Committee staff, and we will ascertain whether or not we have to go in to examine it. Would you—

Mr. HUBBELL. I thought we had already done that. You have them.

The CHAIRMAN. So you don't recall at this time?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. And you don't recall at this time who may have asked—

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you dealing with anybody at the White House in connection with this?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm 80 percent sure that it would be Mr. Nussbaum.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. Now that begins to tell us a little story. You send this over to the White House. You don't have actual recollection that you sent it, but you wouldn't disbelieve that you ordered it sent over. I'm not saying that you faxed it yourself, but you told somebody to send it over.

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a fair assumption?

Mr. HUBBELL. A fair assumption is that I got this and that I asked somebody to send it over to Bernie's office. That would not surprise me at all, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. That's within about an hour that you had it sent over. You received it and within an hour you sent it over there.

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall, did anybody from the White House ask you to provide them with information with respect to Rose Law Firm transactions?

Mr. HUBBELL. On that day or overall?

The CHAIRMAN. During that period of time.

Mr. HUBBELL. This period of time was in February 1994. I would probably have been dealing with Mr. Kennedy, who was a former Rose Firm person, Mr. Klein, or perhaps Mr. Nussbaum. I believe it may have been Mr. Nussbaum.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you about Mr. Eggleston. Did you speak to him?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Eggleston?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. That's the New York accent, Mr. Eggleston.

Mr. HUBBELL. It is certainly possible that I talked to Neil. I just don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you aware of the fact that he was putting together a confidential memorandum in regard to the Resolution Trust Corporation and the work of the Rose Law Firm and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I was not.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not aware?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I was not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have a document entitled 1720, a memorandum, in front of you? Put it up on the Elmo.

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a memorandum sent to the First Lady from Harold Ickes dated March 1, re: Resolution Trust Corporation. Attached is a copy of Neil Eggleston's February 28th—you see—

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. —“1994 memorandum regarding certain issues involving the RTC and the Rose Law Firm.”

Mr. HUBBELL. I see this, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did anybody contact you with respect to making information available to Mr. Eggleston with respect to this?

Mr. HUBBELL. If they did, I would have complied. I just don't remember talking to Neil about it.

The CHAIRMAN. That's what I'm trying to find out. For example, if you sent this memorandum in compliance to that request because this memorandum was attached. Was the memorandum that came from the FDIC attached to Mr. Eggleston's report?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't recall that. I am being candid. If Mr. Nussbaum said when you get the report, send me a copy or send it to Neil, I would have done so.

The CHAIRMAN. But that's why I told you, and why I wanted to get a little more specific, that this wasn't just some document that was floating around and you had no way of knowing it went over. It is logical to assume that you directed this be sent to the White House?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't mean to say that I never did it. I just don't have any memory of doing it.

The CHAIRMAN. I just want to make it clear that it was sent over.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Just to follow up on this, Mr. Hubbell, you were interviewed by the FDIC in connection with this report; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was interviewed by the FDIC in connection with their investigation, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was in 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Late 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it was about 18 months after you had reviewed the Rose Law Firm records; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you understood when the FDIC talked to you that this was a serious matter?

Mr. HUBBELL. I understood that they were doing an investigation of the Rose Firm conflicts, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understand that an investigation by a Federal agency about whether there's a conflict of interest in the handling of Federal work is a serious matter; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I certainly understand that now.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, is it fair to say at the same time in 1993, you were preoccupied with other matters involving billing that are unrelated to this?

Mr. HUBBELL. That was another issue that was going on at that time, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So, in your mind, the notion of being investigated and asked questions would have been something that would have been a pretty notable event at this period of time while you were the Associate Attorney General; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have to say that that's not true.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was not a notable event?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was not a notable event.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's surely not common for high-ranking Justice Department officials to be the subjects of investigation as opposed to those who are doing the investigating.

Mr. HUBBELL. I understand that. I just had a lot going on.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is there any reason that you would have withheld information deliberately from the investigators?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I would not have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that this issue of the conflict of interest of the Rose Law Firm opened up the whole question of what the Rose Law Firm did for Madison Guaranty and for Madison Financial back in the mid-1980's; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding was that they were looking at the issue of the conflict to determine whether there was a conflict. I didn't understand that they were going to be looking at everything the Rose Law Firm ever did for Madison. I just didn't understand that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that the whole issue of the conflict revolved around the work and the relationship between the law firm and Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't see it that way, Mike.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't think they were going to get into what work was done for Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And they, in fact, told them about your knowledge of work that the firm had done in connection with the securities issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that issue of work came out on the table when you talked to the investigators?

Mr. HUBBELL. They asked me about it, I believe, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now in your mind, had you made a decision that you were going to be very narrow in the way you answered questions; in other words, you were going to wait to see if they asked you specific questions and give answers as opposed to volunteering things?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't make a conscious decision at all. I got a call from Jack Smith. He said we need to come over and interview you, and I said come on.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is Jack Smith?

Mr. HUBBELL. The General Counsel for the FDIC.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is he a friend?

Mr. HUBBELL. I wouldn't say he's a friend, but I certainly knew him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He didn't do the interview, though; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I can't tell you who did the interview at this point.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There were investigators, I assume, who did it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I thought Jack came over, but maybe I was wrong.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The General Counsel himself may have came over for the interview?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't have those records in front of me, but I know that Jack called me back and had some further questions.

Mr. CHERTOFF. About what?

Mr. HUBBELL. I wish I knew. I can't tell you off the top of my head, but they set up a conference call where they called back after they interviewed me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was in on the conference call?

Mr. HUBBELL. The FDIC.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I beg your pardon?

Mr. HUBBELL. The FDIC and me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. All right. Now at some point you were asked a question about documents that had been drafted that were involved in the Ward litigation; right? I'll direct your attention to page 4 of this FDIC report, the very bottom of the text portion right before the footnotes. It says:

Mr. Hubbell also confirmed in an interview that he had not——

Mr. HUBBELL. What page?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Page 4.

Mr. HUBBELL. All right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It states:

Mr. Hubbell also confirmed in an interview that he had not drafted any documents that were involved in the Ward litigation.

You were familiar with the Ward litigation; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was familiar with it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because Mr. Ward, in fact, tried to get you to represent him in it?

Mr. HUBBELL. He did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You referred him to Mr. Jennings?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I declined to take on the representation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And he went to Mr. Jennings?

Mr. HUBBELL. He went to Mr. Jennings.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You attended the trial?

Mr. HUBBELL. I attended parts of the trial.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Including the closing argument?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew the option had come up in the trial.

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that, but I am not surprised that it came up in the trial.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew as of 18 months before that Mrs. Clinton had had a number of conversations with Mr. Ward during the period of time relating to these Castle Grande transactions?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that she had worked on the option because you had seen it with your own eyes when you looked at the records 18 months before?

Mr. HUBBELL. I looked at the bills. I didn't focus on the fact that she had prepared the option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you focus on the fact that she had numerous conversations with Seth Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you didn't bring that up in the context of this discussion with the FDIC people?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you saw the report, did you say to yourself, maybe I ought to tell them that there was some additional work that was done that involved Mrs. Clinton and Seth Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think I'm out of time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Hubbell, this report we're talking about of the FDIC, do you have it in front of you, February 17, 1994?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do.

Senator SARBANES. On the cover, there was a memorandum to the Chairman from the Acting General Counsel; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. It says:

As you requested, we have reviewed the FDIC's 1989 retention of the Rose Law Firm with respect to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. Attached is a report on our review and findings. As you can see from the report, we found no basis to conclude that the retention involved a conflict of interest by the law firm. Accordingly, we are not recommending any sanctions against the firm.

Then it says "Attachment" and the attachment is the Legal Division report on the retention of the Rose Law Firm for the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan conservatorship; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. It's my understanding the FDIC released this report that very day. Do you know whether that's the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. My recollection was that I received a call from Mr. Smith who said they were going to release the report that day. I asked if I could get a copy of it, and he said since we're releasing it today, I see nothing wrong with that, and he sent me a copy. That's why I had some recollection that I may have received the draft that morning as opposed to that afternoon, and then it appears that that afternoon, I received the final version.

Senator SARBANES. There was a story apparently in the paper the next day—this was on the 18th—saying the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation issued a report yesterday saying it would not seek legal sanctions against the Rose Law Firm of Little Rock. Apparently, at about the time you were sending this over to the White House, the FDIC was releasing it. Was that your understanding?

Mr. HUBBELL. That was my understanding. They were going to release it that day.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So it is consistent with your recollection, Mr. Hubbell, that sending the White House a courtesy copy of that which had been sent to you was sent by you on the understanding that the FDIC was going to make a public release of that document that very same day?

Mr. HUBBELL. Absolutely.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And, indeed, they did so?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have the release in our Committee, and I believe we were even sent a copy of that release on that day.

You say you attended the closing argument in the trial of the Ward versus Madison case; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You were asked a question as to whether you had some understanding as to whether the option agreement was an important document or issue in that case. We know that the option agreement was the subject of testimony in the case, but do you have any understanding of whether that document was an important issue in the trial?

Mr. HUBBELL. I recall the issue being the commissions and whether the commissions had been paid or not as being the focus of the lawsuit.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you understand on the basis of your information as of the time you attended the trial as to whether that option was ever exercised?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not know one way or the other.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It is our understanding here that the option was indeed never exercised, but did you have some idea of a theory as to how that document could be a critical document in the Ward versus Madison trial?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't, not one way or the other. I don't understand the option issue.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, Mr. Jennings was deposed by our Committee just yesterday, and earlier this morning, Majority Counsel referred you to a portion of it, and I showed you another portion. I would like to refer to Mr. Jennings' testimony of February 6th at page 37. Again, this is Mr. Jennings testifying about the trial in which he participated as Mr. Ward's counsel. He was asked:

Question: So, just to recap the position of Mr. Ward during this litigation, hopefully succinctly, was that he was owed some commissions, at least $300,000 worth. The evidence of that amount owed was the promissory note that Madison executed in his favor for $300,000?

Answer: Well, it was in lieu of $300,000 in cash. They told him they didn't have the money to pay him.

Question: And the transaction relating to the loan, the $400,000 loan secured by Holman Acres was independent of the commissions?

Answer: My understanding it was totally independent of the commissions.

Question: Likewise, the May 1, 1986 option?

Answer: Totally independent, as far as I knew.

Is that testimony by Mr. Jennings before this Committee in deposition inconsistent with any understanding you have of the facts involved in that dispute?

Mr. HUBBELL. It's not inconsistent with the facts. Mr. Jennings would know. He's the one who tried the lawsuit.

Senator SARBANES. We'll pass it back.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Faircloth.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR LAUCH FAIRCLOTH

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hubbell, when you last testified here, you said that David Kendall went to your home and retrieved files from the campaign known as the Betsey files.

Mr. HUBBELL. I did say that, yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Given Mr. Kendall's reputation, I'm going to assume that all of the documents that he had which were subpoenaed had been turned over. I don't think Mr. Kendall would have held out any documents, do you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. I'm assuming Bob Barnett was being honest with the Committee when he catalogued documents that came from Vince Foster's office which were carried over by Maggie Williams in a box to the residence. Would you not agree that Mr. Barnett is a reputable attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Barnett is a very reputable attorney.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. This being the case, Mr. Chairman, what we have is documents with Vince Foster's handwriting on them that were not in Mr. Hubbell's possession, nor were they among the documents that Maggie Williams took from Mr. Foster's office 2 days after his death. So we are forced to some pretty narrow conclusions, that these documents were either in the White House the entire time or that they came out of Mr. Foster's office on the night of his death and no attorney had seen them until now.

If this is the case, either the White House has obstructed justice or we didn't get the truth about what Maggie Williams took out of his office that night. I don't see how we could draw any other conclusion.

Mr. Hubbell, on DKSJ 29011—do we have that document there? It's a memo that you were sent on the Castle Grande matter.

Mr. HUBBELL. Are you referring to a reference in the bill that said I sent a memo?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. I only have the number here, DKSJ—it's on the screen there.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You were sent a memo on the Castle Grande matter in October, and this is one of the first items on the IDC/Castle Grande matter, but after this one entry, it seems that you trail off and Mrs. Clinton becomes one of the main actors talking to your father-in-law on many occasions involving the IDC/Castle Grande matter. Do you have any idea what the nature of the conversations would have been?

Mr. HUBBELL. With Mrs. Clinton and between my father-in-law and Mrs. Clinton?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Why was Mrs. Clinton involved in the issue? Why did your father-in-law need her, do you know?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding was that she and other partners in the firm were looking at matters involving the wet/dry issue, whether you could or couldn't drink in a certain county or township in Arkansas, and certain issues arising out of Castle Water and Sewer.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. I have a lot of trouble with this. Mrs. Clinton was one of the top 100 lawyers in the Nation, so we were told, and she's working very closely with your father-in-law on what proves to be a sham deal, very much so. I find it hard to believe she could be this involved and not know it was a sham deal. Do you think that's possible, that she didn't know?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that it was a sham deal, but I certainly don't believe Mrs. Clinton believed it was, nor did my father-in-law.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You don't think all these floats back and forth were a sham deal?

Mr. HUBBELL. What I know of the transaction is that the property was bought and then sold and that's what our firm worked on. It was sold to some very reputable people in Arkansas, including Senator Fulbright, and if somebody told me they sold 100 acres to Senator Fulbright, I wouldn't assume it was a sham deal, and I don't today.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. If these transactions and so-called land flips aren't sham deals, then I don't understand what one is. Let me ask you, why did you not disclose to Ms. Breslaw the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan in connection with Castle Grande?

Mr. HUBBELL. At the time I talked to her about it, to be honest, I don't believe I remembered that we closed that transaction. I want to try to put this in context. Our firm represented Madison. We represented Madison for some 15 months. Five years later, we get a call and they say Madison has sued their accountant, can you take that litigation over. I looked at it in that context, that we were simply being rehired by the same client, and that's the way I looked at the conflict. Right or wrong—if I'm wrong, I'm wrong. The facts bear it out, but at that time I was simply looking at it as we had represented this client 5 years earlier, the client had hired another lawyer to sue its accountant, and we were asked on behalf of that same client to take over litigation that had already begun.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Seth Ward had the reputation of being a man of all business, talked business, pretty much concentrated on business and not much else; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. He was a client of yours while you were at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. As well as a client of Hillary Clinton's?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that Mr. Ward personally was a client of Mrs. Clinton's, but he was certainly a client of the firm and she may have done some work for him in that respect. She did a lot of work with him on behalf of another client of the firm.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Did you know Seth Ward was involved with Jim McDougal in the Castle Grande development?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Did he tell you or did you know that he got a $1 million nonrecourse loan and a $300,000 commission?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew that he got that loan and I knew that he claimed and won a lawsuit over that commission, yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You still contend that you don't think that transaction was what would be called a sham transaction. You think that was a clean-cut land deal?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was a land deal, and I have not been presented the evidence that apparently this Committee has, but from what I know of it and knew then, it was a real estate transaction where property was bought and property was then sold. I know because I represented the FDIC in Frost, and subsequent parts of the parcels that were sold had some questionable aspects to them, but the original transaction I don't necessarily allude to as a sham deal, Senator.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Did Mr. Ward ever ask your advice about the trade?

Mr. HUBBELL. Trade, sir?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. The deal, the land deal?

Mr. HUBBELL. He told me what had happened, yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. He didn't ask your advice on how to do it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. He was certainly capable of taking care of the transaction on his own.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. The last time you were here, I asked you whether you had met with Jim Guy Tucker on September 5, 1993, and you said no. Now, I would like to ask you, did you speak or meet with Governor Tucker in September or October 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall talking to or seeing Governor Tucker until the funeral of the President's mother.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. So you did not meet with him in September or October 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. When you began service over at the Justice Department, when you arrived at the Department of Justice, had someone prepared a briefing book for you to become familiar with the important issues that were coming before the Justice Department?

Mr. HUBBELL. They did not prepare it for me. They prepared it for the Attorney General designate.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Was there anything in the briefing book relating to the criminal referrals or investigation of Madison or Whitewater in any way?

Mr. HUBBELL. The books I reviewed didn't have anything about Madison. I don't know that I saw all the books, but the ones I reviewed, they had nothing about Madison.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. None of the briefing books had anything on Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. None of the ones that I reviewed. There were lots of briefing books prepared, so I can't say every book, but I can say of the ones I looked at, nothing was there about Madison.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Who is Jack Palladino? Do you know him?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I know of Mr. Palladino. I don't know that I have ever met him personally.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. What were his duties during the campaign, do you know?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe he was hired as a lawyer and investigator to do certain research on matters that came up during the campaign.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You got Jack Palladino's phone number from Betsey Wright in June 1993 and you have told the Committee in the past under oath that the call may have been for a reference for Loretta Lynch regarding the President's genealogy chart which Palladino did during the campaign, or you may have been calling to advise him to give up any files he had to the Clintons' personal attorney. Now in June 1993—

Senator SARBANES. Is that from previous testimony given by Mr. Hubbell?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe he's got it a little mixed up, but I'll be glad to clear it up when he finishes his question.

Senator SARBANES. All right.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. In June 1993, the Clintons did not yet need or have a personal attorney and Betsey Wright, who, upon your request, gave you the Palladino phone number, said it was for something else completely. Would you please tell us what Betsey Wright is talking about and what this was all about? Betsey Wright was completely contradictory to what you had said.

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what Betsey is saying. I believe when I testified before, I was trying to surmise why I might have been given Mr. Palladino's phone number by Betsey and those were the three things that came to my mind, a recommendation on Loretta Lynch, an issue regarding a brother or step-brother of the President, or possibly to turn the files over, but I don't know for sure. Whatever Ms. Wright said, I'm sure if she testified that she knows why she gave that to me, she does, but I don't know what she said, so it's hard—

Senator FAIRCLOTH. She said it was on a military issue.

Mr. HUBBELL. A military issue?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. That perks my curiosity.

Mr. HUBBELL. It perks mine, too, but I don't remember that.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Why would the Deputy Attorney General be calling a private detective on a military issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know. It doesn't ring a bell to me, Senator. I would have to ask Betsey, and I haven't, in order to know what she's talking about.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. On June 16, 1993, you met with Betsey Wright. Do you remember the meeting?

Mr. HUBBELL. When was this?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. June 16, 1993. You met with Betsey Wright. Do you remember the meeting?

Mr. HUBBELL. June 16, 1993, no, I don't recall that. It's certainly possible, but I don't recall it.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You don't have any recollection of that meeting. Mr. Hubbell, on July 30, 1993, according to your daily calendar, you traveled to Chicago for the day?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. This was 10 days after Vince Foster's death?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Seven days after the funeral?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Would you tell us what the nature of the trip to Chicago was?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, sir.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. What was it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I gave a speech to the Federal Magistrates Association and then returned home. Federal magistrates being the Federal judges—the label “magistrates”—I gave a speech to them and came back.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Hubbell, your father-in-law, Mr. Ward, and brother-in-law, Mr. Ward, each called you dozens of times while you were at the Department of Justice. Would you mind telling us why they were calling so much?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was in almost daily contact with my father-in-law and brother-in-law for a long period of time because we had been involved in litigation. As I left Arkansas, there were still matters that needed to be cleaned up or matters that they wanted my advice on, and I gave them that advice. One matter involved bills or moneys that were allegedly owed from my brother-in-law to my law firm. That's why I talked primarily to my brother-in-law. My father-in-law was checking on me as a family member, but also was involved in the matter of cleaning up some of his affairs and would tell me what was going on.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Was this cleaning up having to do with Castle Grande or Madison issues?

Mr. HUBBELL. One of the issues was that he was attempting to settle with Madison, and he informed me of what his lawyer was recommending.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's all I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Hubbell, as I understand it from the previous questions, you went to Chicago on July 30th and spoke to the Federal Magistrates Association?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. The question noted that this was 10 days after the death of Vince Foster—

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. —and 7 days after his funeral.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. Did going to speak to the Federal Magistrates Association in Chicago on July 30th have any connection with the death of Vince Foster or with his funeral?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. None at all?

Mr. HUBBELL. None at all. It was a commitment I had made and that I kept.

Senator SARBANES. Even though the fact was that it occurred 10 days after Foster's death, it just happened you went on about your schedule?

Mr. HUBBELL. It had been scheduled, and I think by that time I was back in Washington.

Senator SARBANES. The fact that it was 7 days after the funeral just happened?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. It had nothing to do with the speech. The speech had been scheduled a long time before that.

Senator SARBANES. I understand. Thank you very much.

Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I want to give you the opportunity to add anything to your response with respect to the conversation with or about Mr. Palladino, Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. HUBBELL. When I was asked before, why would Betsey have given you his number, I believe I tried to guess as to why it was.

I don't know what Betsey said, but if she said it was for such-and-such reason, I would believe it. I just don't know what she said.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We don't have that transcript. We're going to try to find it and help you with it because there isn't going to be any secret about it, but in terms of the testimony that you have provided before this Committee in deposition, you did indeed indicate that there was an issue with respect to the President's genealogy with respect to his half-brother—

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. —that Mr. Palladino was asked to provide some assistance on?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Palladino had done some work on that issue during the campaign and the file that I delivered to the White House was his work.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go now back to the issue involving your knowledge of the transactions under which the large tract of land was acquired by Madison and your father-in-law from the IDC. That was in excess of a thousand acres?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you have indicated that it was your view, contemporaneous with having learned about the deal from your father-in-law, that you did not think that there was anything inappropriate or improper in connection with the acquisition?

Mr. HUBBELL. With the acquisition, no.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In terms of the purchase price, we have had testimony from the attorney who represented the seller as well as Mr. Thrash and Mr. Fitzhugh, all of whom have testified under oath that the price which was paid for the land was the subject of hard bargaining between the parties—I notice that you're smiling. Do you have any comment on that observation by those individuals who testified here?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, I know who was bargaining on one side and I know who was bargaining on the other, and I find it hard to believe there wasn't a lot of hard bargaining. My recollection is that the owners, Industrial Development Company, felt the land was very, very valuable, and that Mr. Ward was equally as adamant that he was going to get it as cheaply as possible for Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The price, I think, that was paid for the land was $1,750,000?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. According to the testimony we have heard and some of the documents we have reviewed, it appeared that there were outstanding mortgages and loans on that property in excess of $2½ million. Would that provide additional indication that the price which was paid for the land was not excessive?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm not a real estate appraiser, but I knew about the land because I had been on the city board and as we would try to attract industry to Little Rock, that was one of the primary sites we would try to use. It's not a piece of property that no one was not familiar with. There was some knowledge in the community, people knew the banks were owed a lot of money on it. Looking back on it 12 years ago, I have to say that $1,750,000 for 1 thousand acres sounds like they got a pretty good deal to begin with.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To set the floor here, we've heard no evidence from any person involved in that transaction or seen any document to indicate that the price that was paid for the land in the first place was excessive or that there was some flip going on at the time it was acquired.

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my understanding, and that's what I was trying to focus on, the initial purchase.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Right. And the initial purchase was the only transaction that the Rose Firm played any role in in terms of at least Mr. Thrash attending the closing?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you have said, and the evidence supports it and we have all this material from Pillsbury Madison & Sutro who evaluated it, that, subsequently, portions of the land were then sold off, and there were transactions between individuals who could be regarded as insiders who were not dealing on an arm's length basis?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my understanding.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You would have had some pretty direct knowledge of that because, as you say, this was a subject in connection with the later transactions that were involved in the case that you were handling against the auditing firm, Frost & Company?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Clearly, there is a distinction to be drawn between the acquisition of property after hard bargaining and the subsequent sale and resale and resale again and resale again of portions of that property among inside persons who may not have been dealing on an arm's length basis?

Mr. HUBBELL. There is that distinction. I can't today tell you who was buying and selling after that, but I can tell you on the first go-around, it looked like a good deal for Madison.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further at this time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Bond.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR CHRISTOPHER S. BOND

Senator BOND. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Welcome, Mr. Hubbell. I want to follow up on a couple of points made earlier today. We very much appreciate your testimony because this helps us fill in some very key areas. You were managing partner of the Rose Law Firm during what period?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm not sure I actually ever officially had that title, but in the same role that Mr. Kennedy had after me and Mr. Clark has now, I believe I played that role essentially from 1986 to about 1988.

Senator BOND. Now during that time, did you have a policy in the Rose Law Firm about the control of the files and the client's right, if any, to control those files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I'm aware of.

Senator BOND. So it is your testimony that the Rose Law Firm was not constrained by consent of the client to reveal the contents of any files to someone who either was a partner in the law firm or a former partner in the law firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't mean to say that. You asked if we had a policy, and I don't believe we had a policy. But, certainly, how we handled a client's files and business is subjected to whatever agreement we had with the client, plus the Code of Professional Responsibility and the Model Rules of Conduct.

Senator BOND. To what extent do you feel those constraints limit your ability to share the files of a client with persons other than the attorneys employed by the firm working on the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have to say, I felt no restraint within the firm.

Senator BOND. Did that apply to former partners of the firm? Could you share those files with people who had been partners of the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think it would relate to whether that partner had worked on the file. I don't remember that coming up, but it certainly could have, Senator.

Senator BOND. Was there any constraint in the Rose Law Firm on the ability of the persons in control of the files to share those files with any partners? Did you have to get consent of the client to share those with people who were not partners working on the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. If they were employees of the firm, subject to some individual agreement with the client, I'm not aware of any restrictions that may have applied.

Senator BOND. May I ask you, was it the policy of the law firm to share the files with someone who was not a partner of the law firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not an employee of the firm?

Senator BOND. Not an employee of the firm.

Mr. HUBBELL. No, except for several circumstances where partners left the firm who took files with them because they were going to continue to practice, and we were going to continue to represent those clients.

Senator BOND. Was that done with the consent of the client?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have to say in the two circumstances I'm thinking of, I'm not sure whether we got the consent of the client or not.

Senator BOND. Would it have been your policy not to share the files without the consent of the client?

Mr. HUBBELL. What I'm trying to say is we didn't have a policy. We had some restrictions that applied, but they weren't policies. There wasn't a written policy of the firm about client's files.

Senator BOND. Now earlier this morning you answered questions about the Madison Guaranty files.

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Senator BOND. And you said those were Madison Guaranty files.

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Senator BOND. In the time that we're speaking about, the questions in 1992 and 1993, Madison Guaranty had been taken over by the RTC, had it not?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator BOND. Was the RTC at that time then in the position of the client?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know the answer to that question. I know that was an issue in 1992, as to who was the client in connection with Madison that might be able to waive a privilege, an attorney-client privilege.

Senator BOND. You did not discuss, therefore, the sharing of the Madison files with others during that time period. Did you seek any clarification?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not. The point, I think correctly, is that I never called the RTC, and I do not believe Mr. Foster or Mr. Massey or anybody else did, to my knowledge, to say we have this inquiry. We want you to waive the privilege. We didn't do that to the RTC.

Senator BOND. Mr. Hubbell, in the latter part of 1993, what was your position in the Department of Justice?

Mr. HUBBELL. Associate Attorney General.

Senator BOND. As Associate Attorney General, would you have felt comfortable sharing the files of the Federal agency with a private attorney?

Mr. HUBBELL. It depends on who that attorney was.

Senator BOND. A private attorney.

Mr. HUBBELL. A file of—

Senator BOND. A Federal agency.

Mr. HUBBELL. A Justice Department file that I just turn over to a private attorney?

Senator BOND. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Who had no connection to the litigation or whatever we were working on?

Senator BOND. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm trying to understand your question.

Senator BOND. Well, let me be quite frank. I am very much troubled about the way you handled the files, and I'm trying to find out what the policy was, whether the Rose Law Firm had any strictures on the sharing of files. The RTC was engaged in litigation and its file on the FDIC continues that litigation. The subject of that litigation involved Madison Guaranty and the efforts by the Government to recover for the RTC sums lost through the Madison Guaranty. You had files which came into your possession—I believe you said it was September that you knew that there had been criminal referrals involving Madison Guaranty, was it not?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe by sometime in September I was aware that there was a criminal referral involving Mr. McDougal and Madison.

Senator BOND. I am very puzzled why in November you felt it appropriate to share those files, to turn over those files to Mr. Kendall, who is a private attorney. He may or may not have had other clients who were involved, but certainly some of his clients had connections with Madison Guaranty. What was the justification for turning over those files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me see if I can help. The files we're talking about, those three files, were Rose Law Firm files of work done for Madison. They weren't Madison's files, OK?

Senator BOND. I don't—

Mr. HUBBELL. We can talk about that, but I'm trying—

Senator BOND. I think you're dead wrong on that. They are files that were Madison Guaranty files. Madison Guaranty was taken over by the RTC.

Mr. HUBBELL. But they weren't Madison's files. They were the Rose Firm's files. There's a difference.

Senator BOND. Ah, yes. Well, now, wait a minute. These were files of a client, were they not?

Mr. HUBBELL. They were files of work done by the firm for a client. There's a difference.

Senator BOND. You see no problem with sharing files of work done by the law firm for a client without that client's consent?

Mr. HUBBELL. With the counsel for the lawyer who was working on the file, no.

Senator BOND. Mr. Hubbell, it's obvious that we operate under different standards. Let me move on to the review and the pulling of the files back. I believe the computer printouts show that the files were printed out on February 12, 1992. How do you go about pulling those files? What did you have to do to get them out?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think several things—

Senator BOND. Pardon me, let me clarify and say the billing records of February 12, 1992.

Mr. HUBBELL. What I understand you have to do—and I'm not sure I did it—there is a computer system at the firm and somebody who understands computers, not me, would go into the computer records for Madison and pull up what appears to be the first few pages of what the Committee has. In addition, they would have pulled up or found copies of the firm's records, bills sent to the clients, and what is called a billing memoranda, which is usually a computer-generated document that is the backup or what the lawyer uses to prepare a bill.

Senator BOND. You were not able to do this so you called on someone to do it. Do you recall who did this for you?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall who did it. Mr. Foster or I would have asked somebody in the accounting department to do it. I remember specifically one other issue we weren't able to find the records on, but that was one on which I was having direct conversations.

Senator BOND. To your knowledge, were any other copies of those billing records made other than the ones prepared for you?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding was that Mr. Massey made copies, but I may be wrong. I remember Mr. Massey telling Mr. Foster he was going to make copies of all the files, but I don't know if he did or not.

Senator BOND. According to information we've already received, you had a conversation approximately 12 days later, on February 24th, with Ms. Susan Thomases about the billing records. Do you recall that conversation?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not recall the conversation, but I'm sure that I had it.

Senator BOND. Do you recall whether you had the billing records in front of you when you talked with Ms. Thomases or any others about the billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Senator BOND. Do you recall having any other conversation with other campaign officials about the billing records which had come into your possession?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe that I talked to Ms. Loretta Lynch about them. I believe I did, but I may not have. There may have been others, too.

Senator BOND. But you do not recall who or when you talked with others?

Mr. HUBBELL. This is all in the same time period, but I don't recall the specifics. Loretta was one of those people that I might have talked to. There were other people who worked in the campaign on issues like this, but who I specifically was talking to, I don't know.

Senator BOND. How often did you discuss with people in the campaign the billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that often. I mean, this was one issue. The issue lasted as long as it was until Mr. Gerth came out with his article, it was an issue from the moment it came up until he came out with the article. People would call and ask me questions.

Senator BOND. These were people from the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator BOND. Would it have been Mr. Lindsey?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Senator BOND. Ms. Wright?

Mr. HUBBELL. I just don't know about that, Senator, whether Ms. Wright did or not.

Senator BOND. Did you talk with President Clinton or Mrs. Clinton about them?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not. Let me go back. I think I've said that it's hard for me to believe that I didn't talk to Mrs. Clinton about this issue at some point. The best of my memory is that it happened after the first net of responses had come out, but I may be wrong. It's just hard for me to believe that I didn't, but I don't have any recollection of doing it. My best memory is that Vince is the one who had talked to Mrs. Clinton about it.

Senator BOND. Now when the article by Mr. Gerth came out—I believe it was March 8th—obviously that was a major concern within the inner circle. Did you discuss the billing records in light of that article with anybody? Did you prepare any memoranda? Did you receive any memoranda or telephone calls about the billing records in the period right after March 8th when the article appeared in The New York Times?

Mr. HUBBELL. My recollection was that the issue about the bills to some extent died down after the first flurry of articles.

Senator BOND. When the article first came out, did you discuss the question with representatives of the campaign or the Clintons?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think that happened before the article even came out, Senator. I think they knew it was coming, and they wanted to get as much information as possible before they responded.

Senator BOND. You transmitted some information to persons you cannot recall prior to the publication of the article, but you do not recall any conversations after the article appeared?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall any conversations after the article, but when I say "article," I don't focus on one article. I focus on an issue. This was an issue. I'm sure that Mr. Gerth was not the only one who wrote about it, but they went on to other issues after that. That's the way I put it in my mind. You say specific people. I read where Ms. Thomases has notes of our conversation. I don't doubt that. I mean, I know that I talked to somebody. If it was Susan, it was Susan. I don't doubt that. It's likely that it could have been Susan on this issue.

Senator BOND. Thank you, Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me be very brief. The issue that was brought out moments ago about your view of files generated by the firm, in terms of legal research and memoranda and the like, is it your experience that attorneys frequently take that material with them when they leave the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. It has been my experience at the firm that that occurred.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it also your experience that materials that are generated, essentially work product, for a client are the subject often of articles about the particular legal issues that could be drawn upon?

Mr. HUBBELL. If you're talking real generality, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes, I want to be more general before we get to the specific.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. On this issue, because people watching this presume a fact maybe that's not in evidence, but people who are paying attention to these hearings are not all attorneys, for sure, and the practices of attorneys in law firms and what they do with their files and how they treat them is a subject that many people aren't familiar with, I would like to get your understanding. The issue of whether a lawyer's work product are some kind of crown jewels that are owned only by the client who pays the bill and, therefore, can't be used for any other purpose is contrary to my own experience, but you're the witness and I would like to get your general understanding of what happens in the real world in connection with such files.

Mr. HUBBELL. It really depends on what it is. If, for example, you go to a lot of trouble and prepare the ultimate brief, that usually goes in a brief bank somewhere where it's used on a bunch of other cases, usually within the firm, but if the lawyer leaves the firm, he might take all of his briefs with him. If you develop a contract that you're especially proud of, that might leave as well.

The issue is the privilege. Obviously, there are documents that are the client's. If a client comes in and gives me a piece of paper that belongs to him and says keep this until the litigation is over, you usually return it to the client after the matter is over. There's a difference between the client's files and the law firm's files.

Then there are individual agreements with specific clients. You might have a client that says if you do this, I want you to do it under these circumstances and you can agree or disagree, but it's all part of the deal. As to any individual piece of paper generated in the firm, it may or may not be privileged, it may or may not belong to the client, even though, as you said, the client pays for it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In this connection we have had and looked at Mr. Massey's materials which are the subject of these questions. We first find that they were generated in 1985 in response to specific inquiries about the appropriateness of a particular course of action under Arkansas securities and banking law.

In all respects, it has been testified that these files are completely innocuous. There is no smoking gun in the files. There's nothing improper that Mr. Massey did. There is nothing that's reflected in the files that suggests any untoward motive or intent by any party associated with this issue 11 years ago.

Now the question arises of whether somehow this is a bad thing which happened as a result of Mr. Massey giving Mr. Foster a copy of those files, Mr. Foster reviewing them, the files coming into your possession, you turning them over to Mr. Kendall, and Mr. Kendall sending them back to the firm. We've completed the circuit here, but is there something bad that happened as a result of all that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not in my opinion. I mean, I had been asked to be custodian of some files that belonged to the Clintons and I did so. I turned them over to the counsel for the Clintons once he was hired, and he determined that those files would go back to the firm, those three files, and they did. As far as I know, they have remained intact from the moment they came into my possession or the moment that they were generated to now.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, on that point, Mr. Massey has testified before this Committee that he compared the materials that were sent back to the firm by Mr. Kendall with the materials that he had retained all along in his possession and he found them to be exactly the same without addition or deletion. With that, I'll cede back my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Moseley-Braun, do you have any questions at this time?

OPENING COMMENT OF SENATOR CAROL MOSELEY-BRAUN

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. No, I don't, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hubbell, I'm going to try to get right to the point on this.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. With respect to these Rose Law Firm client files that came from Mr. Massey's office—I am not talking about the billing records, I am talking about his client files—which included drafts and letters and notes related to the securities, that material in the Rose Law Firm's files was related to the handling of client work for Madison; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, Madison was taken over by the RTC, which means, for all intents and purposes, the client decisionmaker was the Resolution Trust Corporation; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think certainly that's what we believed. I don't know the answer to that question.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If anyone was going to make use of the files outside of the law firm, it was the RTC that had to give permission for that; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. If they had the right to make that decision.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Madison didn't exist any longer.

Mr. HUBBELL. I understand, but the firm might determine that there was nothing that belonged to the RTC in those files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is there any basis on which confidential law firm files related to correspondence and internal notations should have been taken out of the custody and control of the law firm and out of the custody and control of Madison and given to somebody in the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. There is a reason to do that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I know there may be a reason. Is there any basis on which it's proper?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us what that is.

Mr. HUBBELL. If there's an allegation against one of the lawyers that they did something improper, that lawyer is entitled to consult with his or her attorney and to show them what work they did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am not talking about taking these documents out and having somebody show them to another attorney in order to prepare a legal response. I am talking about removing the files, these Massey files, and turning them over to the campaign. Is there a basis on which you can justify taking confidential client files out of the custody of the firm without the firm's permission and out of the custody of Madison without Madison's permission or the RTC's permission and turning them over to the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't know that they were turned over to the campaign.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you have no knowledge if the files that Mr. Foster pulled from Mr. Massey ever wound up with the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. Those files, no. You're talking about those three files that I gave Mr. Kendall?

Mr. CHERTOFF. At least those three files, those never went to the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know if they did. I can't say for sure, but I don't believe they did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who did you get them from?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe I got them from Mr. Foster, although they may have been given to him by his secretary or another staff person in the office.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's assume for the sake of argument that Mr. Foster kept them within the custody and control of the law firm. Why on earth did he give them to you? Why didn't he just leave them at the firm when he left to go to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe he wanted to make sure they stayed intact.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You think he had a question about whether, if he left them at the firm, the firm would somehow destroy them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know that. That would be speculation on my part.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you say to him? Here he is. He's got these files. They're Rose Law Firm files. He's giving you the files. You're both leaving as partners in the firm. Don't you ask him why are you giving these to me?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not ask.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood you were going to go and take some kind of a Government job in Washington.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you were not going to be returning to the firm.

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you take possession of the files which clearly belonged to the firm or to the client and why did you remove them and take them with you to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. I removed them for storage and then they ultimately came to Washington. I'm not splitting hairs——

Mr. CHERTOFF. You are splitting hairs. Why did you take control of those files? Why didn't you simply in January——

Mr. HUBBELL. To maintain their integrity, Mr. Chertoff. Their integrity has been maintained and it has been since this day. Why did I do it? To maintain their integrity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were concerned that if you took the files and you gave them back to the Rose Law Firm and left them with your former partners with whom you had practiced for years and years and years, that you couldn't trust them to maintain the integrity of the files?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't say I couldn't trust them, but I did maintain their integrity when they were in my possession.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You are going to have to answer the question I asked, Mr. Hubbell.

Mr. HUBBELL. Ask the question, then.

Mr. CHERTOFF. My question to you, Mr. Hubbell, is why did you remove these files——

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't remove them.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you take these files when Mr. Foster gave them to you and rather than return them to the firm, which was their rightful owner, or contact the firm and ask for permission or contact Madison and ask for permission or contact the RTC and ask for permission, why did you, without doing any of that, take them in whatever kind of container they were in, take them to Washington and ultimately put them in your basement? Why?

Mr. HUBBELL. I wanted to maintain their integrity. That is the answer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there some reason that you felt you needed to have those with you in Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. If the issue came up, the files would still be in our possession, and we could again show that there wasn't anything improper done.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you anticipated that the issue of work done for Madison would come up again?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not anticipate—just as with all the files that we got from Betsey, we didn't know if those issues would ever come up again, but if they did, we had it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The files from Betsey, as I understand it, were campaign files. They weren't in the possession of the law firm and the property of a client; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right. I do not contend that those files were the property of the client, Mr. Chertoff. I may be wrong, but I do not believe they were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were the property of the law firm, then; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Kendall believed they were the property of the law firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What do you think? Whose property were they?

Mr. HUBBELL. They could have been——

Mr. CHERTOFF. What do you think? Whose property were they?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am clouded in my view by our prior experience at the firm, Mr. Chertoff, that other lawyers when they left the firm were allowed to leave with all of their files, OK?

But, if these were anybody's personal files, they had to be Mr. Massey's files. Mr. Massey stayed at the firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. These pieces of paper were not your pieces of paper?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So I would like you to tell us why it is you felt that they were your property to take with you to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did not consider them my property, but I took them to Washington.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew they were not your property?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, sir. If you had asked me, I would have said they were not my property.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask Mr. Massey or Mr. Clark? Did you tell either of them you were taking the files? They were not really yours to take?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did it.

The CHAIRMAN. Why then, after you took them and they weren't yours to take, did you send them to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. I delivered to Mr. Kendall all the files I had.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't care about all the other files. Why did you send those files, Rose Law Firm files, to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because they were with all the others.

The CHAIRMAN. You sent them all, everything, including these Rose Law Firm files, you just sent them all to Mr. Kendall. Now, Mr. Kendall sent them where?

Mr. HUBBELL. To the Rose Firm.

The CHAIRMAN. Why didn't you just send them to the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I just didn't. I don't have a reason. I didn't even think about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it because you really were concerned that these files contained important information?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew that they didn't contain any important information. They are innocuous.

The CHAIRMAN. Sir, you took innocuous files that didn't belong to you, to use your words, in anticipation that it might come up; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. As we did with a lot of files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And it did come up because the FDIC started to investigate; right? You received a call in September 1993 from April Breslaw, she gave you a heads-up that the FDIC was going to now open an investigation into the issues of the Rose Law Firm conflicts?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Jack Smith over at the FDIC picked up the phone in a rather extraordinary—it is just not common every time someone gets interviewed by the FDIC that the General Counsel personally calls up. He called you up and said he wanted to set up an appointment to have you interviewed about the Rose conflict issue; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. He did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was also in October 1993 that Mr. Lindsey was having discussions with representatives of the Treasury Department, on October 14th, because he had heard reports that the issue of you and the Rose Law Firm was somehow percolating up. Do you remember that? Did Mr. Lindsey talk to you about that in October?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am sure he did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you had some communication with the White House in October that there was an issue out there involving your work while at the Rose Law Firm in connection with the Frost case, whether there was a conflict of interest, and you had a discussion with Mr. Lindsey about this in October; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe.

Senator SARBANES. October of when?

Mr. CHERTOFF. October 1993. Then we get to February and after you finally sat down with the interviewers from the FDIC, you have not mentioned the information which you had gained 18 months before from the billing records about work being done on the option or a dozen calls to Seth Ward.

They produced their report, which says there is no action that they are going to take, based upon a very, shall we say, much less than complete picture of the facts, and you fax it over to the White House; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. With whom you have had several discussions through Mr. Kennedy over these past months about this whole issue; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now after you sent it over to the White House, did you hear back within the next few weeks, either directly from Mrs. Clinton or from anyone on her behalf, indicating to you that she was aware that there was more work that the Rose Law Firm had done for Madison than was disclosed in this FDIC report?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So after you sent the report over, what was the next conversation you had with somebody concerning this Rose conflicts issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. I can't tell you when the next conversation I had about the conflicts issue was. I really don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. See, what's hard about this, Mr. Hubbell, is when we first got into this this morning and we talked about this issue of your faxing over this report, it was just no big deal to you. Now what's emerging is you took records which, frankly, didn't belong to you, based on the anticipation that at some point the issue of the work done by the firm would come up.

You received a call from April Breslaw in September 1993 saying there is going to be an investigation. The General Counsel calls you up in October, wanting to set up an interview for an investigation. You have a conversation with Mr. Lindsey who is having a meeting with Treasury people in which your name and this issue comes up.

You wind up getting the report in February. It contains only an incomplete picture of the work that was done. You don't correct it, you fax it over to the White House. It winds up attached to a memo prepared for the First Lady, that is full of a description of the various actions that might be taken by the RTC against the Rose Law Firm on the issue of this conflict. And then there is some kind of discussion of who is going to make the decision about this after Roger Altman has finally taken himself out of the matter as head of the RTC.

It seems to crop up again and again and again. Yet the two people who were most intimately involved in the firm in 1985 and 1986, in talking to Mr. Ward about this and his involvement in these transactions involving the IDC, are you and Mrs. Clinton. Your testimony is that the two of you neither directly or indirectly communicated about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. If the question is did I talk to Mrs. Clinton about it, the answer is no, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you talk to somebody else who was acting on her behalf?

Mr. HUBBELL. About what?

Mr. CHERTOFF. About this whole issue of the work done by Rose for Madison.

Mr. HUBBELL. I had, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You talked to Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't think so. It's possible, but I don't think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Eggleston?

Mr. HUBBELL. Boy, that—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Kennedy?

Mr. HUBBELL. Certainly Kennedy.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He was the point of contact?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I believe by this time—you have to put it in a frame of reference because we had Deputy General Counsels moving in. Mr. Klein, I believe, was, at one point, the point person on this.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I yield the balance of my time to Senator Bond.

Senator BOND. I have just a couple of quick questions. You had the meeting at which you turned over the files to Mr. Kendall on November 17?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator BOND. Did he call you and ask you for those files, or ask you if you had any information?

Mr. HUBBELL. If I can answer that completely, for a long period of time, going back to May and March 1993, we had discussions about getting the files in the hands of a private counsel of the President and First Lady.

Ultimately, I was advised that Mr. Kendall would play that role, and I—

Senator BOND. Mr. Barnett of Williams & Connolly was their attorney who picked up the Foster files on July 27, wasn't he? So they had an attorney, then, that came over and picked up the files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Barnett, as I understand, was doing some work for the Clintons. When I raised this issue with Mr. Barnett, he said he was going to have to recuse, and that he was trying to get the Clintons to employ Mr. Kendall.

Senator BOND. They had an attorney to whom files were turned over, and it was purely accidental that November 17, 2 weeks, roughly 12 days after what we now know as the November 5 meeting to get all the information, that just became the date that you delivered all these files to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't think there was anything accidental about it, Senator.

Senator BOND. I don't, either.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBARNES. When was Mr. Kendall employed by the Clintons?

Mr. HUBBELL. It is my understanding that Mr. Kendall was employed sometime in early November.

Senator SARBARNES. Shortly thereafter?

Mr. HUBBELL. Shortly thereafter, I met with Mr. Kendall, explained what files I had, and he picked them up.

Senator SARBARNES. Thank you.

Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Among those files were the files of Mr. Massey which Mr. Massey had photocopied and given to Mr. Foster. Now those files you have indicated you kept in your possession not to deprive the Rose Law Firm of them since the Rose Law Firm had a copy—

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. —but rather to be in a position to respond should the issue arise again as to what work was performed by the Rose Law Firm for Madison Bank in connection with the securities matter?

Mr. HUBBELL. Even a smaller point, what work, or lack thereof, was Mrs. Clinton involved in with regard to the securities work; that was the issue in the campaign.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, the issue being, as Mr. Massey has testified, this was a one-lawyer job, the securities research issue regarding the preferred stock, and he was the lawyer who did it. And Mrs. Clinton supervised him and was responsible to the client as the billing partner?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So we have had the testimony about that. We have also had the testimony from Mr. Massey, and everyone else who has looked at the records, that the records were completely innocuous, humdrum legal memoranda and supporting documentation; correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The notion that you were carrying them to Washington, as interstate transportation of innocuous legal memoranda, if we could put a name on it, it didn't occur to you that anyone else was being deprived of these memoranda and files by reason of you taking them with you to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. The filings were in Little Rock, Arkansas until June, mid-June 1993.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Had anyone from the RTC suddenly decided that they had need of these files, if they had asked the Rose Firm, Mr. Massey would have been in a position to supply them?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There was no indication from Mr. Massey that he was reluctant to do so?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know one way or the other. I didn't know that anybody was looking for these three files. They have always been in existence.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Apart from these three files from Mr. Massey, what other firm files did you get from Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. From Mr. Foster?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall getting any other files at all from Mr. Foster.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Just those Massey files?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my recollection.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you get firm files from Betsey Wright?

Mr. HUBBELL. Firm files from Betsey Wright?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, Rose Law Firm files from Betsey Wright.

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of. But I don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you get any Rose Law Firm files from anybody other than Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who?

Mr. HUBBELL. Me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You took some out yourself?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Which ones?

Mr. HUBBELL. I took Mrs. Clinton's files on Southern Development Bank Corp.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you take those?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because an issue had come up in the campaign as to whether her work involved Southern Development Bank Corp., and so those were put with the other files as well.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. The issue on Southern Development Bank Corp. was that it was involved in acquisition of a bank, and then making minority loans in rural Arkansas. She served on the board and questions had come up in the campaign about our firm's work and her service on the board.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were the questions?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what the questions were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was obviously a matter of sufficient concern that you removed these files from the firm as well to take with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. It involved a matter that she worked on, and if it came up we would have access to the files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were the questions that you—

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Mr. Chertoff. I wasn't involved in the questions.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You said that there were questions which came up about it in the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. There were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were the questions?

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me think. It was about one of the board's she served on, so I think the question was what did they do and what were her duties. I think it had to do with her involvement, whether she had any involvement in getting any kind of approvals.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What kind of approvals?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know if it came up or not; whether the State Banking Department approved Southern Development Bank Corp. or not, that was one.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So one issue was whether she had been involved in getting some approvals from the State Bank Department for this other institution?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right, right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there an issue about loans?

Mr. HUBBELL. Loans?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, insider loans.

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What besides approvals came up?

Mr. HUBBELL. What she was doing on the board, what she was paid for serving on that board, what the extent of our firm's fees were to that client.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was the owner of the bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. South Shore Bank out of Chicago, I believe.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you took those files with you when you came to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. They first went to my house in Little Rock and then came to Washington, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did they wind up?

Mr. HUBBELL. At Mr. Kendall's.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you take any files relating to the Bank of Kingston, later known as Madison Bank & Trust?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did take the Bank of Kingston files out of the firm. They didn't end up in my basement, but they ultimately ended up back with the Special Prosecutor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. First of all, when you took the Bank of Kingston files and the Southern Development Bank Corp. files, did you ask permission from anybody to do that?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask for permission when you took the Bank of Kingston filings?

Mr. HUBBELL. Bank of Kingston, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you just took them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't know I had taken the Bank of Kingston files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What happened to the Bank of Kingston files?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Bank of Kingston issue came up, and I put those files in with my files at the firm. Then, when I was subpoenaed by the Special Prosecutor and was looking through my files, I realized that they had been packed up and put with my files. I delivered them to my counsel, who delivered them to the Special Prosecutor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you accidentally took those with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you originally put them in with your own files?

Mr. HUBBELL. They were in my office, in my drawer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why were they in your office and in your drawer?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because an issue had come up as to what work the firm had done in connection with the Bank of Kingston.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was McDougal's bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the issue that came up?

Mr. HUBBELL. The same issue, had the firm done any work for Jim McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And the answer to that is yes?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They had done work for the Bank of Kingston?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that the Bank of Kingston had also been involved in lending money to Mrs. Clinton in regard to White-water?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was not in the files that wound up in your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So these Bank of Kingston files were packed up with your other files and also wound up in your basement?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, they did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did they wind up?

Mr. HUBBELL. They wound up in my mini-warehouse in Little Rock.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have a mini-warehouse in Little Rock?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What is in that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Nothing now.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was the last time there was something in the mini-warehouse?

Mr. HUBBELL. I shouldn't say there is nothing in it. There may be some furniture and some clothes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We are talking about papers, when was the last time there were papers in it?

Mr. HUBBELL. When I was subpoenaed by the Special Prosecutor I got the files out, brought them to Washington, and gave them to my lawyer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was that?

Mr. HUBBELL. When did we get those? March, April, May 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the Bank of Kingston files were in the mini-warehouse, the Southern Development Bank Corp. files wound up in your basement and over with Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in neither case did you ask permission to remove those files from the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you recently discover more documents, by the way, that are pertinent to Madison or McDougal?

Mr. HUBBELL. Madison or McDougal?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, since September.

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Have you turned over any documents since September to the Independent Counsel?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did you discover those?

Mr. HUBBELL. My lawyer had them. He inadvertently had not turned over those documents in May 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the source of those documents, were those basement documents or warehouse documents?

Mr. HUBBELL. Warehouse documents.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you also have some of Mrs. Clinton's time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. Those were the documents we are talking about. They had nothing to do with Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were 1987, 1988 time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. They were later in time; I couldn't tell you specifically what they were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did they relate to another financial institution?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did they relate to work involving First American?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Mike.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you wind up with her time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. The same way that I wound up with the Bank of Kingston files. During the campaign, as issues came up, I would go down and get things from her secretary, and some things ended up in my office and were packed up.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was accidental?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to—

The CHAIRMAN. These are Mrs. Clinton's time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. Some of her time sheets, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. They were from 1987, 1988, 1989?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you take records relating to a financial institution called First South?

Mr. HUBBELL. First South?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. The only information regarding First South that I may have taken would have been my files relating to First South against the Rose Law Firm—the FSLIC made a claim against the Rose Law Firm, but we settled before a lawsuit was filed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did that involve Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, it did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to read to you from the testimony given by Mr. Clark—you know Ron Clark, he is a partner of the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I understand.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to read to you from page 164 of the transcript of his testimony.

Mr. HUBBELL. Deposition testimony?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Hearing testimony. I will start at line 5.

Mr. HUBBELL. What page?

Mr. CHERTOFF. At page 164, line 5, Mr. Giuffra asks Mr. Clark:

Question: It was improper for Mr. Foster to have removed these files, correct?

Answer: No.

Question: It would have been improper for him to take them out of the firm?

Answer: Unless he had the client's consent, and I know he didn't.

Question: Would it have been proper if Mr. Hubbell was involved in doing this?

Answer: No.

Do you disagree with that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Do I disagree with what?

Mr. CHERTOFF. That it was improper for you to be involved in removing files relating to work done for Madison without the client's consent?

Mr. HUBBELL. Which files?

Mr. CHERTOFF. The files, the Rose Law Firm files relating to work done for Madison.

Mr. HUBBELL. The three files?

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Massey files.

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't believe it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You disagree with Mr. Clark?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You disagree with Mr. Massey on that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You agree you did not have the clients' consents?

Mr. HUBBELL. I agree I did not have the client's consents.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't have the firm's consent?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't ask the firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You took it on without asking?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to ask you about other records. In short-hand I will call the records you received in January, the ones that wound up in your basement and go on to Mr. Kendall, the basement records. First of all, am I correct that in November, when you turned over your basement records to Mr. Kendall, you turned over everything you had that you had collected from the campaign or from the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Except my own personal records, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Other than your personal records, you didn't hold anything back?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you received this material in January, you got some of it from Betsey Wright?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Some of it from Vincent Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Some of it you took yourself from the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What other sources did you have for getting this material?

Mr. HUBBELL. Other people within the firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. All of that you collected you kept together in one place?

Mr. HUBBELL. At one time, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because you wanted to maintain its integrity?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You did maintain its integrity?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe so, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You turned it over to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We can conclude from that, if we accept that that was the way you proceeded, that if Mr. Kendall did not have the billing records—I am now talking about the billing records, to shift from the Massey records—we can conclude that if Mr. Kendall did not have the billing records from you in November, you were never given those billing records in January?

Mr. HUBBELL. In January?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe I was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So, to do this by process of elimination, in February 1992, you see the billing records, and you in fact make some notations on them; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You do not see some of the notations that Mr. Foster makes, he makes them after you have relinquished them to him; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe that is correct. I mean, it is possible that he made them simultaneously, but I don't believe that's the way it worked.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So your last contact with the billing records is when you leave them in the custody of Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. The records we are talking about here?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, the billing records, such as DKSN 28935.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then you don't see them again, except until this year?

Mr. HUBBELL. These records now?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, these billing records; not the Massey files, the billing records.

The CHAIRMAN. The billing records that we have just come into possession of, Webb, you last saw them in February when you left them with Vince Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. These records, yes, yes [indicating].

Mr. CHERTOFF. You last saw them in February 1992 and you don't see them again until this year, right now?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The last person you know who had them is Mr. Foster?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't receive them in January from any of the people who were giving you records?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Foster didn't give them to you in January?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If Mr. Foster had given them to you, they would have been in your basement and you would have turned them over to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe so, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So, since Mr. Kendall doesn't appear to have received them in November, we can conclude that whatever Mr. Foster gave you, he never gave you these billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where we are with this, then—I think you will agree with me—is that you can take us with these billing records up to the time that Mr. Foster had possession of them in February 1992, and then you don't see them again. They never come to you when everybody is giving you the campaign files and the Rose files to hold together?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it your understanding, by the way, in talking to Mr. Foster in January 1993, that he was holding back any files from you?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't get the impression one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he tell you he was giving you in January 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. He told me he was giving me the securities file on Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you he was giving you all the files regarding Rose?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Given the fact that there are billing records, in that pile of billing records, that relate to this securities work, did he indicate to you that he was holding back any records relative to the securities work?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, he didn't indicate that he was holding anything back.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Ms. Wright indicate that she was holding anything back?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. Let me go back. Ms. Wright did tell me there was something, but it has nothing to do with Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That she was holding back?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. On a subject unrelated to—

Mr. HUBBELL. Totally unrelated to Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Unrelated to any financial issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. Unrelated to any financial issue at all.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Other than that, did she tell you she was holding back anything?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did anybody else who gave you documents tell you they were holding back anything?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it your impression that you were the person who was designated to receive all this material?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was my impression that people knew I was going to assemble those documents.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Foster ever tell you in January—let me withdraw the question.

At any time after February 1992, until his death, did Mr. Foster ever discuss these billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. The billing records, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I see my time is up, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. We're in the process of having a vote and I want to ascertain something so we can arrange the schedule in order to give people an opportunity to take a break.

We are going to take a break until at least 4:30. I've been informed that we have a total of three votes. If it is a total of three votes, and it takes 10 minutes for each of them, that means we would be back no sooner than 4:30. We will try to make it as close to that as we can, but we certainly will stand in recess until at least 4:30 or until the votes are concluded, whichever is earlier.

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. Chairman, I passed on my first round of questioning and now we have to go to these votes, and I don't know that I will be able to come back——

The CHAIRMAN. If you have a question——

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. I just have an observation. When I was practicing at the U.S. Attorney's Office back in Chicago, one of my early supervisors really got on me one day because I took a file out of the office, a Government file; it was the U.S. Attorney's Office, after all. I will never forget. He said if you got hit by a bus, this file would be lost. You have no right. You shouldn't take it out. That's sloppy practice. In hindsight, particularly after listening to this witness going on at length about taking files out of the office, I have to think everybody will concede that it may be sloppy practice to take originals out of an office, but, at the same time, the fact is that it really is standard procedure for many lawyers. When people are practicing in the private sector, they take files home at night, they work on them at home. They take them from one file drawer and put them in another file drawer.

These things happen in the ordinary course of doing business, so I didn't want us to leave with the impression that there was something nefarious about moving a file when that was in the normal course.

Maybe it is appropriate to ask Mr. Hubbell, was it your experience that if you wanted to take a file home to look at, or move a file from one location to another, that you would take the original as opposed to Xeroxing the whole thing so that you would only take copies?

Mr. HUBBELL. When I practiced, I took files home almost every night, so it is hard to say. I certainly did that.

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. But it was, in your opinion, ordinary practice to do so; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN. Thank you. I have nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. We will be back at 4:30, or at the conclusion of the votes, whichever is earlier.

[Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. We are going to resume. When Senator Sarbanes comes if he wants to ask questions, he will do so on the next round. Just in an effort to move this process, and not continue it to midnight, we will start.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Hubbell, you had indicated that there were occasions, obviously when you were in practice, that you took files home to work on. Maybe you didn't take files with you while on vacation to work on, but what we are talking about here, to be quite clear, with respect to the Madison files, the Southern Development files, the Bank of Kingston files, the time sheets, these were not taken out in late 1992 or early 1993 in order to work on them at home, in order to do client work. They were removed to be taken to Washington or to be taken to that mini-warehouse to be stored; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now when you took the Southern Development files, did you make copies of those?

Mr. HUBBELL. Southern Development, no, I don't believe I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you took the originals out of the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you left the firm with nothing?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the firm's files on Southern Development disappeared?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, they didn't disappear——

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sorry. They disappeared from the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. They are not at the firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you tell anyone at the firm that you were taking them?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe Mr. Kennedy knew. He was the lawyer on the file.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You told Mr. Kennedy?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe, but I am not 100 percent sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did Mr. Kennedy know?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Kennedy was the lawyer for Southern Development Bank Corp.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And he gave you the files?

Mr. HUBBELL. I can't say that, Mike. I can't say I have a specific recollection of going to Bill and saying I believe that the Southern Development files I am talking about were Mrs. Clinton's files as a board member, OK. I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were Rose Law Firm files?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were not?

Mr. HUBBELL. They were maintained at the Rose Law Firm. I remember there were four boxes. I believe they were Mrs. Clinton's files for the work she had done, and for her service on the board.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's put aside the board files. The board files, I guess, would be the property of the company?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, they would be the property of Mrs. Clinton, as a board member.

Mr. CHERTOFF. She wasn't a board member after January 1993, was she?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In addition, there was work that the firm did for Southern Development——

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. —that would be Rose Law Firm files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Those would be at the Rose Firm, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They were the files of the Rose Law Firm work?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So they were Rose Law Firm files; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. As to the portion of files in the four boxes, you didn't ask permission from the law firm to take them. We have established that; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think I have said that unless Mr. Kennedy knew, no, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, Mr. Kennedy wasn't staying at the Rose Law Firm, either?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was at that time, yes, he was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you remove the files for Southern Development?

Mr. HUBBELL. Early January 1993, at the same time as all the other files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did Mr. Kennedy come to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. Sometime in February.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did Mr. Kennedy learn he was coming to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe sometime in February, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me ask you this: What was your reason for thinking Mr. Kennedy may have known that you removed Southern Development files from the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because he was a lawyer for Southern Development Bank Corp.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The files you removed were physically in what place?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were they in Mrs. Clinton's office?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Had you asked Mr. Kennedy for those files?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't remember one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In any case, you will agree with me, after February, Mr. Kennedy was not at the law firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do agree with you on that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There is no one else that you have a suspicion or speculation knew you removed those files?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know whether they knew or not. I did not tell anybody.

Mr. CHERTOFF. As far as you knew, nobody knew?

Mr. HUBBELL. As far as I knew.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In your state of mind, you were taking the only existing copies of firm files without permission and without the knowledge of the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I disagree with that, because I don't know whether I told Mr. Kennedy or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to get back to your state of mind.

Mr. HUBBELL. My state of mind was I was taking the files with me, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You remember taking the only existing copies?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you don't have any memory of having told anybody about taking them?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Or asking permission?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did anybody ever contact you after January, putting aside the Independent Counsel, and ask you questions about those files?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now the Bank of Kingston file that got packed up with your office files, you physically took that and put it in your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. I had put the Bank of Kingston file in my office sometime around February 1992.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did you get that from?

Mr. HUBBELL. From the closed files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have anybody make copies of that?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you took the only existing copy and put it in your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you put it in your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because I was getting phone calls about McDougal and Madison and other issues and I wanted to look at the file.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you getting phone calls about the Bank of Kingston?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was getting calls about McDougal and I knew that McDougal had owned the Bank of Kingston.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you anticipated that, sooner or later, the calls would go in to the Bank of Kingston, or Madison Bank & Trust as it is sometimes known?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I anticipated that call. I believe the question was whether the firm had represented Jim McDougal personally. That was what was coming to the campaign. I knew that we had done work for the Bank of Kingston, and I wanted to see if Jim McDougal was a party to that lawsuit and be able to answer those questions truthfully.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So, having taken the only existing copy of that from the closed files, and having put it among your files, you then never returned it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not return it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And it was packed up among your other files?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever talk to Mrs. Clinton about that?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You worked on Madison Bank & Trust?

Mr. HUBBELL. What's that?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever talk to Mrs. Clinton about the work done on Madison Bank & Trust or the Bank of Kingston?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Bank of Kingston, I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you talk to Mr. Foster about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Foster know you had those files in your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1992 I believe he did, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Foster have his own set of files on the Bank of Kingston?

Mr. HUBBELL. I really don't know the answer to that question.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you attempt to get files from Mr. Foster relating to the Bank of Kingston?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think I asked for the firm's files on the Bank of Kingston and got a file about as thick as this, Mike. They provided me the information I needed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now why did you get Mrs. Clinton's time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. Some issue had come up about a representation during that period of time and I can't even remember what it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it have to do with Mr. Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it have to do with Dan Lasater?

Mr. HUBBELL. It might have, yes, that might be one reason.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it have to do with her representation in a case against a financial institution owned by Dan Lasater?

Mr. HUBBELL. It could have. I just don't know what the issue was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you get her time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. To see if there were time entries where she had worked on files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. On which files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Whatever the issue was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Where did you get the time sheets from?

Mr. HUBBELL. From her secretary.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you also ask for her 1985 and 1986 time sheets relating to Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, here we were in 1992, there were all these issues that evidently you are preparing to answer questions on involving Southern Development and the Bank of Kingston. Clearly, you knew that Madison was going to be an issue, Madison Guaranty was going to be an issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You had gone to the trouble of getting her time sheets, Mrs. Clinton's time sheets, for 1987 and 1988; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Obviously I did because I had them in my possession.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why didn't you get them for 1985 and 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know. I can speculate, but I don't know for sure. I speculate that these computer printouts were sufficient to give me the information I needed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you didn't make an effort to obtain her time sheets from 1985 and 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. Essentially, all the information, Mike, that's contained on the billing memorandum is what's on the time sheets.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But, actually, the billing documents you have in front of you and the ones we have received are not complete. Did you know that?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that there is missing certain portions of the backup for the period of September, October, and November, the detail?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you looked at the records in 1992, were they complete?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have a memory in February 1992 when you looked at these billing records of noticing that there were missing pages when compared with the backup of the printouts?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, not one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that if you had noticed there were missing pages you would have gone to the time sheets to fill in the detail; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. If I had been doing that work. I don't know that I was doing that work.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Doing what work? You were reviewing these documents; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was reviewing these documents to look for the securities matter.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right. Now the securities matter was still going on in September and October; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. It could have been, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So in order to do what you have told us you set out to do here, it would make sense you would look at all the conceivable pages of printouts——

Mr. HUBBELL. It could be.

Mr. CHERTOFF. —that would show Mrs. Clinton's time?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And we don't have all of those, even now, as you will see if you inspect your set of billing records.

Mr. HUBBELL. OK.

Mr. CHERTOFF. My question to you is, in February 1992, did you notice there were missing backup pages of detail?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it fair to conclude, then, that there were no missing pages when you looked at it in February——

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what is fair to conclude. I know I was focusing on the issue of whether Mrs. Clinton had contact with Ms. Bassett.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And in order to determine that, you would have wanted to look at all the backup that showed her work during the period of the fall of 1985 because you would want to see if there were contacts then; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mike, you are assuming that I did this. I don't know that I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it fair also to say, based on your practice back in 1992, because evidently you were very thorough in, if I may be permitted to use the term, vacuuming the files?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't appreciate that, Mike. I haven't vacuumed any files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You withdrew from the firm, correct me if I am wrong, the Madison files that Mr. Massey had, you got those from Mr. Foster, you personally took out the Southern Development files; correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You at least had in your possession at some point the billing records?

Mr. HUBBELL. What billing records?

Mr. CHERTOFF. The ones you have before you.

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1992.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In 1992, that's right. You removed from the firm the Bank of Kingston files and you removed from the firm, by way of putting them in your office and shipping them over to the warehouse, the time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. They wound up in the warehouse.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They wound up in the warehouse?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. My question to you is, do you remember in 1992 going back and looking at Mrs. Clinton's 1985 and 1986 time sheets in order to supply missing detail about the work she had done in 1985 relating to Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. The answer is no, I don't remember that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't have any recollection of inquiring after those time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to go back to this question of whether you understood the original IDC purchase as a sham deal.

You knew, Mr. Hubbell, from Mr. Ward shortly after that purchase was made, that Mr. Ward was holding part of the property in his name until it could be sold, because there was a limit on the amount of property Madison could hold in its own name; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's what I was told, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. As of 1985, how many years had you been in the practice of law?

Mr. HUBBELL. Twelve.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You had been Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Arkansas?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were your specialty in practice? Litigation?

Mr. HUBBELL. Litigation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever represent banks?

Mr. HUBBELL. I represented banks.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever represent regulated institutions?

Mr. HUBBELL. Banks.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Other than banks?

Mr. HUBBELL. Insurance companies.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understand there are sometimes restrictions placed on the amount of certain types of investments that can be made for any one of a number of good reasons that involve protecting the welfare of taxpayers or policyholders, or whatever it is?

Mr. HUBBELL. I do understand regulations imposed on regulated entities.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understand that one of the ways people try to circumvent or evade these restrictions is by having a nominee hold some or all of the property; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Sometimes that's called warehousing?

Mr. HUBBELL. I understand the concepts of warehousing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I gather Mr. Ward looked to you, as a family member, to give him advice and to talk to about deals; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. He talked to me a lot about deals, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You couldn't stop him basically?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Here you see a situation where Mr. Ward says to you that he is going to basically be holding a piece of property until it can be sold, and you understand, either from him or from somewhere else, that the reason for that is because Madison had a limit on what it could own in its own name.

Did that cause a red flag to go up for you?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was concerned if, for example, they couldn't sell the property, what would happen to his personal assets, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you satisfy your concern?

Mr. HUBBELL. He told me it was a nonrecourse loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you who was giving him the non-recourse loan?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The red light is on and because the Minority has been very, very patient, and in order to move this, we started, I am going to ask at this time, Senator Sarbanes, if you have any questions?

Senator SARBANES. I do have some.

Mr. Hubbell, I listened as Mr. Chertoff was enumerating files which he said you removed or took from the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. As he enumerated that list, he mentioned the billing records, but I didn't understand any testimony here today to indicate that you took the billing records from the Rose Law Firm; is that—

Mr. HUBBELL. I thought I corrected Mr. Chertoff. To my knowledge, I took no billing records from the firm.

Senator SARBANES. So those billings records that are there, you didn't take those from the firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. These, I did not.

Senator SARBANES. I was also interested in this line of questioning about these various files. I take it these files, Southern Development Bank Corp. for example, were turned over by you to the Independent Counsel?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, they were turned over to Mr. Kendall.

Senator SARBANES. Which files did you turn over to the Independent Counsel?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Bank of Kingston file and Mrs. Clinton's time records.

Senator SARBANES. This is the first I have heard of them. When was that done?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Bank of Kingston file was turned over in connection with the subpoena by Mr. Fiske. The time records were not turned over until later because of inadvertence of communication between my counsel and the Special Counsel, but they have been turned over now.

Senator SARBANES. So both of those have been in the hands of the Independent Counsel; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. They are now there, right.

Senator SARBANES. And no one else?

Mr. HUBBELL. No one else that I know of.

I'm sorry, the Rose Firm and Mr. Kendall probably got a copy of the time sheets.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Just so I am clear, are you referring to the time sheets of Mrs. Clinton's from the 1987 to 1989 time period?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. KRAVITZ. I think I can shed some light on that. Actually, during the deposition of Ronald Clark, the current managing partner at the Rose Law Firm, on January 5, 1996, the subject of Mrs. Clinton's time sheets from that time period, 1987 to 1989, which were in your possession, came up.

Alden Atkins, the attorney representing Mr. Clark at the deposition, actually the attorney for the Rose Law Firm, stated that he had been shown all of those time sheets by Mr. Nields, your lawyer, and that he had reviewed those time sheets and that none of them was in any way responsive to the Senate Committee's inquiry, and certainly had nothing to do with Madison Guaranty.

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my understanding.

Mr. KRAVITZ. That's consistent with your understanding?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's my understanding.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Now, Mr. Hubbell, let me just ask you one more question on the subject of all these files and records that you took with you when you left the Rose Law Firm in early 1993.

You have been asked a lot of questions implying there was something nefarious or improper about that. What was your purpose in taking those files and papers with you when you moved to Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me separate the two out. With regard to the Bank of Kingston files and Mrs. Clinton's time sheets, I did not know I had them. Once I realized I had them, I turned them over to counsel.

With regard to the much greater volume of files, which are Betsey Wright files, the firm files, which is not a great volume, those three files, and the others, it was—

Mr. KRAVITZ. But this group you are talking about now would include the three files of Mr. Massey's relating to Madison Guaranty and also the Southern Development Bank Corp. files?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right. Those files. Issues had come up during the campaign, and we were all leaving Arkansas and coming to Washington. If those issues came up, I wanted whoever was representing the Clintons to be able to go to the files and be able to defend the Clintons like they had in the campaign.

Senator SARBANES. Issues were coming up all the time during the campaign, weren't they? A lot of allegations were being raised, weren't they—

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Senator SARBANES. —about Mrs. Clinton's practice and so forth, was that the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. What kind of time pressures were you under to try to respond to those queries?

Mr. HUBBELL. Usually, we would get a call and I had to respond that day.

Senator SARBANES. That day?

Mr. HUBBELL. That day.

Senator SARBANES. A call from the press?

Mr. HUBBELL. What would happen is I would get the call from the press and I would alert the campaign or the campaign would call me and say they had received a query from the press, and we would be under pressure to respond that day to questions.

Senator SARBANES. These inquiries would be about one or another of the allegations that were being made; is that right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Absolutely. I mean, there were all kinds of allegations being made, yes.

Mr. KRAVITZ. And these materials that you had collected during the campaign were materials that were used to rebut, where appropriate, those allegations; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Is it the case that the reason you decided to bring these materials with you to Washington was that you wanted to have those materials available in the event that these same allegations were made again, after the time that Bill Clinton became President?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, primarily a lot of us were coming to Washington, and very few people were staying back home, so we wanted to have the records close at hand.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Did you destroy any of these materials?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I believe the Committee or the Special Prosecutor has everything we have been talking about all day long.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Of course, Mr. Massey has testified that his three files relating to the securities matter with Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association, when they got back to him through Mr. Kendall, were complete. I take it that's consistent with your understanding?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Just so we are clear, was your decision to remove these files from the Rose Law Firm, did that have anything to do with any decision to vacuum anything?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, "vacuum," to me, means disappear and they are all still here.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Just one other point. Right before Mr. Chertoff passed the questioning over to our side a few minutes ago, he was asking you some questions about what you knew about the details of the initial purchase of the IDC property back in 1985. I think it's helpful to read from the Pillsbury Madison report from December 1995 at the point where Pillsbury Madison & Sutro address that very issue.

On page 75 of that report, Pillsbury writes as follows:

If Hubbell had knowledge at a relevant time, it is possible that this knowledge might be imputed to the Rose Law Firm. As a matter of partnership law, that may happen if the partner who knows something but is not acting in the particular manner 'reasonably could and should have communicated it to the acting partner.' Even so, it is unclear that the imputation of Hubbell's knowledge to the firm would mean that otherwise-innocent acts performed by other lawyers in the firm, who lacked actual knowledge of these matters, would somehow become 'fraud' or 'intentional misconduct' within the meaning of the statute of limitations extender.

Now that's what Pillsbury Madison wrote on the subject of your possible knowledge of the details of that initial purchase.

Mr. Thrash, who was here last week, and he testified that he handled the closing on behalf of Madison for that initial purchase, testified that he had no information, as of the time of the closing in early October 1985, that Mr. Ward had a nonrecourse loan and that Mr. Ward, therefore, bore no financial risk in this purchase.

Is your memory consistent with that? By that, I mean, do you remember not saying anything to Mr. Thrash at the time of the closing?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think I had testified, to the best of my memory, I learned that, as opposed to Madison taking it all, that there was this division after the closing.

Mr. KRAVITZ. You didn't know about it before the closing either?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, no.

Mr. KRAVITZ. So it follows you certainly could not have told Mr. Thrash before the closing that Mr. Ward had a nonrecourse loan?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you something. You had a good relationship with your father-in-law at this time; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1985 and 1986?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He would hang around at the office once in a while?

Mr. HUBBELL. Quite often.

The CHAIRMAN. In your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have the kind of relationship that he could even call upon your secretary at times to type up something that he might want prepared?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Right. He is your wife's daddy?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's right.

The CHAIRMAN. So now he is going to go into this purchase, which is pretty significant, over $1 million; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The law firm represents him?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. He spoke to you about this purchase, didn't he?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, him and I had talked about it before. He talked about himself buying it, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He talked about himself buying it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. So he really talked to you before he went to the closing?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I knew he was buying—

The CHAIRMAN. He had to do title searches?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I learned some new phrase about whether or not there is a prohibition—what do they call that? Bill of assurance. You had to find out if there were bills of assurance prohibiting the various uses; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am familiar with bills of assurance. In this case, we did not have to find out if there were bills of assurance, but that's one of the things a title search would reveal.

The CHAIRMAN. Even though a rather successful entrepreneur, this was a substantial undertaking for him; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When he told you about it, you expressed some concern. You indicated something. What did you say to him?

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator, I can't remember the specifics, but this was not conversation.

The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

Mr. HUBBELL. You did not meet over at Mr. Ward's house without business coming up.

The CHAIRMAN. You were talking about all kinds of things?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. Family things, personal things, business, and so forth?

Mr. HUBBELL. Business.

The CHAIRMAN. It wasn't just business. He fell out of the window, he was at your house doing something; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That was in 1988, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. But what was he there doing?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was fixing a pipe.

The CHAIRMAN. Your father-in-law was over at the house fixing a pipe?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You had a good relationship with him, he used to hang out in your office once in a while?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am not denying that.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not putting words in your mouth, am I?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to get the picture. Everybody asks, what are you doing? I am trying to get a picture. It is excruciatingly painful at times. Now try to help me.

At some point in time, you came to know he was going to buy this property?

Mr. HUBBELL. He personally was going to buy it, yes, I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, and you said before, I think to Mr. Chertoff, that you did evidence some concern about whether he could pay it back; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was concerned that he was making a major purchase, and that there had been a previous owner who couldn't sell it. I wanted to make sure that he wasn't going to end up owing $1 million and having no way to pay it back.

The CHAIRMAN. What did daddy say?

Mr. HUBBELL. He said it was a nonrecourse loan.

The CHAIRMAN. Which meant what?

Mr. HUBBELL. That the repayment of the debt was secured by the real estate, and that if he chose not to repay the loan, he had to deed the property back. But if he wanted to, he could pay it back, if and when the loan came due.

The CHAIRMAN. If and when the loan came due, if he chose not to make payments or if he was unable to make payments, through some circumstances, he did not have to be able to pay?

Mr. HUBBELL. He had no personal liability on the debt.

The CHAIRMAN. Which meant that the bank couldn't sue him personally?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So that was a pretty good deal?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. If——

The CHAIRMAN. If the bank couldn't sue him personally and he bought this property; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. He paid $10 million for it, he has no exposure?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, he has exposure to his reputation and credit, Senator, but that's not $10 million worth.

The CHAIRMAN. Now did there come a time that you talked about other parts of this?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know if it was before or after, but certainly we talked about it, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Sure. You talked about how much money he was going to put down; right? You don't buy a piece of property for $1.15 million without putting something down; right? Did he have to put something down?

Mr. HUBBELL. I never knew that he was buying it personally for sure until he told me he had done it. But I did find out he put nothing down, in one sense. There is another sense——

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you something. This is before he bought this, you spoke to him; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I spoke on many occasions, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. But, before he went to the closing, you spoke to him because this was a tough piece of property, after all, as you said, other people had purchased it that weren't able to develop it, and this was a substantial amount, over $1 million, and this is your father-in-law, this is family, close?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. So you said listen, what happens if you can't turn this around, you can't sell it; right? That would be a reasonable question.

Mr. HUBBELL. I said that after the case.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, after the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean to tell us you didn't discuss this at all with him prior to his closing this, purchasing this?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't say that. I didn't discuss his personally buying it until afterwards.

May I go back and put it in context?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, please.

Mr. HUBBELL. He located the piece of property. He told me that he had talked to McDougal about it, that McDougal thought it was too big at first because the asking price was $5 million or more, and that ultimately he got the buyers to agree to sell it at $1,750,000. There were discussions about whether he would buy it. He said you know, if McDougal doesn't take this, I might take it myself.

But my understanding prior to closing was that Madison was going to buy it all, so I didn't have any discussions about him being about to incur $1 million worth of debt until afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. So you are saying what happened is that he actually went through with this purchase. Mr. Thrash was at the firm. Mr. Thrash was an associate or a partner?

Mr. HUBBELL. Partner.

The CHAIRMAN. A partner. He represented the bank and Seth Ward, your father-in-law?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. You didn't know about the terms of how your father-in-law was going to buy this property?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew afterwards, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I am trying to get this out. So you are saying that—

Mr. HUBBELL. He told me Madison was going to take it.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. So you are saying that when your law firm went to the closing, representing him, nobody there told you that your father-in-law was going to buy this, Mr. Thrash never spoke to you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, Mr. Thrash didn't tell me prior to the acquisition that the deal had changed and my father-in-law was going to take a part of it; no, he did not.

The CHAIRMAN. That seems to me to be a little unusual.

Mr. HUBBELL. It was unusual to me, too. I was surprised to hear that he had taken part of it. I am not disputing that, no.

The CHAIRMAN. No, you weren't surprised to hear he took part of it. And you knew at a certain point he was thinking of taking all of it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did, but then I was told that Madison was going to do the deal.

The CHAIRMAN. But at one point in time he told you that he was thinking of buying all of it; isn't that true?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right, if Madison wasn't going to buy it.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. What did you say to him then?

Mr. HUBBELL. I said can you do that.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he say?

Mr. HUBBELL. He said I think it will ultimately make me several million dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that even without having the benefit of a nonrecourse loan?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't recall hearing about a nonrecourse loan until after the closing.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me go to something else. I would just like to touch on this with you. I have never heard of this Southern Development, which is referred to in these files, heretofore. Now this was a bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was a holding company, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. That owned a bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. That bought a bank, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Bought a bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. A big bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. How big?

Mr. HUBBELL. A small bank in rural Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the name of the bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. I cannot tell you. There is something in my mind that it could be Elk City, but I may be totally wrong. It was a small rural bank. The purpose of the Southern Development Bank Corp., I believe, is a large holding corporation in Chicago. I believe it was interested in making minority and rural-type loans.

It formed what is called Southern Development Bank Corporation, and it wanted to buy a bank to make small loans in rural Arkansas. So they bought a bank. Now what the name of that bank was, I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. What did your law firm do in connection with this? Did they represent Southern Development, the holding corporation, in the purchase of this bank?

Mr. HUBBELL. I believe we did.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did they buy the bank from?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Who handled this matter?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Kennedy, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. He handled this?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Kennedy, yes. I believe so.

The CHAIRMAN. There came a point in time when you moved the files of Southern Development to your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, initially.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that?

Mr. HUBBELL. In January.

The CHAIRMAN. January of what year?

Mr. HUBBELL. I may be wrong there, Senator. I have to go back. If the issue came up in the campaign, I might have gone and gotten the files.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Southern Development issue come up during the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's think about this again, if you will. Just take your time.

You didn't work on Southern Development, did you?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. At some point in time, you brought these files into your office at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. HUBBELL. Correct.

The CHAIRMAN. That's right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, you are saying to the Committee, when you left, you took these files with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

The CHAIRMAN. And were you aware that you took these files with you?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Southern Development files, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. That's good. Now do you remember when you brought these files into your office?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, Senator, because I would have done some research on it during the campaign, whether the issue came up or not, but I don't know that I actually brought the files into my office. I may have gone to Mr. Kennedy's office or Mrs. Clinton's office and looked them up at that point.

At some point when I was leaving, I know that they came into my office. I'm trying to be totally accurate. I just don't know when they physically came into my office.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that, but let me ask you this: Why would you have done research on this question if it didn't come up during the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. We tried to predict issues that might come up during the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was trying to predict issues that might come up during the campaign?

Mr. HUBBELL. The campaign, the people who were working on the campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean, they said——

Mr. HUBBELL. And people at the Rose Firm who knew that issues might come up.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, if you took the Southern Development file into your office to predict what issues might come up during the campaign, what particular issue was it that you thought might be of some concern so that you did take it into your office? What issue would that have been?

Mr. HUBBELL. We looked at every board that Mrs. Clinton served on.

The CHAIRMAN. She served on the board?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Which board was that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Southern Development Bank Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that prior to its acquisition of this bank? Was it on the holding corporation?

Mr. HUBBELL. I really couldn't tell you now with accuracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The little light is on up there, and I know there are questions that other people have, so let me just ask you this: Forgetting about the Bank of Kingston files and the time sheets, just concentrating on this Southern Development issue, there came a point in time when you took these files, in conjunction with others, and you sent them where?

Mr. HUBBELL. To my home.

The CHAIRMAN. To your home. Then what did you do with them?

Mr. HUBBELL. In June, I brought them to Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. You brought them to Washington. These are the files that you brought to Washington that were in your basement?

Mr. HUBBELL. In Washington, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What then happened with the Southern Development files? At some point in time they were transferred to where?

Mr. HUBBELL. When Mr. Kendall came to pick up the files, I delivered them to Mr. Kendall.

The CHAIRMAN. I see. Now did you turn over everything to Mr. Kendall; in other words, all of the campaign files as well?

Mr. HUBBELL. All of the files I had received from Ms. Wright, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to get this straight. You sent all of these over. You sent over the Southern Development files, they were there. Everything that you had, you gave to him; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not everything I had. I had some personal files.

The CHAIRMAN. Aside from your personal files, as it related to files that came out of the Rose Law Firm, did you give him everything that you had?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. You gave all of those to Mr. Kendall?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Bank of Kingston files?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I think I said the Bank of Kingston files—yes, I thought you said excluding the Bank of Kingston files.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you about the Bank of Kingston files. Those you inadvertently, I think you testified, took out of your office because they were just there. You had been working on them in conjunction with the campaign to look at anything which might have come up. You took them home and eventually they wound up in your basement?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. Those ended up in a warehouse in Little Rock.

The CHAIRMAN. Where are they now?

Mr. HUBBELL. With the Special Prosecutor.

The CHAIRMAN. How did that happen?

Mr. HUBBELL. When I was subpoenaed in March or April, I gave them to my lawyer who delivered them to the Special Prosecutor.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. Those went to the Special Counsel. My time is up, but I would like to ask you some other questions. Senator Sarbanes, I want to thank you for being so patient.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Hubbell, why don't you, to try to get some perspective on this, tell us a bit about these allegations during the campaign period that apparently required all of you to be either anticipating or responding to various questions being raised, I take it, with respect to Mrs. Clinton's legal work or her general work?

Mr. HUBBELL. Just about everything that involved Mrs. Clinton. Most of the issues came up in prior State campaigns, so you could predict some of them. But there was almost a daily inquiry that we would get from the campaign about, for example, issues involving bond fees that the firm had received. There were all kinds of allegations that would come almost on a daily basis.

Senator SARBANES. Was there an organized campaign you saw in raising these allegations about Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. Did I think there was an organized campaign?

Senator SARBANES. Yes.

Mr. HUBBELL. I think there was a lot of people looking at everything and anything Mr. or Mrs. Clinton ever had done in their lives and they were raising questions about them. As it related to her work at the law firm, everything was open, fair game, so we tried to predict what kinds of questions might be asked. Primarily, it was based on prior campaigns.

Senator SARBANES. When these questions came up, I take it the response to them was required immediately or virtually immediately; is that—

Mr. HUBBELL. For example, you might get a call at noon, and they may inform you that they are on a 5:00 p.m. deadline. Now, we may have to say we will get back to them, but it helps if you can give them an answer. So there was a lot of preliminary work done in anticipation of issues that might come up.

Senator SARBANES. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But, of course, in 1993, in January when you took the records to Washington, the campaign was over; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way—

Senator SARBANES. The political campaign was over, but the other campaign may still have been going on.

Mr. HUBBELL. I think it still is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In January 1993, were you anticipating these questions rising up again?

Mr. HUBBELL. I had no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you answered a question of Mr. Kravitz about the 1987 and later time sheets, about whether you have an understanding that those are not responsive to the Committee's request for documents?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have no idea what the Committee's request for documents is. To me?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Or to anyone?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what the Committee is requesting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't remember what's in the time sheets?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know what's in the time sheets, what she did from 1987 to 1988.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You are not in a position to say, one way or the other, whether those time sheets are responsive to requests; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I am not. I don't think I tried to do that. I think Mr. Kravitz was saying that Mr. Clark had said they were not responsive to the Committee's request.

Mr. KRAVITZ. Actually, it was Mr. Atkins, the attorney for Mr. Clark.

Mr. HUBBELL. I am not trying to say one way or the other.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You shouldn't take responsibility for things someone else is saying. I want to go back to your understanding of what Mr. Ward's deal was in October 1985 concerning this purchase of the property. I think we established that, at least shortly after the closing, you understood there was a nonrecourse loan to him from Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, and that he was holding part of the property for Madison Financial; is that correct?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's part of the deal, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood Madison Financial was a subsidiary of Madison Guaranty?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood when they were talking about some kind of a limit of the property that could be held by Madison, that that was relating to a savings and loan limitation in terms of the amount of the investment that the savings and loan could make; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. The savings and loan or its subsidiary. I was not—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Ward also told you about the fact that Madison had an option to buy the property?

Mr. HUBBELL. My understanding is it was initially put in terms that, as it was sold off, Madison would get the proceeds.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you understood, at least shortly after the closing, the deal was structured so that Mr. Ward didn't put up any money, the financing for the money came from Madison; he was holding the property on behalf of Madison; he had no personal liability to Madison if he didn't pay the loan back; and as the property was sold, Madison would get the proceeds; that's it in a nutshell?

Mr. HUBBELL. The one issue that has not been discussed is that, at the time of the sale, Mr. Ward normally would have received a commission of $175,000. He deferred that and was going to get a commission as the property was sold.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So for his participation in this arrangement, he would get a commission?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was to get a commission as the property was sold as opposed to when it was bought at that time, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have knowledge that he had no personal risk in the transaction, he was holding it in his name to accommodate a regulatory issue for the bank, that Madison was going to get the proceeds of any sales, then Madison was financing his share of the deal, and you knew all that shortly after the deal closed?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew that, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. With your experience, having done bank work, you didn't see that this was an obvious effort to evade a regulatory restriction upon the bank's investment?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have never represented an S&L. I don't know whether it was illegal or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Without getting technical about it being an S&L, just referring to the characteristics of the transaction, which is one in which there is no economic risk; Mr. Ward doesn't put his assets at risk and he doesn't get the benefit of the deal, all he gets is his fixed commission; isn't that a classic nominee or warehousing or parking transaction?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think of parking and warehousing a little bit differently, Mike, but—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Forget the terminology. Isn't it classic?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hubbell, you are a former Supreme Court Judge, Associate Attorney General, you were well known and well regarded in the legal community. Your father-in-law had informed you about this and you didn't know prior, but thereafter, you learned shortly thereafter because the terms were changed a little bit, you knew that he had been used to park this land he didn't have any money in and he told you he had a nonrecourse loan; isn't that a fact?

Mr. HUBBELL. He had a nonrecourse loan, he absolutely did.

The CHAIRMAN. And you didn't know that McDougal was using him to park the land?

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator, I knew that he was the owner but that McDougal could sell it and they would—

The CHAIRMAN. Exercise an option any time he wanted. They had 270 days to take it back; isn't that true?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that. Let me tell you why I feel you and your partners were reluctant in this. This was 4 days. I think the firm was absolutely concerned and I think some of your people were concerned with the legal liabilities they might incur in terms of knowing and representing both the bank and Seth Ward in a transaction which the Federal regulators have said was a sham transaction because then you have liability there. Isn't that true?

Mr. HUBBELL. If the regulators said——

The CHAIRMAN. If the Rose Law Firm was aware of what I've outlined to you, that Seth Ward was used to park this land, then they would have potential liability. Eventually this whole thing wound up costing the taxpayers millions of dollars, so there is a real potential for liability; isn't that true?

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator, I don't want to argue with you——

The CHAIRMAN. We are not going to argue, but let me tell you something.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let me finish.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. HUBBELL. I have read the report which says there isn't liability, so I don't know that there is liability.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me just stop you there. Later, you can go back and I will give you all the time you want.

That report was written without the benefit of the information that this Committee now has. Those who made the report did not have the information as it relates to the hours, as it relates to the work, as it relates to the knowledge of some of the partners, including yourself.

The fact of the matter is that there came a point in time that you learned about this, you say shortly thereafter. What obligation do you have as it relates to that kind of situation where you represent both Madison and Seth Ward? That's number one.

Number two, you had a partner who was there who participated. He would have us think he was the proverbial potted plant. That was Mr. Thrash, he didn't do anything.

Now, I have to tell you it is not unreasonable for people to conclude that one of the reasons that we have this great gap and that we can't say this is the first time is because, after the regulators clearly spell it out, and after you see a pattern of parking of properties, this isn't the first time, this is repeatedly. McDougal had used this as a device over and over again with at least four or five different people working in the bank who had positions somewhat similar, analogous to your father-in-law.

Do you mean to tell me that the law firm was not concerned? You didn't come to be concerned about potential liabilities if it were known that the law firm was aware; if indeed the law firm was aware of the situation, that you weren't concerned about potential liability?

Senator SARBANES. Are we talking about the initial purchase from IDC?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the initial purchase. The one that Seth Ward made, and thereafter, the other transactions that took place.

Senator SARBANES. Well, the regulators themselves have said that the——

The CHAIRMAN. Senator, you can raise that. The regulators were not aware and did not have this information, nor did they say that they had no liability. As a matter of fact, they are clearly reviewing this right now.

Mr. Hubbell, I am asking you, do you mean to tell me there didn't come a point in time that you weren't concerned about potential liability?

Mr. HUBBELL. At what time? That's the point. I was not concerned back in 1985.

The CHAIRMAN. But in 1992 and 1993 you were concerned?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I wasn't in 1992. I wasn't, Senator. There had been a lawsuit about the property by that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me tell you, this is the initial report by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board that goes back to May 8, 1986. It states:

Ward apparently warehoused this land to reduce Madison Financial's investment, and the attendant borrowing from Madison. In this way, limitation to Madison's investments in its service corporation are avoided. In fact, $100,000 of Ward's remaining loan on Castle Grande land appears to have been diverted to Madison Financial through a third party. By using this circuitous route, additional Madison Guaranty investments in Madison Financial was disguised as a loan to Ward.

Mr. HUBBELL. Senator, that's why I was trying to focus on timing. At the closing, when I heard about the closing, I was told that the transaction was there, and I was told that one of my lawyers was there that I have great respect for. I also knew that Seth had given up consideration for the deal, that being the $175,000 that he would have been entitled to at closing. So I wasn't concerned then.

When I read those reports, obviously it raised a flag to me. I read them, and I was concerned about it. I am not trying to tell you I wasn't concerned about it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, because I think——

Mr. HUBBELL. I was trying to put it in the context of timing, of when I became concerned.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know in 1984 there was actually an order in place, an agreement with the regulators, strictly limiting the amount of investments that the savings and loan could make?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I knew that in 1989, Mike.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you see this 1986 examination report?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1989.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you did know, though, shortly after the closing in 1985, that this entire deal had been structured so that Mr. Ward didn't put anything at risk, didn't stand to benefit from the proceeds of the sales, didn't put up any money for the purchase, and was holding it in order to help the savings and loan avoid a limitation on what it could do in its own name?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did know all of that. I also knew that he had deferred receiving his commission.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The commission was going to be for his agreeing to hold the property?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, he would have been entitled to a commission at the closing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. For buying the property?

Mr. HUBBELL. He would have been entitled to 10 percent of the $1,750,000.

Mr. CHERTOFF. For the finder's fee?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But in terms of his agreement to participate in this transaction, you understood he was agreeing to participate in a transaction in which he was holding property or creating the illusion of being the owner?

Mr. HUBBELL. A part of the property, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When in reality he wasn't really the owner because he didn't have the attributes of what an owner of property has; he wasn't putting money at risk, he wouldn't gain from the property, and he wasn't putting money up for the purchase.

Did you go to anybody in the firm, Mr. Thrash or anybody else, and say you guys better be careful about this transaction?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In your discussions with Mr. Ward, were you involved in his later transactions? Did you know, for example, about the February 28, 1986 transactions which wound up discharging the rest of the liability on Mr. Ward's note?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was aware after they were done, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you aware that they were all done on a single day?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you aware that Madison Guaranty gave Mr. Ward a $400,000 loan in March 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. I have some memory of that. I don't know the details of all of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were you told that was about?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know. There were attempts to infuse capital, and I know some other people were involved. I just don't know what it was all about. I didn't try to follow it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How does a loan to Mr. Ward infuse capital?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have testified earlier you were concerned about Mr. Ward—

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I testified that when I read the reports, I became concerned.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Back in 1985, you testified one of the reasons you had a discussion with Mr. Ward about this nonrecourse loan was because you were concerned about whether Mr. Ward would get obligated in a way that would jam him up; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was concerned when he was talking about taking the property himself, that he would be able to meet those obligations, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was your concern for Mr. Ward diminished in 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't care anymore in 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, my concern about him personally had not diminished, but my concern about the transaction had diminished because it was a nonrecourse loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When he called you in 1986 and told you he had gotten a $400,000 loan from Madison Guaranty, did you wonder about that?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am sure I did, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you wonder about the fact that there was a crossing note within a few weeks in which Madison Financial took out a note to Ward for $300,000?

Mr. HUBBELL. Did I worry about it?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you wonder about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was still doing transactions with Madison, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So he is both borrowing money from Madison and lending money to Madison at the same time?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't think that was odd?

I am wondering why, at some point, somebody, let alone an experienced attorney who has some personal interest in making sure a family member doesn't get hurt in some way, doesn't see a red flag go up and say there is something about this that's fishy, let me find out. I am trying to——

Mr. HUBBELL. I was concerned for my father-in-law, but who would I go to except my father-in-law?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask him about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was talking to me about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did his explanation satisfy you?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't understand it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you try to go to someone at Madison to try to find out about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you about the option?

Mr. HUBBELL. I know that at some point I knew about an option, but I read that report yesterday, and I still don't understand the option.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That option was for the same piece of property that was also involved in this crossing note for $300,000?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mike, maybe my mind is gone, but I read that report and I still don't understand the option, so I can't tell you what that option is for.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have discussion with Mr. Ward about the option in 1986?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am sure I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you think he mentioned to you it is alright because someone from your firm helped me out with it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you think of any reason why, given the discussions we now have established you were having with Mr. Ward about all these different transactions emanating from this original purchase, can you tell us why he went to Mrs. Clinton to do this option?

Mr. HUBBELL. Because he knew she was on retainer for Madison. It doesn't surprise me at all that he went to Mrs. Clinton. He dealt with Mrs. Clinton on almost a daily basis for another client.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that would be for who?

Mr. HUBBELL. The Little Rock Airport Commission.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was his dealing with her on that?

Mr. HUBBELL. He was Chairman of the Commission and she was the attorney for the Little Rock Airport Commission.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You think he went to her to do this option because he was used to dealing with her, he was comfortable dealing with her?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I guess your impression is he used to talk to her about business as well?

Mr. HUBBELL. As far as the Airport Commission, I am sure he did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, the option had nothing do with the Airport Commission, did it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was business, wasn't it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So what do you know about Mr. Ward's discussions of business with Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think my time is up.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Hubbell, did the Rose Law Firm have a program or a policy to, after a period of time, destroy files and records in order not to build up an overload in terms of storage?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. It wasn't a written policy, but on a yearly basis, at a minimum, we were given information about the closed files and asked to destroy as much as we could.

Senator SARBANES. I guess it is quite possible that these files, which have now been furnished and provided in response to various inquiries—and everyone's assaulting you for taking them and I understand that—but if they had been left, they might have been destroyed at the firm in the normal course of cleaning out past records; is that possible?

Mr. HUBBELL. It is certainly possible. I was surprised to find what we did, to be honest with you.

Senator SARBANES. You mean when you looked in 1992—

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. When you started out, you thought more of those files would be gone?

Mr. HUBBELL. I was surprised that we would have any files.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the normal timeframe within which people at the firm were told to hold on to files before they had them destroyed under this procedure?

Mr. HUBBELL. There wasn't a policy. Everybody was aware that we had a 3-year statute, but it depended on the individual lawyer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I know what you mean, but for everyone who is not a lawyer, what do you mean by a "3-year statute"?

Mr. HUBBELL. With regard to negligence and performing legal work, it is 3 years from the act, so you usually keep everything for 3 years. Now some people regularly throw things out. Even though you have a 3-year statute, you still might purge the file after a year just to save space.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say a 3-year statute, am I right, your insurance carrier would want the firm to keep all documents that might be the subject of litigation within 3 years after—

Mr. HUBBELL. I am sure of that, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you have, for example, an option generated in May 1986, your statute for possible claims on malpractice, or whatever, wouldn't run, under Arkansas law, until May 1989; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Three years. So you wouldn't want to destroy those documents in 1988, would you?

Mr. HUBBELL. If we are talking about the specific, I can't imagine that we did, but we certainly could have.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, in fact, and we can put it up on the Elmo, and I will pass it down to you, I have what is, I guess, a form that the firm typically used to talk about when things ought to be destroyed using this document policy. We will get it down to you.

It is dated July 21, 1988 to Mrs. Clinton from Mary Russell. Are you familiar with this kind of form?

Mr. HUBBELL. I am sure I have seen something similar.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This indicates that Madison Guaranty S&L files including those relating to the Ward option and IDC were ordered destroyed as of July 21, 1988, which is approximately 2 years after the option was prepared. Would you agree with me?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's what it appears to say, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it was before this statute of limitations on malpractice would have run?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I guess it is supposed to be returned on August 9, 1988 to the records room. In August 1988, Ward versus Madison, the trial between Mr. Ward and the Madison Bank, over these commissions was going on; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Mike, I don't know exactly when it was filed, but I am not surprised.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was filed in 1987, but will you accept my representation?

Mr. HUBBELL. Once it was filed, it was going on until 1993.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The first trial in State court was underway in August 1988 at exactly this time period; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know, Mike. I know I was there, but I can't tell you—

Mr. CHERTOFF. I will represent to you, we have the transcript and—

Mr. HUBBELL. I am not saying you don't; I just don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Of course, the subject of that case involved, to some degree, the very transactions involving property in this location that we have been talking about, including the Holman Acres which was the subject of the option and the loans; right? That was the subject of the litigation?

Mr. HUBBELL. I thought the subject of the litigation was the commissions.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was the commissions for property, including this particular piece of property, Holman Acres; right? It was the commissions on the IDC that was the subject—

Mr. HUBBELL. The commissions on the IDC, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you would agree with me that records relating to the IDC would be within the universe of things that someone would want in discovery. Did anybody contact you or the firm, to your knowledge, seeking discovery or information about whether the firm had records relating to the IDC in connection with this case?

Mr. HUBBELL. To my knowledge, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Ward originally came to you to ask you to take on the case; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Ward ever discuss with you whether there was material in the file that might be helpful to him in terms of his dealing with this case?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have a doubt that Mr. Ward knew you had in your file documents that related to the case?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't, now that I know that we closed the loan. No, I don't know that they helped him or hurt him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You know the option document was prepared at the firm as well; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. If the option was part of the litigation. I just don't remember that being a big issue, but I read in the report that it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now in 1989 you get engaged—"you" meaning the firm as well as you—to represent the RTC in the case against Frost; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In connection with that, you have to deal with the issue of conflicts of interest; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Isn't it a fact that the Ward loans themselves became part of the litigation in the Frost case?

Mr. HUBBELL. We looked at the Ward loans as possible damages.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you understood, in the preparation of the case against Frost, at least at some point, that the very loans that your father-in-law had been involved in, that you had been discussing with him, that the firm had been involved in closing on, that these could become ingredients of the case you were handling for the RTC?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't think so, Mike. We weren't focusing on the initial purchase. We were focusing on the subsequent sales.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What about the subsequent loans, for example, the $400,000 loan from Madison to Ward and the $300,000 loan back from Ward to Madison, was that part of it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know the specifics. I think we were focusing initially on loans to Governor Tucker, Senator Fulbright, and some others.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that loans to Governor Tucker and Senator Fulbright were involved in this?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did. Initially when there were spreadsheets made on this transaction, that being the Castle Grande transaction or the IDC transaction, the RTC was showing this as still a profitable loan for the institution. So, initially, we were not going to include it in our damage calculation because it actually showed a profit.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Then you learned it was really a $4 million loss?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not. Even to the point of settlement, I don't think there was an issue of whether there was a loss in this transaction or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, in 1989 you understood this Castle Grande transaction or IDC transaction was going to be part of the litigation involving Frost; right, as damages potentially?

Mr. HUBBELL. Potentially. We had to make a determination of whether to include that or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood at least as of 1989 there was a relationship between Castle Grande and the IDC?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew about Castle Grande and the IDC from my father-in-law from the get-go.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He didn't make a secret of the relationship between those two, did he?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now at the same time that this case is going on where you are representing the RTC against Frost, the case that your father-in-law has against Madison on the commissions, that's not over yet because the RTC was not content to accept the jury verdict in which your father-in-law won the commissions; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the RTC went back to try to reclaim that money from your father-in-law; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. It did, it appealed the judgment. Then, once the money was obtained from the escrow fund, it continued to appeal the decision of the jury.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, there was a report called the Borod & Huggins report?

Mr. HUBBELL. Borod.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Borod & Huggins report, which at a point in time you sought to obtain in connection with the RTC versus Frost case; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you learned there was an objection raised by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan because they felt that that was something that, if it got transmitted to Mr. Ward, might interfere with the RTC's ability to get the money back from Mr. Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. I wasn't aware that that was their concern. I was aware they were concerned about me representing the RTC in the litigation, and concerned that I was going to be transmitting information to Mr. Ward that I would obtain in the Frost case. I wasn't aware that specifically, they were concerned that I would take the Borod & Huggins report and give it to Mr. Ward or anything like that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you get the Borod & Huggins report?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it ring a bell when you read about the transactions they were talking about, that these were some of the same transactions your father-in-law was involved in?

Mr. HUBBELL. There was actually even some discussion about my father-in-law in the Borod & Huggins report.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you discuss that with your father-in-law?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you, at that point, become concerned about your father-in-law's exposure?

Mr. HUBBELL. I think I told you, at about the same time I was reading exam reports and other reports and I was concerned about the allegations that were being made.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I want to—

Mr. HUBBELL. Mike, I believe that I read those before I read the similar-type accusations and pleadings, whenever they came up. I mean, if the pleadings and the briefs that were filed by the RTC raise those issues, that's when I first became concerned. I can't tell you exactly which one I read first.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you understand that this whole issue about whether the Rose Law Firm had a conflict in taking on the Frost case is really tied up, in part, with an understanding of what you knew about Mr. Ward's involvement in these loans and what the Rose Law Firm's involvement in these loans was?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't see any connection between the two?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I don't see that as the issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Apparently, there are several Pillsbury reports. There is a Pillsbury report that actually deals with the Frost litigation issue. I want to read to you a portion of that from page 9.

Mr. HUBBELL. Which report is this?

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is one of the Pillsbury reports. I think it deals in particular with the Frost litigation. It is at page 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Can we get Mr. Hubbell a copy? Do you have a copy of that report? We are going to get it right down to you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you look at the last paragraph, near the bottom of the page, "In addition"—well, let me go back.

The preceding paragraph begins by saying "Representation of the RTC in the Frost case," and they mean representation by Mr. Hubbell, by the firm, "was adverse to the interests of Ward." They go on to discuss why Ward had interests that were adverse to those of the RTC in the Frost case.

Then, they go further. In the next paragraph, they say:

In addition, and more serious to the RTC, the RTC's position that loans to Ward would have 'jury appeal' as improper loans was inconsistent with the interests of the Rose Law Firm, which had represented Ward and Madison Guaranty in the transaction that originally gave rise to the loans. Thus, the Rose Law Firm's own conduct in transactions involving Ward and Madison Guaranty that were potentially material to the Frost litigation was in question to the degree that the RTC's ability to have a fair trial could have been affected had that conduct been disclosed to the jury. The circumstances raise a serious question as to how the Rose Law Firm could have concluded that its representation of the RTC would not be materially limited by its prior representation of Ward and Madison Guaranty.

This, by the way, is prepared even before the billing records; detailing more of the nature of that, have come out.

I want to go down to the last sentence on page 10, where they go on to say:

While, in different circumstances, it could have been appropriate to screen Hubbell from any participation in the Frost case overall, because of his relationships with Ward, it is unthinkable to keep the lead attorney in a contested litigation in the dark concerning issues material to the case, particularly without informing the client.

Evidently, the people at Pillsbury, as Ms. Black from the RTC, who we heard from yesterday, saw a very clear connection between these loans, the original IDC and Castle Grande transaction, and this conflict issue. This conflict issue is the thing that was explored again and again; first by the FDIC in 1993, the result of which is based on only half of the facts. They only had half of the facts so they came up with a conclusion that they don't have a problem. You send that over to the White House.

But, eventually, the RTC IG's Office and this group of Pillsbury lawyers do develop more of the facts and they see a serious conflict of interest.

Now, I want to ask you, Mr. Hubbell, can you really suggest to us that when you learned in 1993 and in 1994—particularly from Ms. Breslaw in September 1993—that this issue of the Rose Law Firm conflicts of interest and what Rose had done for the RTC and what Rose had done for Madison, when you learned this was going to be reopened, you didn't understand this was going to just open the whole can of worms up?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You had discussions with Mr. Kennedy about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How often did you have discussions with him about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's hard to say because I would talk to Mr. Kennedy a lot over issues at Justice.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew Mr. Lindsey was concerned about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I knew Mr. Lindsey was involved in being the point person at the White House at that point to respond to inquiries regarding Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew Mr. Altman, as the head of the RTC, would ultimately make decisions about whether the RTC would pursue a case against Madison or against you personally regarding this issue of the conflict of interest?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I did not know that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't know Mr. Altman was the head of the RTC?

Mr. HUBBELL. I did know he was the head of the RTC.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You could have figured out that ultimately he would be the person to make the final call?

Mr. HUBBELL. I guess I could have figured it out. I didn't even think of it in that regard.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Nussbaum called you about the fact that he was having discussions with Mr. Altman about whether Altman should recuse himself; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I didn't say that. I said I had heard Mr. Nussbaum talk about his discussions with Mr. Altman about whether he should recuse or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You heard that in February 1994 from Mr. Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's right, but you had mentioned a telephone conversation where Bernie talked to me about it specifically—

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't know if it was by telephone or in person, but you had a discussion with Mr. Nussbaum?

Mr. HUBBELL. I didn't have a discussion. If you know Mr. Nussbaum, you don't necessarily have discussions, but I certainly heard about the issue of recusal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So he saw fit to tell you about it?

Mr. HUBBELL. I had heard it, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In 1993, you were having conversations with Seth Ward; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. When?

Mr. CHERTOFF. In 1993.

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, I was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You said that was about unfinished business at Madison?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was that unfinished business?

Mr. HUBBELL. In 1993, early 1993, he and the RTC were discussing settling the litigation between the two, and his lawyer had made a recommendation that they accept the offer of settlement.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They didn't want to accept it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, Seth Ward didn't want to accept it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So what was Mr. Ward talking to you about?

Mr. HUBBELL. He wanted to know what I thought about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he want your help in getting the settlement offer changed?

Mr. HUBBELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you that he had communicated with his Senator, tried to get some intervention against the RTC from his Senator?

Mr. HUBBELL. I know that Mr. Ward would write the Senators complaining about the conduct of the RTC.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hear that was passed over to the White House Counsel's Office?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hear that Mr. Foster saw it?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hear that Mr. Foster had to recuse himself from dealing with that issue?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. Foster tell you about the fact that it had come across his desk?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you leave it with Mr. Ward?

Mr. HUBBELL. I told him to rely on his lawyer. He was the best lawyer I knew, and that he ought to rely on him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He finally settled; right?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was that?

Mr. HUBBELL. Sometime in 1993, early 1993.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he tell you when he settled, did he call you and tell you when he settled?

Mr. HUBBELL. I don't know if he told me or Mr. Ray told me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you were still keeping up on the course of this dispute between the RTC and Mr. Ward as late as 1993?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hubbell, I think we can wrap this up. With your indulgence, we will continue.

Senator SARBANES. I have a couple of questions, but I will yield.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Hubbell, I want to ask you in connection with, I guess, judging the quality of your testimony, whether you have had discussions with anybody in the last couple of years concerning any financial arrangements that might be made in terms of work or any other kind of financial arrangements when you get out of jail?

Mr. HUBBELL. Me?

Mr. CHERTOFF. I don't mean with your wife or family. I mean, with anybody who has a business or anything of that sort.

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I have not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you familiar with a group called the LIPO Group?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What kind of entity is that?

Mr. HUBBELL. They are a group in Indonesia that at one time had a major ownership of Worthen Bank.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Have you had discussions with anybody, either from the LIPO Group or representing the LIPO Group, concerning whether you might do any business with them or work for them when you get out of jail?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, I have not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Have you had discussions with representatives of the LIPO Group at all in the last 3 years?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When?

Mr. HUBBELL. When I left the Justice Department prior to my pleading guilty.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was the nature of those discussions?

Mr. HUBBELL. I'm sorry, I can't disclose those.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it involve something of a financial nature?

Mr. HUBBELL. May I consult with my lawyer?

[Witness conferred with counsel.]

Mr. Chertoff, I don't think that I am violating the attorney-client privilege. The LIPO Group itself was not my client, but a representative of that group, one of their affiliates, was a client of mine, and the nature of all the conversations I had related to that representation. That representation occurred in the summer and fall of 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Over what period of time, how long did the representation last?

Mr. HUBBELL. It lasted until I pled guilty in 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Which was when?

Mr. HUBBELL. December 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it lasted for over a year?

Mr. HUBBELL. No, it did not. I left the Justice Department in April, and I believe I started representing them sometime in the summer of 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it lasted for about 5 months?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were in practice in Washington?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have other clients?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Had you had a preexisting relationship with this group?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, how does this—I am not quite sure—

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to make clear, I have had no discussions about getting paid by anybody when I leave jail. I have no employment opportunities at this moment.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I guess the question is actually whether, in connection with this representation, you received a large amount of money and whether that may have had an impact on the degree of your cooperation with the Independent Counsel or with us?

Mr. HUBBELL. That's pretty rotten.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am just going to ask you the question about what the nature of the arrangement was.

Mr. HUBBELL. I was doing work for the client and they paid me like the other clients—

Mr. CHERTOFF. On an hourly basis?

Mr. HUBBELL. No. I will not represent anybody on a hourly basis anymore.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest this. I am going to suggest that any further questions along this line be taken in a private deposition. I will ask counsel to not go forward as it relates to pursuing this line. I think that would be in the best interest. If there are facts that we should know, that's the way we can pursue them. If there's information that is not relevant, there is no need to bring it out in a public way.

It would seem to me that that would be best, and I would ask Mr. Chertoff to suspend any further questioning of Mr. Hubbell as it relates to this particular area that has been opened up.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Could I suggest that that suggestion might have been advisable some time ago before all of these innuendos were thrown out on the record. It may in fact be terribly unfair.

Mr. HUBBELL. I think it is awfully unfair. I would have to say that the Chairman has done everything possible, I have answered questions for people for a year and a half now. Anybody who asked a question, I have answered. I have never invoked the privilege. I have never done anything but answer your questions for a year and a half.

And now to imply that I am not entitled to work at all, Mike, between that time and wanting to know about my clients, I feel I am entitled to say something. I have for a year and a half been hauled all over this country, answering questions, and I have answered every dadgum one of them.

I am a little bit upset that, after it is over, somebody wants to know about my private business like there's something wrong with me trying to do some work and support my family. I have a wife and four children, I needed the work, and I did the work. But there wasn't anything improper involved with it and nobody promised me a damned thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I think, Mr. Hubbell, you are certainly entitled to put that answer on the record, and I accept it. I suggest if there be any further need to explore that avenue, we do it on camera, by way of deposition, so that we can ascertain whether or not there is any relevance. It would seem to me that would be the manner in which we should proceed.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, the hearing having reached this note, I have no further questions and I hope that we are at a conclusion here. Are we at a conclusion?

The CHAIRMAN. No further questions.

I want to thank you, Mr. Hubbell, for your participation. I think you have brought a certain note of clarity. As it relates to the billing records, you have answered and you have narrowed tremendously the scope of where those records could have been. For that, in particular, I want to thank you, because that's an area that was open, that we were not comfortable with in terms of where they may or may not have been.

I want to thank you for your testimony under these very difficult circumstances.

We stand in recess until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 6:30 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10:00 a.m., on Thursday, February 8, 1996.]

[Appendix supplied for the record follows:]

1       A     Yeah. I mean, I'm basing all of this on what 2 you're telling me.

3       Q     Just so we're clear, all I'm telling you is 4 that she has given a statement to the effect that she
5 typed this letter. She didn't say, really, anything
6 beyond that. She did not describe the circumstances.
7 She just said she recognized it as something that she 8 typed.

9       A     Okay. And I said based on that, if she did,
10 then what I do remember is Mr. Ward coming into my 11 office on occasion with handwritten letters asking my 12 secretary to type things because he didn't have one.
13 And I would give it to Debbie, and she would type it.
14 And after she was finished, she would bring it back into 15 my office. And he would sit in my office and have a cup
16 of coffee.

17       Q     And you might have read it over and talked to 18 him briefly?

19       A     Yeah. Or he might have gave it to me to read
20 it, or vice versa, or not at all.

21       Q     But with respect to this particular letter, do
22 you have any recollection of whether you did read it and 23 discuss it with Mr. Ward?

24       A     No.

25       Q     At this time, September 1985, what was your 26 understanding, if any, with respect to the reasons why

TELEPHONE INTERVIEW OF WEBSTER L. HUBBELL

1 Madison was not going to buy the entire property itself?

2 A My understanding was based on what Mr. Ward
3 told me, that maybe whoever closed the loan was -- was 4 that Madison had limits on what it could own in its own
5 name, and so Mr. Ward was going to own part of it until 6 it could be sold.

7 Q At this time, August, September, October 1985
8 and, again, to the best of your recollection, did you
9 give any thought as to whether it was a permissible way
10 of dealing with the limits you've just described to have 11 Mr. Ward buy a part of this property on the terms as 12 you've described them earlier in this interview, which 13 is to say with the purchase of Mr. Ward's parcel being 14 100 percent financed by Madison and with Mr. Ward to get 15 a commission on the sale of any part of the property?

16 A No. I wouldn't one way or the other.

17 Q In 1985, did you give any thought whatsoever
18 as to whether, given the terms as you understood them,
19 Mr. Ward might be considered a straw man or nominee?

20 A Yeah. You know, you use the word, and I
21 remember it back in law school. But I didn't give it
22 any consideration, you know. "Straw man" means, to me,
23 somebody who you clear title through. So I don't think
24 that's the way I would look at it, if I sold property,
25 and you're trying to clear it to sell it through a straw
26 man.

1 necessary to replace the firm.

2 Since the case had been filed in Arkansas, I wanted to 3 hire an Arkansas firm. An accounting malpractice case is 4 complicated and it requires a sophisticated firm. Arkansas
5 is a small state. There were not many firms that I believed 6 were suitable.

7 I considered several firms and ultimately hired the 8 Rose Law Firm. I made this decision because I was very 9 satisfied with the manner in which the Rose firm had handled
10 a previous case.

11 When a client hires a law firm, and the Government was 12 a client, the law firm has an obligation to ensure that 13 there are no conflicts of interest. The ethical rules
14 require lawyers to do this, even if they are not asked.

15 The client cannot do this job itself. Short of issuing 16 a subpoena, the Government does not know and has no way of 17 knowing who the Rose Law Firm's other clients are. Only the 18 Rose Law Firm has that information. When I retained the law
19 firm on behalf of the Government, it disclosed no conflicts
20 of interest.

21 I few months after I had hired the Rose firm, I learned
22 that Seth Ward was Webster Hubbell's father-in-law and that 23 Ward was in litigation with Madison. Under the ethical 24 rules, an adverse interest by an in-law is not imputed to a
25 lawyer. It is not a conflict of interest. Nevertheless, I

1 asked Mr. Hubbell about the Ward matter. Mr. Hubbell told
2 me that he was not representing Mr. Ward and that he would
3 not do so in the future.

4 He also told me that his relationship with his
5 father-in-law was not a close one. I recall him saying that 6 Mr. Ward was an ardent Republican and that he was an active
7 Democrat.

8 I asked Mr. Hubbell to confirm in writing the fact that 9 he did not represent Ward. He wrote me a letter to that 10 effect, and I concluded, based on that information, that 11 there was no conflict.

12 Given the same information, I would reach the same
13 conclusion today. The conclusion that others have made 14 that there was a conflict of interest, is based on 15 information that I did not have and I do not have. The case
16 against the accounting firm was settled in 1991 for over
17 $1,000,000.

18 To the best of my knowledge, the Rose Law Firm no
19 longer represented the Government in Madison matters after 20 that settlement. Later, through the press, I learned that 21 the Rose Law Firm had represented Madison in the mid-1980s
22 in connection with a matter before a state agency.

23 These stories first began to appear during the 1992
24 presidential campaign. However, the fact that Madison was a 25 former client of the Rose firm does not create a conflict of

MEMORANDUM TO: Chairman Hove

FROM: Douglas H. Jones Doug H. Jones
Acting General Counsel

SUBJECT: Report on the Retention of the Rose Law Firm

As you requested, we have reviewed the FDIC's 1989 retention of the Rose Law Firm with respect to Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan. Attached is a report on our review and findings. As you can see from the report, we found no basis to conclude that the retention involved a conflict of interest by the law firm. Accordingly, we are not recommending any sanctions against the firm.

LEGAL DIVISION REPORT ON THE RETENTION OF THE ROSE LAW FIRM
FOR THE MADISON GUARANTY SAVINGS AND LOAN CONSERVATORSHIP

The purpose of this report is to review the facts and circumstances surrounding the retention of the Rose Law Firm (the "Firm") for the representation of the conservatorship of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan (the "Conservatorship" and the "S&L", respectively) in litigation against the Frost & Co. ("Frost") accounting firm. It explores (1) whether the Firm's prior representation of the S&L before the Arkansas Securities Commissioner constituted a conflict of interest; (2) whether the litigation against the Conservatorship by the father-in-law of the Firm partner in charge of the Frost litigation was a conflict of interest; and (3) whether any action against the Firm is warranted.

Assertions have been made that the Firm had conflicts of interest that should have prohibited it from representing the Conservatorship and the FDIC in the Frost litigation. We have reviewed the time period in which the FDIC was responsible for managing the Conservatorship (from February 28, 1989 through August 9, 1989, when the Resolution Trust Corporation was established) to determine the facts related to the Firm's retention. As a part of our review, we looked at all relevant internal FDIC and RTC materials from that time, reviewed relevant materials identified by the Firm, and interviewed each of the participants and others who were involved with the Conservatorship.

As detailed below, based on the information available to us, we have found no basis to conclude that under the then applicable rules either situation involved a conflict of interest. Accordingly, we recommend no sanctions against the Firm.

Background

On February 7, 1989, the FDIC entered into an agreement with the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation ("FSLIC") to act as agent for the FSLIC in any receivership or conservatorship appointed for an insured savings association after January 1, 1989. On February 28, 1989, FSLIC was appointed conservator for the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan. Pursuant to the agreement with the FSLIC, the FDIC was appointed the managing agent for the Conservatorship. In that role, the FDIC was required to marshal the institution's assets and pursue all claims by and defend those against the S&L. Among the litigation existing at the S&L at that time was a suit against the institution's former auditor, Frost & Co. As managing agent, it was the FDIC's responsibility to determine whether that suit had any value and, if so, to continue the pursuit of the action. The FDIC's formal role ended on August 9, 1989, with the creation of the RTC, whose function was to serve as receiver or conservator for any S&L closed after January 1, 1989.

The Firm's Prior Representation

In 1985, the Firm represented the S&L before the Arkansas Securities Commissioner on two matters: a plan to issue a $3 million private placement of preferred stock in the S&L, on which the Commissioner was asked to issue an opinion; and an application by which the S&L, assuming it raised the capital, sought to set up a service corporation that would become a wholly-owned broker dealer of securities. The opinion was issued on May 14, 1985 and the Commissioner approved the service corporation on September 20, 1985, although placing a condition on the approval that the S&L must raise the capital by December 31, 1985. The capital was never raised and the plan was not implemented. There were no communications between the Commissioner's staff and the Firm after 1985 with respect to the securities placement or the plan.

Part of the submission in support of these two applications was an audit of the financial statements of the S&L performed by Frost for calendar year 1984. Certain adjustments to these financial statements were questioned by the Commissioner's office. The records of the Commissioner's office show that the effect of those adjustments was explained in letters from Frost and John Latham, the S&L's chief executive officer, attached to a letter from the Firm on July 25, 1985. There is no indication that the Firm retained the auditor, assisted in any way in the audit or took any position as to the quality of the audit.

In 1988, the S&L initiated litigation against Frost charging that the auditor had been negligent, reckless and breached its contract by failing to fairly represent the S&L's financial condition in the 1984 and 1985 audits. The S&L was represented in the litigation by the law firm of Gerrish and McCreary.

The Gerrish firm also was involved in defending directors and officers of failed banks in actions instituted by the FDIC. After FDIC was appointed managing agent of the Conservatorship, the FDIC staff attorney responsible for the Frost litigation concluded that, pursuant to FDIC policy, the firm had a conflict of interest with the FDIC and had to be replaced. The staff attorney also concluded that few firms in Arkansas had the experience and capacity to do accounting malpractice work, which is considered to be complex in nature. The staff attorney first considered the Arkansas law firm of Wright, Lindsey & Jennings, which had represented FDIC in other matters, but it too had a conflict of interest. The staff attorney then contacted the Rose firm based on previous work done by the firm on behalf of the FDIC in connection with the Corning Bank failure.<sup>2</sup>

The staff attorney contacted a partner of the firm (based on the staff attorney's recollection, probably Webster Hubbell) and asked the firm to take over representation. The staff attorney is sure the firm would have been asked about any conflicts of interest, but due to the passage of time has no specific recollection of making that request or any response that may have been made. Richard Donovan, a partner with the firm who worked on the case, states that he recalls Mr. Hubbell having advised the staff attorney of prior representation of the S&L on a matter involving the Arkansas Securities Commissioner. Mr. Hubbell's recollection differs. He recalls advising the staff attorney very generally that the firm had done a small amount of work for the S&L years earlier, but that he did not view that as amounting to a conflict. He believes the work he was aware of was lending and collection work. He says he does not believe he was aware of the earlier securities work at that time, so he does not believe he discussed it with the staff attorney then. The FDIC staff attorney has no recollection of the issue being raised and says that if it had been it would have been discussed with the attorney's supervisor. The supervisor has no recollection of the issue being raised.

<sup>2</sup> While the firm had sent a letter to the FDIC dated February 28, 1989, soliciting work relating to any S&L failures, it does not appear the staff attorney was aware of that letter or that it influenced her decision to ask the firm to represent the FDIC. Also, assertions have been made that the letter may have been deceptive and misled the FDIC regarding prior representation because it stated "the firm does not represent any savings and loan association in state or federal regulatory matters." However, the letter also states "[f]rom time to time we have provided specialized service to some savings and loan associations in such areas as employment discrimination, work-out of participation loans and bankruptcy." The firm also acknowledged in the letter that there may be individual transactions or situations where a conflict of interest could arise.

The Existence of a Suit Involving Mr. Hubbell's Family

At the time the conservator was appointed (and when the firm was retained), Mr. Hubbell's father-in-law, Seth Ward, Sr., was involved in litigation with the S&L. Mr. Hubbell's father-in-law had obtained a judgment of roughly $470,000 for commissions allegedly owed him by the S&L for the sale of real estate on behalf of Madison Financial Corporation, a subsidiary of the S&L. That case was then on appeal.

Mr. Hubbell says he was aware of the Ward litigation but he did not view it as a conflict. He says he believes he did advise the staff attorney about it, but he cannot be certain. The staff attorney does not recall whether the Ward relationship was raised at the time of the firm's retention in March of 1989. However, another FDIC staff attorney became aware of the relationship and informed the staff attorney on the case, in a letter dated June 8, 1989. At that time, the second staff attorney expressed concern that Mr. Hubbell would have access to information through his representation that could be damaging to the litigation involving Mr. Ward. After reviewing the facts, the staff attorney responsible for the Frost litigation concluded that the facts did not pose a conflict. On June 23, 1989, the staff attorney wrote to the FDIC's Managing Agent for the Conservatorship concerning the Hubbell/Ward relationship, stating that Mr. Hubbell had not represented Mr. Ward in the past and he would not do so in the future.<sup>3</sup> Mr. Hubbell then sent a letter to the FDIC Managing Agent, dated June 28, 1989, in which he affirmed that he had not and would not in the future represent Mr. Ward in the dispute with the S&L.<sup>4</sup> Mr. Hubbell also confirmed in an interview that he had not drafted any documents that were involved in the Ward litigation.

<sup>3</sup> The staff attorney's letter also noted that the primary attorney in the case was Richard Donovan, not Mr. Hubbell, and stated that Mr. Hubbell was involved only in an indirect way. Based on discussions with the staff attorney, this was meant to indicate that Mr. Donovan, as the junior partner on the case, would do most of the day-to-day work. Based on fee bills for the case, Mr. Hubbell performed a significant amount of work.

<sup>4</sup> The issue was raised again after Mr. Hubbell's letter when an FDIC credit specialist sent a memorandum to his supervisor expressing concern about the relationship and seeking senior level review of the situation. This memorandum also was called to the attention of the FDIC's Regional Counsel indicating that this should be "a Washington issue" because the staff attorney responsible for the Frost litigation was based in Washington, D.C. No further action appears to have resulted from these subsequent memoranda.

S 010101

As an added precaution, according to Mr. Hubbell, Mr. Donovan and Gary Speed, another partner at the Firm who worked on the Frost case, the Firm imposed an informal, unwritten procedure in connection with the Frost litigation that kept Mr. Hubbell from having access to information about his father-in-law. According to Messrs. Donovan and Hubbell, Mr. Hubbell was not allowed access to material such as an investigative report done by the S&L's prior attorneys, and he was kept out of several depositions when information concerning Mr. Ward's loans was expected to be involved. Mr. Speed states that Mr. Hubbell would leave the room if Mr. Ward's name came up during discussions, and that he and Mr. Donovan would not discuss Mr. Ward in the presence of Mr. Hubbell.

Analysis

Criteria for Determining Whether a Conflict Exists

The standards governing the professional conduct of attorneys, including issues relating to actual and potential conflicts of interest, are set forth in codes or rules of professional responsibility and conduct adopted by the various states. Many states have adopted, or have patterned their rules on, the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct ("the Model Rules"). Arkansas adopted the Model Rules as its rules of conduct for attorneys in 1985. The Model Rules generally prohibit an attorney from representing a client where the attorney also represents or previously represented another client whose interests are adverse to the first client. The Model Rules provide that a client may waive a conflict of interest by consenting to the representation after consultation with the attorney and provided the attorney reasonably believes the representation will not adversely affect the relationship with the other client. MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT Rule 1.7. Under the Model Rules, and all the state rules of which we are aware, it is the attorney, not the client, who has the primary responsibility to identify conflicts of interest when approached with a request to represent a client with respect to a new matter.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> Notwithstanding that the responsibility to identify any potential conflicts rests principally with the attorney, in 1990 the FDIC Legal Division adopted comprehensive policies and procedures governing the retention of law firms and the waiver of actual or potential conflicts of interest. In 1989, the FDIC's conflicts procedures, however, were less formal. Prior to their retention, firms generally were required to respond to a series of questions regarding past and current representations. Unfortunately, in early 1989, due to the tremendous increase in workload as a result of the FDIC's added FSLIC responsibilities,

The relevant provisions under the Arkansas rules of professional conduct provide that:

"A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client will be directly adverse to another client, unless: (1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not adversely affect the relationship with the other client; and (2) each client consents after consultation"; and

"A lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation of that client may be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client or to a third person, or by the lawyer's own interests, unless: (1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation will not be adversely affected; and (2) the client consents after consultation."

The Firm's Prior Representation

The information regarding whether the Firm disclosed that it had represented the S&L on the prior securities matter is unclear. The more important question, however, is whether a conflict of interest existed that should have been disclosed before the firm agreed to represent the conservator.

In essence, the Firm represented the S&L's interests before the Securities Commissioner in 1985 and it was representing the S&L's interests (on behalf of the S&L's conservator) in 1989. Previous representation of an institution by itself does not create a conflict when a subsequent conservator is appointed for the institution. There is no indication in the records, or based on our review, that the Firm did anything more with respect to the audit in question than take it at face value in its representation in 1985. There did not appear to be any divergence of interest between their representation in 1985 and 1989. As a consequence, the Firm's representation in 1985 was not "directly adverse" to its representation of the Conservatorship in 1989.

In addition, we have found no evidence that the Firm had a close relationship with the S&L which might call into question its independence. The Firm did not serve as general counsel or exclusive or frequent counsel for the S&L. In addition, no member of the Firm served in any senior managerial or directorial such inquiries were not always documented. In this instance, there are no documents showing what inquiry was made of the Firm.

S 010103

relationship with the S&L prior to its failure.

Under the Model Rules, disclosure of prior representation such as involved here may not be required. However, where a firm is aware of such a prior relationship, we would expect it to convey that information to our staff to assist in determining whether to retain the firm. It is not clear whether the information was conveyed to the FDIC staff at the time. However, based on our review, we do not believe the prior representation represented a conflict of interest.

The Existence of a Suit Involving Mr. Hubbell's Family

It is uncertain whether the Hubbell/Ward relationship was disclosed at the time of retention. Nevertheless, it was clearly discussed within three months after retention and the staff attorney concluded there was no conflict. That assessment appears to be correct.

Mr. Hubbell had not represented Mr. Ward so there was no conflict of representation directly adverse to the Conservatorship. Also, Mr. Hubbell's representation of the FDIC did not appear to have any effect on Mr. Ward. Under Arkansas rules, unless Mr. Hubbell's representation of the Conservatorship would be "materially limited" by his "responsibilities to" his father-in-law or his own personal interests, no disclosure was required. Also, FDIC procedures, at that time, would not have required the disclosure of the relationship.

While concern was expressed by some FDIC staff shortly after the Firm's retention that Mr. Hubbell would have access to information that could benefit his father-in-law, there is no indication any such information was transferred. Moreover, Arkansas rules of professional conduct (as do all State rules of conduct) prohibit an attorney from revealing information relating to representation of a client, unless the client consents after consultation. As a precaution, the firm apparently imposed its own informal "firewall" to prevent information regarding Mr. Ward from being passed on to Mr. Hubbell. Also, the FDIC's procedures at that time did not require disclosure of a relationship such as existed with respect to Mr. Hubbell and his father-in-law.

Therefore, no actual conflict appears to have existed. While in this case it is unclear whether advance disclosure was made and there was no requirement that Mr. Hubbell's relationship be disclosed, we want to emphasize that on an issue as subjective as this, we believe the better course would have been for the attorney to make clear and full disclosure in writing to the FDIC and let the FDIC as client determine whether in its judgment the representation at issue was likely to affect its interests adversely.<sup>6</sup> Nevertheless, that was not specifically required at the time and, when disclosure was made, the FDIC determined the representation was not adverse.

Conclusion

In 1989, the Legal Division lacked formal procedures regarding the determination of conflicts of interest and, at the same time, the Division's staff was experiencing an enormous increase in workload due to the rapidly expanding duties of the FDIC. As a consequence, in hindsight documentation regarding the retention of the Firm is more limited than would be ideally hoped for. However, based on our review, we have found no basis to determine that either of the alleged instances involved a conflict of interest.

Therefore, we see no basis to recommend any sanctions against the Firm.

---

<sup>6</sup> In 1990, the FDIC adopted formal procedures to deal with conflicts which emphasized that waivers must be sought even where there is only the "appearance" of a conflict. Also, in 1990, the Supreme Court of Arkansas recognized that although the "appearance of impropriety" is no longer specifically a part of the state's rules of professional conduct the principle is still a part of the rules. ## I. INTRODUCTION.

Pillsbury Madison & Sutro LLP ("PM&S") was retained by the Resolution Trust Corporation to assist in the investigation of possible civil claims against individuals and entities associated with Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association of McCrory, Arkansas ("Madison Guaranty").<sup>1</sup> As part of this investigation, PM&S was asked to investigate certain issues with respect to the legal services rendered to Madison Guaranty by the Rose Law Firm of Little Rock, Arkansas. This report summarizes the scope and results of that part of the investigation.

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF THE INVESTIGATION.

A. Sources of information.

Documents were subpoenaed from the Rose Law Firm.<sup>2</sup> The Rose Law Firm produced approximately 49 banker's boxes of documents, of which approximately 44 banker's boxes pertained to the Frost & Company litigation of 1988-1991.<sup>3</sup> Most of the remaining documents pertained to services rendered before Madison Guaranty failed, or to services rendered to other clients on matters that fell within the scope of the subpoenas.

Documents also were subpoenaed from several dozen other persons. For a full list of subpoenaed individuals and entities, see part II of the General

1 The scope and purpose of the investigation is set forth in the RTC's Order of Investigation dated February 4, 1994.

2 See Appendix A to this report for a list of the subjects covered by the subpoenas to the Rose Law Firm. The documents produced by the Rose Law Firm bear the prefixes "RIC" and "RLF2". Also cited frequently below are documents obtained from the Arkansas Securities Department (prefix "ASD"), from David E. Kendall, counsel to the President and Mrs. Clinton (prefix "DKRT"), and from the RTC's Kansas City office (prefix "RTCKC"). Also cited below is the Report of Investigation dated August 3, 1995 prepared by the RTC's Office of Inspector General with respect to the Rose Law Firm. For example, a citation to "IG Report at III-15" is a reference to page 15 of volume III. Similarly, a citation to "IG Ex. III-35, at 2" is a reference to page 2 of exhibit 35 to volume III.

3 The Frost & Company action, which is the subject of a separate report, originally was styled Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association, et al. v. Frost & Company, No. 88-1193 (Pulaski Cty. Cir. Ct.). After Madison Guaranty failed, the action was removed to United States District Court, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was substituted for the plaintiffs. The action then was styled FDIC v. Frost & Company, No. LR-C-89-0216 (E.D. Ark.). Later still the RTC was substituted for the FDIC, and the case became RTC v. Frost & Company, under the same docket number. Hereinafter, the case will be referred to as "RTC v. Frost & Co." The Rose Law Firm did not enter the case until after the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation was appointed conservator for Madison Guaranty on or about February 28, 1989.

Report on the Investigation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Related Entities (December 28, 1995).

Approximately 45 people have been deposed, interviewed or served with interrogatories in connection with the Madison Guaranty investigation. Of these, approximately a dozen provided information relevant to the Rose Law Firm. The interviews of Clark, Cuffman, Denton, Dover, Hawkins, Hubbell, Raglin, Selig, Strayhorn, Thomas, Thrash and Ward and the interrogatory answers of President and Mrs. Clinton are cited in this report.<sup>4</sup> In addition, this report makes extensive reference to volume III of the Report of Investigation dated August 3, 1995 prepared by the RTC's Office of Inspector General and the 14 bound volumes of exhibits thereto, which include sworn statements and notes of interviews of a number of additional witnesses.

B. Issues examined.

Initially, this part of the investigation focused on work that the Rose Law Firm performed before Madison Guaranty's failure. There were several reasons for this. First, such work was more likely to have caused a loss for which the RTC could seek to recover in litigation. Second, the RTC's Office of Inspector General already was investigating the Rose Law Firm's alleged conflicts of interest and overbilling in connection with work for Madison Guaranty after its failure.<sup>5</sup> Therefore, the initial focus was on the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty before Madison Guaranty went into conservatorship on or about February 28, 1989. This report covers that work.<sup>6</sup>

The Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty primarily concerned two matters: The first matter was securities law work undertaken in 1985 and 1986, as part of an effort to buy a brokerage firm and a related effort to recapitalize Madison Guaranty by issuing preferred stock, neither of which came to fruition. The second matter was real estate work undertaken in 1985 and 1986 pertaining to the acquisition and development of the "Castle Grande" project, a real estate project owned by Madison Guaranty's subsidiary, Madison Financial Corporation, and acquired in September-October 1985 from the Industrial Development Corporation of Little Rock, or I.D.C.

<sup>6</sup> Later, PM&S was asked to review the IG Report and the Rose Law Firm's files on RTC v. Frost & Co. with a view toward determining whether the RTC might have a cost-effective claim against the Rose Law Firm based on its handling of that litigation. The results of that part of the investigation are covered in a separate report.

Also examined was the other work performed for Madison Guaranty. As of January 1986, there were five projects, each billed separately. Matter 1 was the stock offering described above. Matter 2 was labeled "limited partnership." Matter 3 concerned a loan in Colorado. Matter 4 was labeled "general" and seems to have covered miscellaneous corporate advice. Finally, matter 5, labeled "I.D.C.," concerned the Castle Grande project.

Before its work for Madison Guaranty, the Rose Law Firm provided services to Madison Bank & Trust Company, a state-chartered bank controlled by the McDougals. After its work for Madison Guaranty, the Rose Law Firm provided services to the Clintons in connection with their investment in Whitewater. The investigation looked briefly at each but found nothing that warranted further investigation. The Rose Law Firm's work in connection with Whitewater is described in another report. It consisted of buying back one lot out of a Mississippi bankruptcy case, repossessing certain other lots on which payments were delinquent, attempting to remedy certain corporate and tax matters as to which Whitewater was delinquent and documenting the transaction by which the Clintons sold their remaining interest in Whitewater to Jim McDougal in December 1992.

III. APPLICABLE LEGAL STANDARDS.

Congress established the RTC "to contain, manage and resolve failed savings associations."<sup>6</sup> Congress gave the RTC the statutory duty of "maximiz[ing] the net present value return from the sale or other disposition of institutions . . . or the assets of such institutions . . . [and] minimiz[ing] the amount of any loss realized in the resolution of cases . . . ."<sup>9</sup> The RTC fulfills this responsibility in part by bringing civil actions in appropriate cases to recover damages.<sup>10</sup> Such cases are brought, however, only if there is reason to believe that the litigation will add to the value of the savings association's estate and thus minimize the losses caused by its failure. If there is no reason to believe that litigation will result in a net recovery, then there is no statutory basis to file a case.

<sup>7</sup> See pages 133-38 of the report entitled Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Whitewater Development Company, Inc., A Preliminary Report to the Resolution Trust Corporation (Apr. 24, 1995) (hereinafter, "Preliminary Report").

<sup>8</sup> Section 101(7) of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 ("FIRREA"), Public Law No. 101-73, 103 Stat. 364.

This statutory mandate requires the determination of whether the Rose Law Firm part of the investigation has revealed potential claims that can be litigated in a cost-effective manner. Put another way, the issue is whether claims can be stated that have an expected value greater than the expected cost of litigating them.

The scope of this part of the investigation also is defined by the applicable federal statute of limitations, which encompasses claims for fraud or intentional misconduct. This statute of limitations applies to claims arising from fraud, intentional misconduct resulting in unjust enrichment, or intentional misconduct resulting in substantial loss to the institution . . . ."

Thus, for the RTC to have a civil claim, there must be proof of fraud or intentional misconduct, and there must be proof that Madison Guaranty (and ultimately the RTC, or the deposit insurance fund) suffered a loss from culpable transactions. In addition, to warrant the institution of legal proceedings by the RTC, culpability, damages and the potential defendants' assets must all be substantial enough to make the litigation cost-effective.

IV. RESULTS OF THE INVESTIGATION.

Bearing in mind these legal standards and the scope of this part of the investigation, the record does not establish that the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty involved misconduct warranting the institution of legal proceedings against it by the RTC.

V. FACTS.

The Rose Law Firm's principal work for Madison Guaranty took place between May 1985 and July 1986. The work ceased altogether in the third quarter of 1987.<sup>12</sup> Before May 1985, the Rose Law Firm undertook one

The alternate three-year statute, 12 U.S.C. § 1821(d)(14), expired on or about February 28, 1992 because Madison Guaranty had been placed into a conservatorship on or about February 28, 1989.

assignment for Madison Bank & Trust Company, which the McDougals also controlled.

A. The Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Bank & Trust Company.

In the early 1980s, the Rose Law Firm represented Madison Bank & Trust Company in a lawsuit brought by another bank.<sup>13</sup> Vincent W. Foster, Jr. and several other attorneys handled the case.<sup>14</sup> It was litigated all the way to the Arkansas Supreme Court, where Madison Bank lost, two justices dissenting. At issue was a covenant not to compete contained in the purchase agreement by which McDougal and others had purchased Madison Bank. The covenant barred Madison Bank from operating a branch bank or a teller's window in the Cities of Huntsville and Hindsville, the Town or Community of Marble, Madison County, Arkansas, and otherwise within a ten (10) mile radius of Huntsville, Madison County, Arkansas . . .

for 10 years.<sup>15</sup> Approximately three months after the purchase, McDougal sought to move Madison Bank's main branch to Huntsville. The sellers sued to enforce the covenant. They prevailed both in the Chancery Court and on appeal.

Mrs. Clinton says she did not work on the case, but in 1982 or 1983 she played some role with respect to attempting to get Madison Bank to pay the Rose Law Firm's bill for the litigation.<sup>16</sup> As she explains it,

Because of gaps and inconsistencies in the documentation, there is no definitive proof of the total fees charged Madison Guaranty by the Rose Law Firm. It appears, however, that the total was approximately $25,000. Madison Guaranty paid the Rose Law Firm $2,000 a month for 15 months, or $30,000. In July 1986, Mrs. Clinton returned $4,622.53 of that total to Madison Guaranty. RLF2 03062-63. The retainer of $30,000 minus the refund of $4,622.53 leaves a difference of $25,377.47.

The Rose Law Firm had first represented Jim McDougal in about 1981 with respect to litigation arising out of his purchase of the Bank of Kingston. I did not work on the 1981 matter, but I recall that Jim disputed the amount of his final bill and refused to pay the entire amount requested.<sup>17</sup>

Other evidence is consistent with this explanation. The one invoice located is dated December 23, 1981, but it covers services "subsequent to our billing dated December 23, 1981 through May 15, 1982," and the listed disbursements go through July 31, 1982. C. J. Giroir, Jr. of the Rose Law Firm sent the invoice to Jim McDougal on October 10, 1983. Implicit if not explicit in the cover letter is that Mrs. Clinton attempted to get McDougal to pay the bill but was not entirely successful.<sup>18</sup> The Clintons' lawyer, David E. Kendall, has confirmed that Mrs. Clinton participated in a minor way in attempting to persuade Madison Bank to pay this receivable. Kendall also confirmed that Madison Bank and McDougal did not pay the Rose Law Firm's bills in full at this time, although (as described below) the matter was rectified in 1985.<sup>19</sup>

Apart from this case, no evidence has been located suggesting that the Rose Law Firm represented other McDougal-controlled entities until 1985, when it started to represent Madison Guaranty.<sup>20</sup> In 1984 and 1985, the Rose Law Firm represented parties that arguably had interests adverse to Madison Guaranty.<sup>21</sup>

As discussed in further detail below, the Rose Law Firm itself does not have McDougal- or Madison Guaranty-related invoices this old. Other documents pertaining to the Madison Bank case include RIC107089 through RIC107528.

20 In May 1984, Les R. Baledge of the Rose Law Firm wrote a letter on Rose Law Firm stationery attempting to interest the Vice President for Finance of Arkansas College in an "investment opportunity." The opportunity was Campobello, a real estate development project later financed by Madison Guaranty through its subsidiary Madison Financial. Campobello is described as 4,000 acres that "[a] friend of mine, Chris V. Wade" has purchased. There is no mention of Madison Financial or Madison Guaranty. RTCKC42779.

21 The Rose Law Firm represented people named Kaufman and Gordon, to whom one Bobby Bratton owed money on a failed real estate deal. Madison Guaranty also loaned Bratton money and apparently took a second position behind Kaufman and Gordon. Bratton filed for relief under Chapter 11 (later converted to Chapter 7). In re Bobby and Leyon Bratton, No. HA- (continued...)

B. The Rose Law Firm's efforts to help Madison Guaranty obtain permission to operate a brokerage firm and issue preferred stock.

In 1985 and early 1986, the Rose Law Firm represented Madison Guaranty in an effort to obtain permission from Arkansas regulators to issue preferred stock and to operate a securities brokerage firm. The regulators ultimately approved the application to engage in brokerage services on condition that Madison Guaranty increase its net worth to meet the FHLBB's minimum net worth requirement. Madison Guaranty proposed to do this by issuing a new class of preferred stock, but that never happened.

The following is a chronological summary of the Rose Law Firm's work, as gleaned from its records and other sources:

In the spring of 1985, Madison Guaranty became interested in issuing preferred stock.<sup>22</sup> On April 3, 1985, Davis Fitzhugh, a Madison Guaranty employee, contacted the Arkansas Securities Department to ask for the forms needed to do this.<sup>23</sup> A Securities Department employee, Charles Handley, looked at the statutes and telephoned Fitzhugh to say that he thought a savings and loan could only issue common stock and not preferred stock. Fitzhugh replied that he understood some other state-chartered savings and loans had issued preferred stock. Handley said he thought that was not the case, but he invited Fitzhugh to submit an opinion on the subject from Madison Guaranty's attorneys.<sup>24</sup> Fitzhugh then undertook a little legal research on his own and reported his findings to John Latham, Madison Guaranty's president, in a memorandum dated April 16, 1985.<sup>25</sup>

21(...continued)

84-47F (Bankr. E. D. Ark.). Steve Cuffman represented Madison Guaranty. The Kaufmans and the Gordons and Madison Guaranty were creditors, and jointly sought relief from the automatic stay. It is not clear that their interests were adverse. No evidence has been located that this potential conflict (if it be that) was disclosed to or waived by Madison Guaranty when the Rose Law Firm started representing it in 1985, in the midst of the Bratton case.

22 No contemporaneous document explains the source of Madison Guaranty's interest in issuing preferred stock. Charles Handley, an employee of the Arkansas Securities Department, stated in 1994 that the idea "was in response to a request from the Arkansas Securities Department for MADISON GUARANTY to develop a plan to raise capital." IG Ex. III-24, at 1. The Commissioner of the Arkansas Securities Department, Beverly Bassett, attributed the directive to raise capital to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. IG Ex. III-25, at 1.

At this point, Madison Guaranty decided to retain the Rose Law Firm in connection with this matter.<sup>26</sup> No engagement letter or other document memorializing the engagement has been located,<sup>27</sup> but Mrs. Clinton has explained the engagement:

To the best of my recollection, the president of Madison Guaranty, John Latham, who was a friend of an associate at the Rose Law Firm, Richard Massey, became interested in having Madison Guaranty issue some kind of preferred stock to raise capital. Latham had spoken to Massey about doing the related legal work. In the spring of 1985, Massey came to see me because he had learned that certain lawyers at the law firm were opposed to doing any more work for Jim McDougal or any of his companies until he paid his bill and then only if Madison Guaranty agreed to prepay a certain sum to the firm once a month to cover fees and expenses. Under such an arrangement, the firm could be assured that Madison Guaranty was staying current with regard to paying for the new work that the firm might do for it.

I believe Massey approached me about presenting this proposal to Jim McDougal because he was aware that I knew him. I agreed to go see McDougal. I visited him at his office on April 23, 1985, and told him that I understood Latham wanted Massey to do some work for Madison Guaranty, but that our firm would not let Massey proceed until the previous bill was paid and some kind of prepayment arrangement was worked out for new work the firm might do. As I recall, McDougal agreed that Massey could proceed with the work and informed me he would arrange to 26 IG Ex: III-28, at 4. It is not clear why Madison Guaranty retained the Rose Law Firm rather than its regular outside counsel, the law firm then known as Mitchell, Williams, Selig, Jackson & Tucker. The Mitchell, Williams firm had opened file no. 5615-9, entitled "Madison Guaranty - Sale of Stock," on February 6, 1985. It also had opened file no. 5615-10, entitled "Madison Guaranty - Broker-Dealer," on March 27, 1985. Both files are essentially empty. It does not appear that the Mitchell, Williams firm did much of substance with respect to either of these matters. Billings for matters 5615-9 and 5615-10 totaled $155.35.

27 Mrs. Clinton does not know whether there was an engagement letter. Interrogatory Responses of Hillary Rodham Clinton, May 24, 1995, answer to Interrogatory No. 17(g)(3), at 37. At the time, the Rose Law Firm had no policy regarding engagement or retention letters, and the Firm is unaware of any retention letter for Madison Guaranty. Letter from Alden L. Atkins to Bruce A. As described below, Mrs. Clinton later wrote a letter memorializing the retainer arrangement apparently entered into at this time, but Mrs. Clinton's letter is dated July 1986.

pay the past due bill. McDougal also indicated that he was agreeable to some kind of prepayment arrangement.<sup>28</sup>

As of April 1985, Massey had been a lawyer approximately eight months.<sup>29</sup> He had, however, lectured on securities law at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock, and John Latham had attended that class.<sup>30</sup> Massey does not have a clear recollection of how the matter came to the Rose Law Firm, other than that he had answered a number of securities questions posed by Latham and by Patricia Heritage, and had encouraged them to retain the Rose Law Firm.<sup>31</sup>

Latham says that retaining the Rose Law Firm was Jim McDougal's idea:

"McDOUGAL had friends over there, he suggested we use them."
LATHAM said when asked who the friends were that it was HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON and others.<sup>32</sup>

Latham also said, however, that "MASSEY worked on the matter because he [Latham] had specifically asked for him to do so."<sup>33</sup> In any event, Madison Guaranty began advancing $2,000 a month to the Rose Law Firm.<sup>34</sup>

On April 30, 1985, the Rose Law Firm wrote to the Arkansas Securities Department in support of a proposal by Madison Guaranty to issue a class of non-voting preferred stock.<sup>35</sup> The Rose Law Firm's letter opined that an Arkansas chartered savings and loan may, under Arkansas law, issue preferred stock.

The Rose Law Firm's letter first went to Charles Handley, who continued to be of the opinion that a savings and loan could not issue preferred stock. On May 6, 1985, Handley sent the letter to the Arkansas Securities Commissioner, Beverly Bassett,<sup>36</sup> along with the suggestion that one of the Department's attorneys look into the matter.<sup>37</sup> Someone within the Department disagreed with Handley's analysis and raised another issue-- whether the stock could be non-voting, as had been suggested.<sup>38</sup> It was suggested that one of the Department's attorneys "research and draft response to Hillary."<sup>39</sup>

In a letter dated May 14, 1985, Bassett replied to the Rose Law Firm's April 30, 1985 letter. Bassett concurred with the Rose Law Firm's opinion that a savings and loan could issue non-voting preferred stock.<sup>40</sup>

The same day, May 14, 1985, Richard Massey sent an application to the Arkansas Savings & Loan Supervisory Board on behalf of Madison Guaranty for permission to offer brokerage services through a second-tier service corporation.<sup>41</sup> It is not entirely clear what connection, if any, this application had with the proposal to offer preferred stock.<sup>42</sup> As shall be described below, however, the two were later linked when, in August and September 1985, the Securities Department conditioned approval of the brokerage application on an increase in Madison Guaranty's net worth. Madison Guaranty proposed to increase its net worth by issuing the preferred stock.

On May 22, 1985, Charles Handley advised Beverly Bassett that Madison Guaranty's application contained a number of flaws, both technical and substantive.<sup>43</sup> The principal substantive problem was Madison Guaranty's failure to meet the FHLBB's minimum net worth requirement. Also dated May 23, 1985, McDougal apparently prepared a letter to Mrs. Clinton, which read as follows: "Dear Hillary: If Joe Giroir [a partner at the Rose Law Firm] can fit it into his busy schedule, I would like to discuss a couple of banking matters with him which might be mutually beneficial. the identity of the service corporation and of the identity of the brokerage being acquired; the application had identified neither.<sup>44</sup>

On June 17, 1985, Richard Massey replied to Handley's memorandum and enclosed Madison Guaranty's amended application to engage in brokerage services.<sup>45</sup> The amended application included (as Exhibit A) information on the brokerage firm, Thorpe & Company.<sup>46</sup> Listed as Thorpe & Company's CEO was Greg Young, Madison Guaranty's Chief Financial Officer.<sup>47</sup> Massey's cover letter and Exhibit A also stated that Madison Financial already had acquired 100 percent of Thorpe & Company.<sup>48</sup>

The amended application included some unaudited financial statements (Exhibits B and C)<sup>49</sup> and a set of calculations of Madison Guaranty's minimum net worth requirement (Exhibit D).<sup>50</sup> The calculations showed a net worth deficiency, as of March 31, 1985, of $410,436.<sup>51</sup> To meet the net worth deficiency, Massey proposed that Madison Guaranty issue preferred stock, engage in various property syndications, reduce operating expenses and engage in other "prudent" (but unspecified) activities designed to increase Madison Guaranty's net worth.<sup>52</sup>

Handley commented on the amended application in a memorandum dated June 18, 1985. His memorandum noted the net worth deficiency, which

Massey replied in a letter dated July 25, 1985, which enclosed letters from Frost & Company and from Latham.<sup>63</sup> In essence, Massey said that the auditor's adjustments were needed to reconcile the FHLBB's regulatory accounting principles ("RAP") to Generally Accepted Accounting Principles ("GAAP") for purposes of the audited financial statements and therefore did not need to be made in the FHLBB reports, which at the time used RAP.<sup>64</sup> The attachment from Frost & Company simply said that the effect of the adjustments on RAP net worth was to increase it by $101,754.<sup>65</sup> The attachment from Latham went into much more detail, purporting to explain all the adjustments, both for GAAP purposes and for RAP purposes.<sup>66</sup> The last of the five attachments to Latham's letter was another copy of a chart calculating Madison Guaranty's net worth deficiency as of March 31, 1985. The chart showed the deficiency to be $410,436 after making these adjustments.<sup>67</sup>

This response evidently satisfied Handley.<sup>68</sup> In a memorandum dated July 27, 1985, he said he accepted the minimum net worth calculations but continued to believe that approval of the brokerage application should be conditioned at least on submission of a plan to meet the net worth requirement "within a very short time."<sup>69</sup>

On August 27, 1985, the state regulators met with Massey and decided to approve the application to engage in brokerage services on condition that Madison Guaranty develop an approved plan to improve its net worth, so as to bring itself into compliance with the FHLBB regulation by the end of the year.<sup>70</sup> In a letter dated September 9, 1985, Massey proposed to do this by offering preferred stock and engaging in property syndications while reducing overhead.<sup>71</sup> The letter suggests that, at the August 27 meeting, the parties agreed that, as of June 30, 1985, Madison Guaranty's net worth deficiency was $842,393.<sup>72</sup> This number is reflected in a letter dated September 4, 1985 from Greg Young (as CFO of Madison Guaranty) to Handley, which attaches minimum net worth calculations as of June 30, 1985.<sup>73</sup> Madison Guaranty's net worth had continued to increase, but its rapid asset growth meant that its required net worth had increased faster.<sup>74</sup>

In a memorandum dated September 12, 1985, Handley noted the large increase in the net worth deficiency and described how he would require an opinion of counsel that the proposed preferred stock offering would meet all FHLBB requirements and would successfully raise the needed capital within the time period contemplated.<sup>75</sup> Apparently Handley's view did not prevail. In a letter dated October 17, 1985 from Bassett to Massey, approval of the brokerage application was conditioned: "upon Madison's meeting the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's minimum net worth requirement by December 31, 1985." No other conditions were stated.<sup>76</sup>

For much of the rest of 1985, the Rose Law Firm proceeded to prepare the papers needed to offer preferred stock.<sup>77</sup> On December 9, 1985, the Securities Department asked to be advised of Madison Guaranty's progress and reminded it of the agreed-upon December 31, 1985 deadline to meet the FHLBB's minimum net worth requirement.<sup>78</sup> The Rose Law Firm's response (if any) to this letter has not been located, but there are drafts of a response and of a letter dated December 19, 1985 from Massey to Latham which suggest that the preferred stock offering had been delayed and that Madison Guaranty had shifted the focus of its capital-raising efforts to property syndication and a proposed offering of subordinated debt.<sup>79</sup>

On December 18, 1985, the day before the letter from Massey to Latham, Latham went to Dallas to meet with Rolf Coburn, Madison Guaranty's Supervisory Agent at the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas. Latham was accompanied not by anyone from the Rose Law Firm but by John Selig of the Mitchell, Williams law firm.<sup>80</sup> The principal topic of discussion was a proposed merger of a commonly owned state bank (Madison Bank & Trust Company, although this is not stated<sup>81</sup>) with Madison Guaranty. The FHLB-Dallas' memorandum of the meeting states that Madison Guaranty "currently has a net worth deficiency of approximately $1,404,000 . . ."<sup>82</sup> After explaining why a merger would not be attractive, the memorandum then discussed Madison Guaranty's net worth and how it might be improved:

The association is presently faced with a significant net worth deficiency. Mr. Latham informed us of the association's plans to submit an application requesting approval to issue approximately $3,000,000 in subordinated capital notes pursuant to [12 C.F.R.] Section 563.8-1 for inclusion in its net worth. In January 1986, Madison Guaranty signed an engagement letter retaining Mitchell, Williams to handle the public offering of such debt for a flat fee of $32,000 plus disbursements. The firm began preparing an offering circular. Work on the offering continued at least into June 1986. In all, the work filled files just under three inches thick. Latham confirms that Mitchell, Williams rather than the Rose Law Firm handled the subordinated debt project. IG Ex. III-29, at 1-2.

[another Supervisory Agent] briefly discussed eligibility requirements for subordinated debt and preferred stock applications.<sup>33</sup>

Five days later, on December 23, 1985, Latham telephoned or visited the Arkansas Securities Department, apparently without counsel; at least nobody else is mentioned in Charles Handley's extensive notes of the conversation.<sup>34</sup> Latham told Handley that Madison Guaranty's broker-dealer application was not complete, that Madison Guaranty would show a net profit for 1985 of between $500,000 and $1 million, that in light of this, Madison Guaranty planned to offer subordinated debt rather than preferred stock, that Latham had met with Supervisory Agent Coburn at the FHLBB in Dallas to discuss the requirements for a debt offering and that Madison Guaranty would be approximately $1 million short of its net worth requirement as of December 31, 1985.<sup>35</sup>

The two men apparently disagreed as to whether Madison Guaranty could start broker-dealer operations without first increasing its net worth. Handley said he understood that Madison Guaranty had to meet its net worth requirement before it could commence broker-dealer operations. Latham said this was not his understanding but nevertheless he would agree to this condition.<sup>36</sup>

There is little documentary evidence to suggest that the Rose Law Firm did much after mid-December 1985 with respect to the proposed stock offering. The Rose Law Firm no longer has invoices this old.<sup>37</sup> There is one set of five matter-level invoices, for January 1986. The invoices for matters 1, 2 and 4 read as follows:<sup>38</sup>

The Rose Law Firm's counsel told us that they had not seen these invoices until we provided copies. Documentary evidence supports this. It shows the Rose Law Firm's management could find no invoices and therefore attempted to reconstruct the firm's work from other sources. The reconstruction prepared by the Rose Law Firm in the 1990s suggests that Mrs. Clinton and Massey spent some time on this matter in the first several months of 1986.<sup>93</sup>

Ultimately, the stock offering did not take place,<sup>94</sup> nor did Madison Guaranty receive permission to engage in brokerage services.

C. The Rose Law Firm's work on the Castle Grande project.

The fees from January through April 1986 totaled $6,977.25. A little over half, $3,608.75, is attributed to Mrs. Clinton. RLF2 03027. Madison Financial's investments, Castle Grande was one of the bigger losers, costing the institution an estimated $3.8 million in principal and interest.<sup>95</sup>

Castle Grande encompassed approximately 1,050 acres of land in southern Pulaski County (Little Rock).<sup>96</sup> Madison Financial and a consultant named Seth Ward purchased the land from a company called Industrial Development Corporation of Little Rock ("IDC"). Seth Ward<sup>97</sup> is the father-in-law of Webster Hubbell, then a partner in the Rose Law Firm. The Rose Law Firm has no apparent connection to much of Castle Grande's history, but it did play a role in Madison Financial's acquisition of the property. Therefore, this report focuses on that acquisition. In particular, it focuses on Seth Ward's compensation and on his temporary ownership of portions of Castle Grande.

As shall be described in part VI.C below, the principal issues can be described as follows:

First, was Ward a bona fide purchaser, or simply a straw man or nominee for Madison Financial?

~~Second, if Ward was a straw man or nominee, was the acquisition fraudulent, or did it intentionally violate an Arkansas regulation that limited the size of the investment that Madison Guaranty could make in Madison Financial--a regulation that management thought prevented Madison Financial from buying all of Castle Grande?~~

Third, if fraud or intentional wrongdoing on the part of Madison Guaranty or Madison Financial did occur, was the Rose Law Firm responsible for the wrongful aspect of the acquisition and, if so, does it have any liability to the RTC?

95 Castle Grande is the subject of another report entitled A Report on Certain Real Estate Loans and Investments Made by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Related Entities (Dec. 19, 1995) (hereinafter, "Castle Grande Report").

96 Castle Grande consisted of mostly undeveloped land located 15 miles south of Little Rock at the intersection of Highway 65/167 and 145th Street. IDC had owned the land since 1974. IDC had financed its acquisition through several Little Rock banks, including Union National Bank of Little Rock, Worthen Bank and Trust Company and First Commercial Bank, N.A. By 1985, these creditors were pressuring IDC to dispose of the property.

97 Ward sued Madison Guaranty in 1987, after McDougal had left. Ward v. Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Financial Corporation, No. 87-7580 (Pulaski Cty. Cir. Ct.) (hereinafter, "Ward v. Madison"). Ward sought to recover almost $400,000 in commissions that he said he had earned in connection with Castle Grande. The trial transcript and discovery from this case are cited frequently below. The trial transcript is cited as "Ward v. Madison R.T." Depositions are cited by the name of the deponent, e.g., "Ward Deposition."

The role of the Rose Law Firm is difficult to delineate. Some documents no longer exist. Memories have faded. The relevant aspect of the acquisition--the terms of the deals between McDougal and Ward--are complex and were disputed in litigation. For these reasons, it is best to start by describing the acquisition of Castle Grande without much reference to the Rose Law Firm. Later, in part VI.C below, the evidence as to the Rose Law Firm's role in this acquisition will be analyzed.

b. The negotiations with IDC.

In the acquisition of Castle Grande from IDC, Seth Ward served as the principal negotiator for Madison Financial.<sup>98</sup> Ward, who was then 65 years old and semi-retired, had gone to work for Madison Financial in May 1985.<sup>99</sup> For $25,000 a year plus commissions, Ward was given the task of looking for real estate that Madison Financial might buy and develop.<sup>100</sup>

A few months after hiring Ward, McDougal asked him if he knew anyone connected with IDC. At the time, McDougal was not contemplating an acquisition; instead, he owned some landlocked property just south of Castle Grande and wanted an access easement. Ward knew the head of IDC (then Everett Tucker<sup>101</sup>) and went to see him. Tucker had no interest in selling an easement but offered the entire property for sale at $5.5 million.<sup>102</sup> McDougal had no interest in anything that big,<sup>103</sup> but Ward continued to negotiate and ultimately got the price down to $1.75 million.<sup>104</sup>

What happened next is not entirely clear. According to Ward, McDougal said he still was not interested in purchasing anything that big.

98 Ward v. Madison R.T. 7-13.

99 Ward v. Madison R.T. 5-7.

101 Tucker died, and was succeeded by R.A. "Brick" Lile, who has since died.

102 Id. at 7-8; Ward Deposition at 16.

103 "After that meeting, Ward said McDougal became very abrasive with him and told him not to bring any big deals in. That they do not want any big deals. They are only working on little deals." Seth Ward Interview, Dec. 9, 1986, Borod & Huggins Report, IG Ex. III-54, at 125.

104 Ward Deposition at 16-18. Ward v. Madison R.T. 12.

Q. All right, sir. Now, you have a contract for the purchase and sale of the property for $1,750,000. Was Madison Financial able to carry that transaction?

A. When I presented it to Mr. McDougal and told him I thought it was an exceptionally good purchase, he told me that Madison was unable to purchase that. I told him, "Well, if y'all aren't going to purchase it, I will."

Q. What happened after that?

A. He [McDougal] asked me [Ward] if I would participate with him and have Madison purchase that amount that they could afford to purchase and I purchase the balance.<sup>105</sup>

This makes it sound as though the property always was to be divided between Ward and Madison Financial. Other evidence, including other portions of Ward's own testimony, casts some doubt on this. For a man who says he wanted all of the property, Ward seemed fairly casual about its division. Asked about how the property was divided, Ward testified:

Q. How did you structure the deal, as to who would buy which portions of property? How did you and Mr. McDougal decide that?

A. Well, I don't know how we came to it. I know what we did.<sup>106</sup>

Hubbell, in contrast, says that Ward told him that the idea of having Ward buy part of the property came late:

MR. ERICSON: Yes, '85.

You mentioned a moment ago that your father-in-law told you at least a little something about this transaction.

Q. To the best of your recollection, what did he tell you in the time period August, September, October, 1985 about this transaction?

105 Ward v. Madison R.T. 12-13.

106 Ward Deposition at 19. Ward was 65 years old at the time of the transaction and 74 years old at the time of his interview. The transcript of Ward v. Madison shows that Ward's memory is not what it once was. Repeatedly at trial he contradicted his deposition testimony. E.g., Ward v. Madison R.T. 39-43, 45-46, 58-61, 89-91.

A. My understanding initially was that Madison was going to buy the entire parcel. And then at some point, I learned that it was structured so that Madison bought part, and my father-in-law bought part. And then Madison lend him the money to buy that part, but he was still going to be paid, as it was sold, a commission.

Q. When you say you learned these things, would these be things that you learned from your father-in-law?

A. Yes.<sup>107</sup>

Other evidence also suggests that the division of the property between Madison Financial and Ward occurred in the midst of negotiations and was not a condition of the deal from the outset.<sup>108</sup> The files of IDC's lawyer show that the lawyers began exchanging drafts of the paperwork in August 1985.<sup>109</sup> The initial drafts do not refer to any purchaser other than Madison Financial, although they do permit Madison Financial to assign its rights to an "affiliate."<sup>110</sup> For a while, it appeared as though the deal would close quickly on this basis. A meeting of IDC's shareholders to approve the transaction was set for August 19, 1985.<sup>111</sup> Draft minutes of Madison Financial purportedly reflect approval of the transaction on August 20, 1985, with all the land to be sold to Madison Guaranty (or affiliate) for $1.75 million.<sup>112</sup>

107 Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 14:10-25.

108 Thus, Hubbell testified before the Senate Special Committee on Whitewater: "I remember that initially Madison was going to acquire it all and then the transaction changed to where my father-in-law acquired part of it and Madison acquired part of it." Transcript of Hearing Before the United States Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Special Committee to Investigate the Whitewater Development Corporation and Related Matters (hereinafter, "Senate Hearing Transcript"), Dec. 1, 1995, at 102:22-24.

109 E.g., IG Ex. III-40, at 9-12, 16-70. Negotiations must have begun earlier. By July 30, IDC's board of directors had met to discuss a proposed sale of the land to Madison Guaranty. Thomas P. Thrash of the Rose Law Firm sent Darrell Dover a draft agreement on August 9, 1985 and his associate R. Davis Thomas, Jr. sent a revised draft on August 12, 1985. Id.

112 IG Ex. III-36. As with all Madison Financial minutes after December 1984 (as opposed to Madison Guaranty minutes and earlier Madison Financial minutes), these are of doubtful authenticity and may have been drafted long after the fact. See IG Exs. III-149, at 12-15, III-151. On this particular draft, however, someone has written "Pat [presumably Pat Hentage, (continued...)]

Then, at some point between mid-August and mid-September 1985, the documentation of the transaction changed.<sup>113</sup> As ultimately consummated, Madison Financial bought a portion of the land for $600,000 and Seth Ward bought the remainder for $1.15 million; thus, signed Madison Financial minutes of September 12, 1985 approved a $600,000 acquisition.<sup>114</sup>

As between IDC and the buyers, the progress of the sale was simple and straightforward. On September 13, 1985, IDC, Madison Financial and the consortium of Little Rock Banks executed an "Agreement" whereby Madison Financial (or, at its option, an "affiliate") agreed to purchase Castle Grande for $1,750,000.<sup>115</sup> The papers were sent to the title company, which started to get ready for the closing. At some time in late September, probably after September 23, the title company was told that Seth Ward was to be the assignee.<sup>116</sup> On October 4, 1985, the land was conveyed, and on October 8, 1985, the warranty deeds were recorded.<sup>117</sup>

Sept. 24, 1985	First letter from Ward to McDougal, countersigned by McDougal; marked "void"; gives Ward a commission; gives Madison Financial an option but places no price on the option; does not give Ward any real estate to keep after exercise of the option.
Sept. 24, 1985	Second letter from Ward to McDougal; backdated to Sept. 24, 1985; gives Ward a commission; pays Ward $35,000 for the option; gives Ward 22.5 acres to keep after exercise of the option.
Oct. 15, 1985	Loan of $1.15 million from Madison Guaranty to Ward, purportedly to finance Ward's acquisition of his part of Castle Grande, entered into 11 days after IDC sold the real estate to Ward and Madison Financial.

Each of these documents will be discussed in turn below.

The September 3, 1985 memorandum from McDougal to Ward: This memorandum, written on Madison Guaranty stationery, is succinct:

September 3, 1985

TO: Seth Ward

FROM: Jim McDougal

SUBJECT: Industrial Property

The following is a summary of our conversation of last Friday:

1. You will purchase all land north of 145th Street and the utility plants for $1,150,000.
2. Madison will take an option for 270 days to purchase those properties for $1,187,000, plus accrued interest on the loan you will make to purchase the property. If any tax consequences should arise for you from the transaction, Madison will pay those taxes.
3. ~~You will have the present IDC manager collect the rent and utility payments and forward the net proceeds to Greg Young here. Greg will then apply this income monthly to the accruing interest on your loan.~~
4. Madison will provide you with a letter requiring that you drive a prestigious automobile while you are in charge of this project.

JM/ss<sup>118</sup>

Ward says he deemed this September 3 letter "totally inadequate" but did not explain why.<sup>119</sup> In testimony given in 1988, his only detailed criticism was of the "prestigious automobile" provision.<sup>120</sup>

The September 13, 1985 assignment from Madison Financial to Ward: This is even shorter than the September 3 memorandum. A crudely 119 Ward Deposition at 48-49.

120 Id. at 49-50. Ward heaped scorn on the notion that he had angled for a "prestigious automobile"; he said McDougal pressed him to take the car because "Everyone down there drove Mercedes and he had one he was trying to sell me." Id. Although Ward did not mention it, he ended up driving a Mercedes-Benz that he bought from McDougal with a $40,000 loan from Madison Guaranty. Denton Deposition at 30-31.

drawn one-page document, it assigns to Ward the rights belonging to Madison Financial under the agreement executed September 13, 1985 with IDC to purchase

... [a]ll real estate and [sic] improvements north of 145th Street including water and sewer systems less 6.6 acres which is leased to the [sic] Levi Strauss ...<sup>121</sup>

The two letters dated September 24, 1985: Both of these letters were signed by Ward and McDougal. Both further detail the terms of the arrangements between them with respect to commissions, the option, taxes and (in the second version) a specific 22.5-acre parcel. There are material differences between the two letters.<sup>122</sup> Ward says that the first of the two letters actually was written on September 24, 1985, while the other was backdated to that date.<sup>123</sup> Neither was found in Madison Guaranty's or Madison Financial's files.<sup>124</sup>

The first of the two September 24 letters was later marked "Void."<sup>125</sup> In his deposition, Ward testified that McDougal drafted this letter even though it purports to be from Ward to McDougal.<sup>126</sup> Ward signed this letter without studying it carefully:

He wrote this and we both signed it, but after the fact. I'm not a lawyer and I don't—I don't like the fine print and I don't normally study what I'm signing carefully enough; but shortly after I signed this, I recognized that this still did not cover our agreement, so I

Thrash Interview, Dec. 1, 1995, at 26:1-15. Thomas Interview, Dec. 19, 1995, at 19. It seems highly unlikely that any competent lawyer would have drafted an assignment this crude and full of typographical errors.

122 Appendix B to this report contains a red-lined version of the two letters.

123 The first letter, marked void, is SW1-008 through SW1-009; Pl. Ex. 5 in Ward v. Madison. The second letter is RIC109218-19; IG Ex. III-134, at 4-5; SW1-005 through SW1-007; Pl. Ex. 4 in Ward v. Madison. Regarding the backdating, see Ward Deposition at 51-53. As Denton said, "dates aren't sacred at Madison." Denton Deposition at 85.

124 Ward v. Madison R.T. 196.

125 Ward Deposition at 50, discussing SW1-008 through SW1-009.

126 "Q. All right. So Mr. McDougal wrote a letter to himself? A. Uh-huh. He did that several times." Id. At trial, however, Ward was less sure who prepared this letter. He testified: "I honestly don't recall. I imagine it was somebody with Jim McDougal's staff." Ward v. Madison R.T. 36.

wrote [the second September 24 letter]. And I said, "Jim, this is the agreement that we've agreed to; read it and see if that's not, in fact, the agreement." He did and he agreed it was the agreement, and so we signed [the second letter] and voided [the first letter].<sup>127</sup>

Ward said the second September 24, 1985 letter is the definitive version. It covers five topics: Ward's purchase of a portion of the Castle Grande property and Madison Guaranty's financing of that purchase; Madison Guaranty's option to buy back that land, less 22.5 acres; joint efforts to sell portions of the property and the application of the proceeds to Ward's debt; Ward's commissions on any sale of the property; and taxes.<sup>128</sup> The terms may be summarized as follows:

1. Ward will take all the property north of 145 Street plus the water and sewer improvements (some of which were south of 145th Street) pursuant to the September 13, 1985 assignment.<sup>129</sup> In turn, Madison Guaranty will finance 100 percent of the purchase price, with the financing secured by the property.

2. Madison Guaranty will pay Ward $35,000 for a 270-day option to purchase part or all of the property (excepting the 22.5-acre parcel) for a pro rata amount equal to at least the principal still owed on the note plus all accrued interest.<sup>130</sup> (The 22.5-acre parcel is noteworthy because the parties' intentions with respect to it were sharply disputed in Ward v. Madison.)

3. Madison Financial and Ward will attempt to sell parcels of Castle Grande as quickly as possible. The sale price of any parcel sold "will be mutually approved by [Ward] and Madison Financial Corporation."<sup>131</sup> The proceeds less Ward's commissions will be applied to his debt to Madison Guaranty. At Madison Financial's discretion, any particular parcel may be deeded back to Madison Financial prior to a sales transaction.

127 Id. See also Ward v. Madison R.T. 15-17.

128 The question of who prepared this letter is discussed in part VI.C below.

129 RIC109218-19; IG Ex. III-134, at 4-5. The water and sewer facilities later were sold to Castle Sewer and Water Company, which was established in December 1985 by Jim Guy Tucker and R. D. Randolph. See Castle Grande Report at 19-23.

130 RIC109218-19; IG Ex. III-134, at 4-5.

131 RIC109218; IG Ex. III-134, at 4. It is not entirely clear whether this provision applies to all the property or only the portion being acquired by Ward subject to the option. The parties later acted as though it applied only to Ward's portion of the property.

4. Ward will receive commissions on all sales of Castle Grande property, regardless of whether Ward or Madison Financial owned the parcel in question and regardless of who secured the sale. The rate of the commission, however, will depend on whether the property was intended for industrial use, in which case the commission will be 10 percent, or residential use, in which case the commission will be 4 percent.<sup>132</sup>

5. Madison Financial will pay all "taxes, special assessments, dues, insurance premiums, etc." during the 270 days of the option.

According to Ward, the main differences between the two letters were that the first did not specify adequately the $35,000 payment for the option, and did not grant Ward the 22.5-acre parcel that he wanted.<sup>133</sup>

As noted, the second letter was backdated to September 24, 1985; Ward could not recall exactly when it was drafted or executed.<sup>134</sup> The underlying purchase agreement with IDC had been signed on September 13, 1985. The land was conveyed on October 4, 1985, and the warranty deeds were recorded on October 8, 1985.<sup>135</sup>

The October 15, 1985 loan: Not until October 15, 1985, 11 days after the purchase of Castle Grande closed, did Madison Guaranty loan Ward the purchase price. Evidently Madison Guaranty financed the sale on its own before documenting the loan to Ward. The loan, once documented, showed that Ward had borrowed the entire purchase price of $1,150,000 on a non-recourse basis; Ward put no money of his own at risk.<sup>136</sup>

2. Post-acquisition developments.

Developments after the acquisition of Castle Grande shed further light on the question of whether Seth Ward was a straw man or nominee. Most of the developments stemmed from Madison Financial's inability to pay Ward the commissions contemplated by the second September 24, 1985 letter.

Shortly after the closing, Madison Financial began to sell portions of Castle Grande. Many of the sales were to insiders; almost all were financed by Madison Guaranty.<sup>137</sup> The proceeds of sales of Ward's portion of Castle Grande were applied to his debt. By February 1986, these sales had reduced Ward's debt to approximately $70,000, if not less.<sup>138</sup> The major portion of the proceeds came from the sale of portions of Ward's Castle Grande holdings to former Senator J. William Fulbright and to Castle Water and Sewer Company.<sup>139</sup>

After February 1986, relations between Ward and McDougal deteriorated, in large part because McDougal could not pay Ward his commissions.<sup>140</sup> McDougal responded by entering into a complex new series of agreements with Ward. The three main elements of these agreements were: Ward's commissions, estimated to be in excess of $300,000; the $70,000 remaining on Ward's mortgage; and the 22.5 acres. These three elements were intertwined in ways that the parties later disputed in litigation.

For present purposes, it is not necessary to unravel all these elements, but one issue is significant: the treatment of the 22.5 acres.<sup>141</sup> Ward said it was additional compensation to him, above and beyond the $300,000+ in commissions and the $35,000 option payment. Madison Guaranty, in contrast, said the 22.5 acres never was intended to end up in Ward's hands but had been carved out for him in an attempt to make the $300,000 in commissions taxable not as ordinary income but as long-term capital gains.

<sup>138</sup> This was a disputed issue in Ward v. Madison. Ward said he thought the proceeds had paid off his debt in full; Madison Guaranty, however, said that $70,000 was still owing. Ward signed a new promissory note in that amount but it was later released when additional property sales netted another $70,000. Ward v. Madison R.T. 26, 32-33, 48, 51-54, 84-85.

<sup>140</sup> McDougal's world began to fall apart in the spring of 1986. His debts became increasingly burdensome. As a consequence, he and his wife entered into increasingly questionable transactions, such as the $300,000 loan from David Hale's Capital Management Services, Inc. At the same time, the FHLBB examiners entered Madison Guaranty to begin an examination that would last six months and lead to McDougal's final ouster from the institution.

By the spring of 1986, portions of Castle Grande had been sold for a total of approximately $3.8 million.<sup>142</sup> Ward asked to be paid his $35,000 option and his commissions, which he calculated to total somewhat in excess of $300,000.<sup>143</sup> Ward needed the money for undisclosed personal reasons, so he pressed the matter.

On March 31, 1985, Madison Guaranty loaned Ward $400,000, $100,000 of which he returned within a week or so.<sup>144</sup> To counterbalance the remaining $300,000 plus the $70,000 allegedly still owing on the note that replaced the original mortgage, Ward purported to loan Madison Financial $300,000 plus another $70,943.47, although no money actually changed hands.<sup>145</sup> This was done, it is said, so that there would be some written evidence for the FHLBB examiners to see of Ward's entitlement to the commissions.<sup>146</sup>

Ward released Madison Financial's $70,943.47 note after Madison Financial released Ward on his $70,000 note.<sup>147</sup> The fate of the twin $300,000 notes and the 22.5 acres is less clear, as Ward's testimony conflicted with Latham's.<sup>148</sup>

Ward testified that he did not pay back his $300,000 note; instead, he gave Madison Guaranty a deed in lieu of foreclosure on the 22.5-acre parcel.<sup>149</sup> As for the note Ward had received from Madison Financial, Ward said that it remained outstanding, providing additional evidence of the commissions and option that had never been paid.

142 Ward v. Madison R.T. 29-31. Madison Guaranty had financed virtually all of this; many of the sales later fell through and Madison Guaranty had to take back the real estate.

Latham agreed in part and disagreed in part. He agreed that Madison Financial had released Ward from personal liability on his $300,000 note, leaving Madison Financial with recourse only to the 22.5-acre parcel.<sup>150</sup> He knew nothing about Ward giving Madison Financial a deed in lieu of foreclosure because by then Latham had left Madison Guaranty.<sup>151</sup> As for Madison Financial's $300,000 note to Ward, Latham thought it had been canceled and nothing further was owed Ward, but Latham had to admit that, so far as he knew, the note had never been demanded or returned.<sup>152</sup>

Further complexities blurred the evidence regarding the relationship (if any) between the commissions and the 22.5 acres. On May 1, 1986, for $1,000, Ward gave Madison Financial an option to buy the parcel for $400,000.<sup>153</sup> The parties disagreed about whether this option had anything to do with Ward's commissions. As noted, Ward took the position that the acreage represented additional consideration to him, above and beyond his $300,000 in commissions, and that the option had nothing to do with this.<sup>154</sup> Madison Guaranty (through Latham), in contrast, said that the 22.5-acre parcel simply secured the commissions, with the intention being that Madison Guaranty would exercise the option and thereby pay Ward the commissions owed.<sup>155</sup> In other words, most of the $400,000 ostensibly paid for the 22.5 acres really would be payment of the commissions.

Latham's testimony could not be reconciled with the second September 24, 1985 letter, a point Latham conceded.<sup>156</sup> Madison Guaranty's

Counsel for the Rose Law Firm states that this option was created at the Rose Law Firm and that the letter "g" in the word processing code identifies the author as Mrs. Clinton. On December 21, 1995, the RTC propounded a set of interrogatories to Mrs. Clinton inquiring about this. David E. Kendall, counsel for the Clintons, says that Mrs. Clinton has reviewed the options (there were several versions) but does not recall them. Memorandum of telephone conversation with David E. Kendall, Dec. 28, 1995, at 1. Kendall has promised that Mrs. Clinton will respond to the interrogatories as soon as possible.

position at trial was that it was not bound by the second September 24, 1985 letter, because the letter never had been approved by Madison Guaranty's or Madison Financial's board of directors. Indeed, defendants argued, the letter was not to be found in Madison Guaranty's files. Latham and Strayhorn testified that they had never seen it before May or June 1986.<sup>157</sup>

In addition to questioning the bona fides of the letter, Madison Guaranty's former Chief Financial Officer Greg Young offered a tax rationale for deeming the 22.5 acres security for the commissions. According to Young, Latham's $70,000 in remaining debt was to become the tax basis for Ward's 22.5-acre parcel. Ward, in the meantime, had held the parcel for six months. When Madison Financial exercised the option, it would pay Ward $400,000. This, less the $70,000 still owing, was an amount roughly equal to Ward's commission, but the money would look like a profit on the sale of a parcel of land held for over six months, and Ward would be taxed at the lower capital gains tax rate then available.<sup>158</sup>

The evidence on this theory was disputed, with Ward supplying some of the confusion. In deposition, Ward testified that he had agreed to wait six months for his commissions:

Well, initially, he [McDougal] prepared a statement of moneys due me, but told me that, if he retained the commissions for six months, I would benefit with long-term capital gains. After verifying the accuracy of his contention, I agreed to do just that, and I let the commissions accumulate for a six-month period.<sup>159</sup>

By trial, however, Ward said his accountant had told him this idea would not work.<sup>160</sup>

After a two-day trial, the jury found for Ward and against Madison Guaranty, implicitly agreeing with Ward that ownership of the 22.5 acres was 160 Ward v. Madison R.T. 39-42. Neither side called him at trial, but in deposition Ward's accountant, Mike Schaufele, testified that McDougal had quizzed him in Ward's presence as to how long Ward would have to hold real estate to qualify for the long-term capital gains rate. Schaufele answered "six months" but said he did not know if anything further came of the discussion. Schaufele Deposition, May 27, 1988, at 11. Hubbell says he heard of the option and does not recall its rationale but is skeptical of the notion that Ward's commissions could have been deemed long-term capital gains. Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 26:10-27:6, 28:4-31:7.

additional compensation to Ward rather than an attempt to obtain long-term capital gains treatment for his commissions.<sup>161</sup> Thus, for present purposes, it can be assumed that the acquisition of Castle Grande resulted in Ward, who never put up any money or assumed any risk, being owed the following:

- o approximately $391,000 in commissions;
- o an option payment of $35,000; and
- o the "prize property"--22.5 acres out of Castle Grande.

In part VI.C below, these facts will be analyzed with a view toward determining: whether Ward was a straw buyer; whether the transaction was fraudulent or intentionally violated Arkansas regulations that limited the size of Madison Guaranty's investment in Madison Financial; and if so whether the Rose Law Firm had any involvement in and culpability for the unlawful aspects of this transaction.

3. The liquor and sewer legal research.

After the acquisition, the Rose Law Firm performed some legal research with respect to two Castle Grande-related matters late in 1985 and early in 1986. The first concerned whether a brewery could be built on the property. The second concerned whether the sewer and water plant on the property might extend services to properties outside of Castle Grande. Both projects presented straightforward legal issues, as to which legal research was performed and opinions were rendered.

The liquor research: A month after the purchase of Castle Grande, McDougal arranged to sell "2 acres of our best property" to Bill Lyon for erection of a brewery and tasting room.<sup>162</sup> In a memorandum from McDougal to Ward dated November 20, 1986, McDougal noted that the property needed "ABC" approval:

Subject to approval by the ABC, Bill will place his brewery in the shell building, along with a tasting room. I have spoken with the Governor on this matter, and expect it will be approved. We must be very careful to not mention that there will be a 'tavern' in the location, as word is already out to that effect and it is causing 161 Ward obtained a verdict and judgment for $353,502.57--the full amount he sought less a setoff he conceded. After the failure of Madison Guaranty and a great deal of appellate activity, Ward and the RTC ultimately settled for mutual general releases and the return by Ward to the RTC of $325,000.

162 IG Ex. III-57, at 1.

us problems in the area. Bill's operation must be sold both to the state regulators and to the public as a tourist attraction.<sup>163</sup>

The legal issue, which Richard T. Donovan handled subject to Mrs. Clinton's supervision, was whether the proposed site for a new brewery [a Castle Grande commercial parcel] fell within Union Township's "dry area."<sup>164</sup> The project involved recreating the history of certain Arkansas townships, legal research and interviews.<sup>165</sup> A paralegal (Rebecca Arnold) was instructed to search through the county clerk's records.<sup>166</sup>

Although Donovan's typewritten memorandum associates the project with Madison Guaranty (and no one else), an undated handwritten memorandum from Mrs. Clinton to Donovan states:

I visited with Seth Ward and gave him a copy of your memorandum and with Ken Shemin [a Rose Law Firm partner]. Please see Ken about a strategy to approach the ABC to argue the "dissolved township" theory. Thanks. Hillary. Charge Madison Guaranty IDC.<sup>167</sup>

Jim McDougal obtained a copy of the same memorandum and sent it to Jim Guy Tucker under cover of a memorandum dated February 7, 1986, which reads as follows: "It looks like our township is dry. Attached is an opinion Seth got from his attorney."<sup>168</sup>

The sewer and water research: This work apparently began in October 1985, when David Thomas researched some issues and prepared a memorandum (which has not been located) to Webster Hubbell.<sup>169</sup> Apart from that memorandum, the legal work on the sewage issue is well

4. The Rose Law Firm's records of its Castle Grande work.

Madison Guaranty's records contain three invoices related to its Castle Grande work. The first such invoice reads as follows:

For legal services rendered through January 30, 1986 by H. R. Clinton, T. Thrash [Thomas P. Thrash], R. Donovan [sic: Richard T. Donovan], K. Shemin [Kenneth R. Shemin] and J. Birch:

Matter: 5 - I.D.C.

Review contract for sale; telephone conference with Seth Ward and Charlie Cook, Daryl Dover, Alton Bowen at Beach Abstract, Peggy Rogers and Steve Wade[?]; make changes in documents; review changes in agreement; correspondence to all parties; attend I.D.C. board meeting; prepare corporate resolutions; review title commitment; attend closing; review bill of assurances; meetings with Seth Ward, Bob Wilson and Charlie Cook; research on what approvals, permits, etc., are necessary to operate sewer and water facilities; multiple telephone conferences with state and county agencies; memo about utility status; conferences with Seth Ward regarding purchase from Brick Lile and proposed industrial development on site; research into state law governing liquor permits; research at county clerk's office and election commission; telephone conferences with election commission; numerous telephone conferences with Daryl Dover.<sup>172</sup>

For these services, Madison Guaranty was billed fees of $4,651.50 and disbursements of $18.85, for a total of $4,670.35.<sup>173</sup>

The second such invoice is dated March 6, 1986 and covers services on matter 5, "I.D.C.," through February 13, 1986.<sup>174</sup> All the services seem to have pertained to the liquor and sewer issues:

Receipt and review of R. Donovan memo on manufacturing facility; Conferences with R. Donovan, J. Birch, H. Clinton and K. Shemin regarding permit to manufacture beer in "dry" township; Research at County Courthouse regarding Old Union Township; Ran Lexis search for cases dealing with township dissolutions; Research issue of effect of Township dissolution on "wet/dry" status; drafted memo; Telephone conferences with Pulaski County Election Commission regarding boundaries of Old Union Township; Telephone conference with Secretary of State regarding boundaries of Old Union Township; Memo to B. Arnold regarding county court research; Researched issue of public utility, supplying of water; Telephone conference with PSC legal staff; Drafted memo regarding public utilities.<sup>175</sup>

For these services, Madison Guaranty was billed fees of $990.00 and disbursements of $3.25, for a total of $993.25.<sup>176</sup>

The third such invoice is dated April 7, 1986 and covers work through March 31, 1986.<sup>177</sup> Again, the services all seem to have pertained to the liquor and sewer issues:

Revised memo regarding public utility issues; response to auditor's request; research at county courthouse regarding old Union Township boundaries; telephone conferences with Marie Flickenger (County Planning); office conference with Rick Donovan, research at Ark. Historical Society; telephone conference with Ark. For these services, Madison Guaranty was billed fees of $817.25 and disbursements of $68.87, for a total of $886.12.<sup>179</sup>

There are gaps and inconsistencies in the documentation, as illustrated by the following chart, which compares the invoices to the other two available sources of information: timesheets and "fee credit reports".<sup>180</sup>

<sup>180</sup> The timesheets data comes from RIC118693-701, RIC118724-29 and RIC118702-23. The fee credit report data comes from RIC120795-826. The invoices are cited above. The fee credit report data sometimes lumps together several matters. For example, the $2,731.25 attributed to Mrs. Clinton in January 1986 is marked "Stock Offer & IDC." No means has been suggested to separate these matters, although as noted above there is little evidence of activity with respect to the stock offering in January 1986.

The work described in these invoices falls into three general categories: Work on the purchase of Castle Grande itself (the first six lines of the January 30, 1986 invoice); work on the sewage and water facilities at Castle Grande; and work on the liquor permit issue. Review of the documents produced by the Rose Law Firm reveals a number of documents pertaining to the sewer and liquor work but virtually nothing pertaining to the purchase of Castle Grande. The invoices quoted above suggest that meetings were attended and documents were reviewed and edited, but none of this appears in the documentary evidence. Mrs. Clinton has no recollection of any work on the acquisition, but this may signify little, as she apparently also has forgotten her work supervising the legal research pertaining to the Castle Grande liquor and sewer issues, as to which there is ample documentary evidence. When asked in an interrogatory about Castle Grande together with a number of other real estate projects funded by Madison Guaranty, she replied: "I don't believe I knew anything about [Castle Grande or, with one unrelated exception, any of the other real estate projects listed in the interrogatory]."<sup>181</sup>

D. The Rose Law Firm's other work for Madison Guaranty.

In addition to the stock offering/brokerage work and the Castle Grande work, the Rose Law Firm represented Madison Guaranty with respect to several loans. The first, mentioned above in footnote 88, was the Bibler-Golden loan in Colorado.<sup>182</sup> This work seems to have been undertaken sometime between June 1985 and January 1986.<sup>183</sup> The other two loans were the Babcock Center and the Tulsa Econolodge loans. Judging from the documentary evidence, both seem to have been workouts that occurred after the default of two commercial loans, in both of which Madison Guaranty had obtained participations from Savers' Savings. It appears that these were the last matters that the Rose Law Firm undertook for Madison Guaranty. They did not begin until April or May 1986 and apparently continued into late 1986 or 1987.<sup>184</sup>

In August 1985, Madison Guaranty considered filing an application to move its principal office to Little Rock. Madison Guaranty's president decided not to use John Selig of the Mitchell, Williams firm but to use Hillary Rodham

E. The Rose Law Firm's withdrawal from representing Madison Guaranty.

In March 1986, the FHLBB began an examination of Madison Guaranty. The report of examination as of March 4, 1986<sup>187</sup> severely criticized Madison Guaranty and its management. As summarized in the supervisory letter accompanying the report:

[T]he continued financial viability of Madison Guaranty as it currently is structured is questionable. As of September 30, 1986, the Association's reported net worth of approximately $2.3 million was $3.4 million short of its minimum net worth requirement. . . . Even without giving consideration to the examiners' classification of assets . . . it appears that Madison Guaranty's net worth will be exhausted within ten months.

The following matters of regulatory concern were discussed by the examiners: conflicts of interest, high risk land developments, poor asset quality, excessive growth, inadequate income and net worth, low liquidity, securities speculation, excessive compensation, and poor records and controls.

In connection with the examination, a total of ten land development projects/direct investments aggregating $19.1 million (net book value) were reviewed and classified pursuant to Section 561.16(c) of the Insurance Regulations [12 C.F.R. § 561.16(c)]. As a result of the classification process, losses of approximately

$7.6 million were identified due to assets classified as doubtful or loss . . . .<sup>188</sup>

In addition to these criticisms in the supervisory letter, the report of examination itself asserted that Jim McDougal dominated Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial and had diverted funds to the McDougals' friends and relatives. The report also noted improper recognition of income in connection with seller-financed sales of real estate held by Madison Financial and stated that apparent losses associated with three real estate projects (Campobello, Maple Creek and Castle Grande) were sufficient to render Madison Guaranty insolvent.<sup>189</sup> In addition, the report asserted that "management blatantly disregarded numerous regulations, including the growth regulation. It is also apparent that certain provisions of the August 6, 1984 Supervisory Agreement were ignored."<sup>190</sup>

On June 19, 1986, in the midst of the examination, the FHLBB wrote to the Board of Directors of Madison Guaranty to report on its interim findings with respect to the operating practices of Madison Guaranty. This letter alleged a violation of the 1984 supervisory agreement. It also noted Madison Guaranty's continued failure to comply with the FHLBB's net worth requirements. As of April 30, 1986, Madison Guaranty's net worth was approximately $1.65 million short of the minimum requirement. The letter asked the Board to meet with FHLBB officials in Dallas.<sup>191</sup>

On July 11, 1986, the FHLBB met with Madison Guaranty's board of directors in Dallas. The board was accompanied by attorneys from the Mitchell, Williams firm: John Selig and his associate Breck Speed. The FHLBB regulators outlined Madison Guaranty's problems, starting with a net worth deficiency.<sup>192</sup> In particular, the regulators criticized Frost & Company's lack of independence, noting that a Frost partner had borrowed money from Madison Guaranty.<sup>193</sup> Madison Guaranty's directors were instructed to remove Jim

McDougal or, in effect, have the FHLBB do it for them.<sup>194</sup> Selig bargained for a consulting arrangement or a voting trust for the McDougals. The FHLBB Supervisory Agent Walter Faulk said no: The McDougals, Latham and Bill Henley must go.<sup>195</sup> They did. The same month, McDougal suffered a nervous breakdown. He later was diagnosed as manic depressive and had an operation to clear an artery running to his brain.<sup>196</sup>

On July 14, 1986, Mrs. Clinton returned Madison Guaranty's retainer and took steps to have her firm cease representing Madison Guaranty. On that day, Mrs. Clinton sent a letter to McDougal and Latham at Madison Guaranty by hand delivery.<sup>197</sup> The letter attempted to do four things. First, it memorialized the April 1985 monthly retainer arrangement ($2,000/month) between the Rose Law Firm and Madison Guaranty. Second, it stated that Madison Guaranty "continues to rely on a number of other law firms to provide ongoing representation, and that our representation has been for isolated matters and has not been continuous or significant." Third, Mrs. Clinton returned the July monthly retainer check of $2,000 and the Rose Law Firm issued a check to Madison Guaranty for a retainer credit of $4,622.53. Fourth, Mrs. Clinton stated that any future representation will be on a case-by-case basis. The "bee's" are Vincent Foster and Herb Rule.<sup>198</sup>

On July 17, 1986, Mrs. Clinton wrote an inter-office memorandum to Herb Rule advising Rule (and Foster) of the July 14, 1986 correspondence. The memorandum confirms that the Rose Law Firm was "continuing to do work on only one matter, namely the Babcock and Econolodge loans.<sup>199</sup> That work continued into late 1986 or early 1987.<sup>200</sup>

There may have been several reasons why Mrs. Clinton decided to return the retainer and write her July 14, 1986 letter. According to a statement made by Mrs. Clinton last year, once it was determined that Madison Guaranty could not meet the requirements imposed by Beverly Bassett for the issuance of preferred stock, Mrs. Clinton wrote the July 14, 1986 letter.<sup>201</sup> More recently, in her interrogatory answers, Mrs. Clinton attributed the return of the retainer to the Rose Law Firm's increasingly active practice representing the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation ("FSLIC"). Asked why she returned the retainer with the letter of July 14, 1986, she answered as follows:

This was a letter intended to terminate the "retainer arrangement" with Madison Guaranty, and the decision to terminate was made shortly before the letter was sent. In view of the increasing work the Rose Law Firm was doing for FSLIC, particularly with regard to the receivership of the Guaranty Savings and Loan Association in Harrison, Arkansas, the firm had decided in early July, 1986, generally to avoid taking on any new or expanded representations of S&L's or their affiliates. Accordingly, I wrote to Madison Guaranty on July 14, 1986, to terminate the monthly "retainer arrangement." In any event, as my letter indicated, the firm had not done a significant amount of work for Madison Guaranty: the S&L "has run a credit in its account at the end of every month" and Madison Guaranty "has been relying and continues to rely on a number of other law firms to provide ongoing representation."<sup>202</sup>

In any event, apparently the return of the retainer had nothing to do with the removal of Messrs. McDougal and Latham by the FHLBB. As or when she wrote her July 14, 1986 letter, Mrs. Clinton says she knew nothing of this.<sup>203</sup> Soon enough, however, rumors of problems at Madison Guaranty began to circulate.<sup>204</sup> By July 25, 1986, Madison Guaranty's problems made the Arkansas Democrat. Rumors of its insolvency, according to an article, were circulating "widely throughout Little Rock."<sup>205</sup> The article made no mention of McDougal's and Latham's removal.

On July 22, 1986, Frost & Company resigned as auditors for Madison Guaranty after FHLBB examiners raised questions about Frost's independence in light of the fact that one of Frost's partners had borrowed money from Madison Guaranty.<sup>206</sup> On September 8, 1986, Madison Guaranty notified the FHLBB's distinct director of examinations of Frost's resignation.<sup>207</sup> Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company replaced Frost & Company as Madison Guaranty's auditors.

On September 30, 1986, Mrs. Clinton responded to a Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Company audit letter for Madison Guaranty. Her letter states that the Rose Law Firm was not made aware of any pending or threatened litigation, claims or assessments against Madison Guaranty.<sup>208</sup> The letter notes that Madison Guaranty owed the Rose Law Firm $2,160.55 for services and expenses as of June 30, 1986. As noted, Mrs. Clinton's July 14, 1986 letter had refunded $4,622.53 to Madison Guaranty and returned the $2,000 retainer check for July 1986. No clear explanation has been offered for why this money was not applied to the outstanding receivable for $2,160.55 rather than being refunded by Mrs. Clinton.<sup>209</sup>

As previously noted, the Sabcock Center and Tulsa Econclodge work continued on, apparently at a low level of activity, to November 1986 and possibly into 1987.<sup>210</sup>

VI. ANALYSIS.

A. Potential causes of action.

1. Primary liability for fraud or intentional misconduct.

As noted in part III above, the scope of this investigation is defined by the applicable statutes of limitations, which encompass claims of fraud and intentional misconduct.

The meaning of "fraud" is determined by looking to state law.<sup>211</sup> Under Arkansas law, the elements of common law fraud are:

- A false representation of a material fact;
- Knowledge or belief on the part of the person making the representation that the representation is false;
- An intent to induce reliance upon the false representation;

208 RTCKC41005-06.

209 Mrs. Clinton does not know why the Rose Law Firm returned the balance of the retainer to Madison Guaranty when work was still ongoing and the Rose Law Firm was owed money. Interrogatory Responses of Hillary Rodham Clinton, May 24, 1995, answer to Interrogatory No. 17(g)(4), 17(h), at 37-39.

210 E.g., RLF2 03024-25, 03037, 03049; IG Ex. III-76, at 14-21.

211 O'Melveny & Myers v. FDIC, 114 S. Ct. 2048 (1994).

- o Justifiable reliance; and
- o Resulting damages.<sup>212</sup>

The meaning of "intentional misconduct," on the other hand, is not entirely clear. In the absence of any clear caselaw, a reasonable construction of this language would encompass intentional torts, such as conversion, and other actionable conduct so long as that conduct is accompanied by the requisite intent. For example, while not always thought of as an intentional tort, a breach of fiduciary duty could be intentional. Similarly, evidence of an intent to defraud someone to whom a fiduciary duty is owed, or to convert that person's property, might establish an intentional breach of the duty of loyalty.

2. Secondary liability for conspiracy or aiding and abetting.

In addition to primary liability for fraud or intentional misconduct, a reasonable construction of the extender statute also would have it encompass theories of secondary liability that are based on intentional misconduct. Such theories include conspiracy and aiding and abetting.

In Arkansas, the elements of civil conspiracy are:

- ~~o A combination of two or more persons:~~
- o To accomplish an unlawful or oppressive purpose or a lawful purpose by unlawful, oppressive or amoral means;
- o One or more overt acts committed pursuant to the conspiracy;
- o Damages caused by these acts.<sup>213</sup>

To state a claim for civil conspiracy, one must be able to identify the underlying unlawful act that the conspirators were aiming to commit. The conspiracy (or agreement) by itself is not actionable unless one can show that it was aimed at the commission of the wrong. Thus, while conspiracy is sometimes referred to as a claim or cause of action all by itself, it is better conceived of as an alternate way of pleading the underlying tort against a group of people, some of whom did not commit all the elements of the tort themselves.

212 Morris v. Valley Forge Insurance Co., 305 Ark. 25, 805 S.W.2d 948, 951 (1991)

213 Mason v. Funderburk, 247 Ark. 521, 446 S.W. 2d 543, 548 (1969).

and thus would not be directly liable individually absent the allegation of conspiracy.<sup>214</sup>

Arkansas has expressly adopted the principle of aiding and abetting:

All who actively participate in any manner in the commission of a tort, or who command, direct, advise, encourage, aid or abet its commission, are jointly and severally liable therefor.<sup>215</sup>

The Arkansas courts have not, however, delineated the elements for establishing aiding and abetting liability in a civil context.

Other courts, in slightly different contexts, have elaborated on the elements of aiding and abetting and on the standard to be applied in determining whether the elements have been satisfied. In a leading case, one federal court, relying in part on Restatement (Second) of Torts § 876 (1979), set forth the following elements for aiding and abetting:

- the party whom the defendant aids must perform a wrongful act that causes injury;
- the defendant must be generally aware of his role as part of an overall illegal or tortious activity at the time that he provides the assistance; and
- the defendant must knowingly and substantially assist the principal violation.<sup>216</sup>

Like conspiracy, aiding and abetting is a legal theory used to impose liability on someone who knowingly assists in the commission of a tort but does not perform all the elements of that tort himself. Without the underlying tort, there is no claim for aiding or abetting.

Thus, to have a claim under any of these theories, the RTC must prove that the defendant engaged in intentional misconduct. The first issue, therefore, is what the prospective defendant knew. If that element is established, the 214 See Southwestern Pub. Co. v. Ney, 227 Ark. 852, 302 S.W.2d 538, 542-43 (1957); Ragsdale v. Watson, 201 F. Supp. 495, 501-02 (W.D. Ark. 1962).

216 Halberstam v. Welch, 705 F.2d 472 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

— issue then becomes whether what the prospective defendant did was intentional and wrongful.

B. The preferred stock offering and brokerage work.

As described above, the Rose Law Firm's work in this area did not result either in permission to operate the brokerage or in the issuance of preferred stock or subordinated debt. Thus, if the Rose Law Firm's work on these matters were to be civilly actionable, it is not at all clear there would be any damages, or any causal connection between the work and any damages. With respect to causation and damages, the one theory that has been suggested is that the Arkansas regulators did not receive an accurate picture of Madison Guaranty's financial situation and therefore allowed Madison Guaranty to operate longer than might have been the case otherwise. Put more concretely, the suggestion is that the Arkansas Securities Department would have shut down Madison Guaranty sooner had it known in 1985 what it learned in 1987: that Madison Guaranty was insolvent no later than 1985.

Applying this theory, the issue here is whether the Rose Law Firm knew, or might have known, of the problems with Frost & Company's audit of Madison Guaranty that Peat Marwick Mitchell & Company discovered in 1987.

The regulatory background to the preferred stock offering was one that should have caused the lawyers to be cautious—had they been aware of it. In January 1984, the FHLBB had started a special limited examination of Madison Guaranty. The report of examination,<sup>217</sup> which was sent to Madison Guaranty's board of directors on June 1, 1984, was critical of the association. It noted poor appraisal practices; loan underwriting and documentation problems; loans to affiliates; excessive concentration in real estate development projects; loans to borrowers without equity; reliance on brokered deposits; asset-liability mismatches; and questionable accounting practices.<sup>218</sup> The examiners determined that approximately $565,000 of gains recognized by Madison Financial were improper. Adjusting Madison's books by that amount would have more than eliminated the net worth of the institution. It would have created a capital deficit of $70,000.<sup>219</sup>

The 1984 examination led to a supervisory agreement, to which Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors consented in July 1984. The supervisory agreement limited transactions with affiliated persons, required compliance with the minimum net worth requirement and required written policies and a business plan.<sup>220</sup> Soon after the 1984 examination and the supervisory agreement, Jim McDougal resigned as chairman of Madison Guaranty and Jim and Susan McDougal resigned as directors.<sup>221</sup>

The regulators knew all this, but it is unclear whether the Rose Law Firm did. Mrs. Clinton says that at no time through 1986 did she know of the 1984 ROE or the supervisory agreement.<sup>222</sup> Thomas Thrash, who worked on the Castle Grande acquisition, said he knew nothing about the 1984 ROE, the supervisory agreement or the 1986 ROE.<sup>223</sup> The same is true of Thrash's associate R. Davis Thomas, Jr. and of Webster Hubbell.<sup>224</sup>

The Rose Law Firm seems to have made few representations on the issue of Madison Guaranty's financial condition, and the representations that were made were not very positive. As described, Richard Massey's letter of June 17, 1985 enclosed calculations showing that Madison Guaranty had a positive net worth but that this net worth was $410,436 less than that required by the FHLBB's minimum net worth regulation.<sup>225</sup> Massey later sent Handley a copy of Frost & Company's audit, which Handley challenged. Massey replied in a letter enclosing letters from Latham and from Frost & Company. By the end of August 1985, Massey and the Securities Department evidently agreed that the net worth deficiency had grown to $842,393.<sup>226</sup> By the end of the year, Latham of Madison Guaranty had conceded that Madison Guaranty would be approximately $1 million short of its net worth requirement as of December 31, 1985.<sup>227</sup>

With benefit of hindsight, all these numbers probably were too low. The issue, however, is not whether they were right, but whether someone knew they were wrong when they were presented to the Securities Department. For this no evidence has been found. Indeed, the evidence suggests that the Rose Law Firm knew much less about this subject than did the Arkansas Securities Department.

Thus, evidence of the element of knowledge is lacking. In addition, there are other reasons to doubt that the RTC has any claim for fraud or intentional misconduct:

If arguendo there were evidence to support the contention that lawyers at the Rose Law Firm knew of Madison Guaranty's true financial condition in 1985 and 1986, it is not clear that failing to disclose this would be actionable. In most circumstances, a lawyer's duties in such circumstances would be first, to advise the client to correct the misstatement and second, to withdraw from the representation if the client refused.<sup>228</sup>

If arguendo not correcting the erroneous financial statements was actionable, it is not clear that a failure to do so caused Madison Guaranty to suffer any damages. As shown above, there really was no dispute about the fact that, in 1985, Madison Guaranty did not meet its net worth requirement, although the exact level of the deficiency may have been unclear. In addition, Madison Guaranty never actually issued preferred stock or opened a brokerage. Thus, it is hard to see any causal connection between any acts or omissions of the Rose Law Firm in this regard and damage to Madison Guaranty (and hence to the RTC).

Furthermore, it does not appear that the Rose Law Firm's work deterred Arkansas regulators from doing anything they might have done. In a memorandum dated February 28, 1992 to The New York Times, Bassett said that her department had no definitive proof of Madison Guaranty's insolvency until 1987, did not consider the FHLBB reports of examination sufficient proof of insolvency to warrant action and doubted that proof of insolvency, even if it had been presented in 1985, would have made much difference:

Even if we had proof of insolvency in 1985, I cannot say our actions would have been different. State law requires that when the savings and loan supervisor determines that a savings and loan is insolvent, the state must notify the savings and loan of such insolvency. The savings and loan then must present a plan to the supervisor as to how the solvency will be restored within a reasonable time. A plan to issue $3,000,000 of preferred stock within 90 to 120 days might well have been sufficient to satisfy delaying any receivership until at least the expiration of the offering period.<sup>229</sup>

While this memorandum is not contemporaneous, Bassett's contention receives support from the circumstantial evidence. Bassett's department had access to the reports of examination from 1984 and 1986, discussed above. The department was on notice as to the federal examiners' contentions regarding Madison Guaranty's financial position. In addition, the department knew that, by Madison Guaranty's own calculations, its net worth deficiency was growing and had grown from $410,496 as of March 31, 1985 to $842,393 as of June 30, 1985 to an estimated $1 million as of December 31, 1985.<sup>230</sup> Furthermore, the issue at the time with respect to the Frost & Company audit was not whether Madison Guaranty was insolvent but whether Madison Guaranty's regulatory net worth as of December 31, 1984 was a positive $606,501 or a positive $708,285.<sup>231</sup>

229 Memorandum from Beverly Bassett Schnaffer to Jeff Girth [sic: Gerth], New York Times, Feb. 28, 1992, RLF2 00001-05, IG Ex. III-25, at 19-23. See also IG Ex. III-25, at 6-18, Bassett's earlier memorandum to the same reporter. Bassett apparently said the same things to Richard Donovan, a partner in the Rose Law Firm, when he interviewed her for the Frost & Company litigation, IG Ex. III-68, at 19. On top of a file entitled "Application for a Broker-Dealer 1985," produced by the Arkansas Securities Department, an undated note in handwriting that appears to be Bassett's (ASD1208) reads as follows:

Memo to file:

Madison never completed the additional capitalization for the association. Therefore, this application was never approved.

231 DKRT200125-30.

Finally, if anything, the Arkansas regulators took a more aggressive position toward Madison Guaranty than did the FHLBB. For example, on November 16, 1987, Bassett wrote a letter to Madison Guaranty's board of directors, informing it that the association "had a negative net worth of $10,829,223.00 as of December 31, 1986 and a net loss of $4,801,667.00 for the twelve month period ended December 31, 1986."<sup>232</sup> She then quoted extensively from state statutes pertaining to insolvent savings and loans, and gave the directors notice that:

the Savings and Loan Supervisor considers the Association's assets impaired and the Association insolvent and . . . the Board of Directors must immediately take any and all steps and actions necessary to restore solvency to the Association and . . . on or before December 31, 1987 the Board of Directors must file a detailed report of actions taken and proof that solvency has been restored.<sup>233</sup>

Failing that, Bassett threatened to petition the Chancery Court for the appointment of a receiver or conservator.<sup>234</sup>

On December 10, 1987, Beverly Bassett wrote a letter to Stewart Root, Director, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, stating that Madison Guaranty (and two other Arkansas thrifts) are "unquestionably insolvent and have been so for a long time."<sup>235</sup> Bassett goes on to state that Arkansas law requires her to "file a petition for the appointment of a receiver or conservator if proof is not filed that solvency has been restored in a reasonable amount of time."<sup>236</sup>

To date we have not filed petitions to appoint receivers for these associations because we have received no assurance that the FSLIC will accept the appointment as receiver and because the Federal Home Loan Bank Board ("FHLBB") has repeatedly promised to find a purchaser or merger partner for the associations. However, since it is apparent now that these associations cannot be restored to solvency without the assistance of the FSLIC and since it appears unlikely that the FHLBB will succeed in finding a purchaser or merger partner, we must request that these associations be transferred immediately to the FSLIC.<sup>237</sup>

That did not happen for some time for reasons that had nothing to do with Bassett.<sup>238</sup> Thus, Madison Guaranty remained in private hands until on or about February 28, 1989, when the FSLIC took possession of Madison Guaranty, as its conservator.<sup>239</sup>

C. The Castle Grande work.

The investment in Castle Grande has been questioned on numerous grounds, but most of these have nothing to do with the Rose Law Firm. The acquisition of Castle Grande did, however, involve the Rose Law Firm to some extent. The acquisition can be questioned on the theory that Ward, having given Madison Financial an option on the land and having placed no money of his own at risk, was really a straw man purchaser for Madison Financial pursuant to a scheme to circumvent Arkansas law. This theory seems first to have been advanced in the Ward v. Madison litigation, in which Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial (two years after McDougal and Latham had been removed) stated the following in an answer to an interrogatory asking about their "unclean hands" defense:

Plaintiff [Seth Ward] personally profited from the transactions with Jim McDougal. With knowledge, the Plaintiff agreed to purchase a section of the Undeveloped Property [Castle Grande] in his name so that Madison Financial Corporation would not exceed its investment limitations, imposed by the FHLBB, of 6% of the 237 Id.

238 At the time, the FSLIC did not have enough money to close all insolvent thrifts and had far more pressing problems than Madison Guaranty. Memorandum of telephone interview of Karen Bruton, Dec. 20, 1995, at 1-2. See also ASD1591-92, a February 10, 1988 memorandum in which the Supervisory Agent recounts the same financial facts but concludes that "[t]he present management team is believed to be capable of addressing the problems inherent to the institution." As noted, the new management had changed accounting firms. In addition, management had hired law firms to work out Madison Guaranty's problem assets and to report on any wrongdoing that might be uncovered. See also IG Ex. III-25, at 14-17. Bassett told Frost & Company's attorney that she wanted to place Madison Guaranty into receivership but was discouraged from taking that action by the FHLBB. IG Ex. III-159, at 3.

After the enactment of FIRREA, the RTC succeeded FSLIC as Madison Guaranty's conservator. 12 U.S.C. § 1441a(b)(6) (Supp. 1990). On November 30, 1989, the Office of Thrift Supervision placed Madison Guaranty in receivership and appointed the RTC as receiver of Madison Guaranty.

assets of the corporation. In effect, Plaintiff acted as a straw man for the real estate purchase for the mutual benefit of himself, Jim McDougal and other individuals.<sup>240</sup>

Arkansas law limits the amount of money that an Arkansas savings and loan may invest in real estate to six percent of assets.<sup>241</sup> At the time of Madison Guaranty's last examination before the Castle Grande transaction, in 1984, Madison Guaranty had been criticized for violating this limitation, and in response Madison Guaranty's board of directors had promised to bring it into compliance with this limitation.<sup>242</sup>

According to Madison Guaranty's Chief Financial Officer, Greg Young, the investment limitation meant that Madison Guaranty could not purchase the entire Castle Grande parcel itself.<sup>243</sup> McDougal and Ward developed the idea of having Seth Ward purchase part of Castle Grande, so that the purchase price of the remainder to be purchased by Madison Financial would not exceed the limit. According to John Latham, there were at least three attractions to structuring the transaction this way:

- ~~o Complying with the Arkansas statute.~~
- o Providing Ward with an opportunity to make some money.
- ~~o Obligating Madison Financial only to purchase the portion of the property that it really wanted--the portion it hoped to use for a~~ residential development, as opposed to the portion set aside for industrial development.<sup>244</sup>

Defendants did not do much with this theory at trial. Also, the regulation at issue is a state regulation, not an FHLBB regulation.

Two issues are apparent: Did the structure, rather than complying with Arkansas law, unlawfully seek to circumvent it, or was it even fraudulent? If creation of the structure was fraudulent or intentional misconduct, did the Rose Law Firm have anything to do with its creation, and therefore any responsibility for the illegality?

1. The legality of the acquisition.

The first question is whether the acquisition of Castle Grande was fraudulent or otherwise intended to violate Arkansas law. The short answer is that a court might well hold that the acquisition, as structured, was fraudulent and violated section V(C) of the Rules and Regulations of the Arkansas Savings and Loan Association Board.

Fraud: McDougal seems to have concealed the terms of his agreement with Ward from Madison Guaranty's and Madison Financial's boards; at the very least, Latham and Straynorn testified that the boards had not approved the terms, that they did not know the terms and that they could not find the relevant documents (notably the second version of the September 24, 1985 letter) in Madison Guaranty's files or Madison Financial's files.<sup>245</sup> This evidence, if credited, would establish concealment by someone who, as a director of Madison Financial, had a duty to disclose the facts. It would not, however, without more, establish fraud on the part of anyone else. Ward as a consultant did not have the same duties as McDougal as a director. No evidence has been found suggesting that Ward knew McDougal would conceal the terms of this deal from McDougal's board.

An alternative theory of fraud is that the use of Ward as a straw purchaser was itself fraudulent, because it concealed Madison Financial's intent to acquire the entire parcel. That theory is best explored in light of the issue of whether the acquisition violated the Arkansas regulation and if so whether the use of Ward was designed to conceal that violation.

244 IG Ex. III-29, at 3. Latham recalled these three general objectives but could not recall any specific conversations on the subject or, for that matter, who developed the structure. The Rose Law Firm's Response to the Reports of the Inspectors General, dated Sept. 12, 1995 ("Rose Response to IG"), suggests that Latham himself developed the structure and flatly asserts that "Madison masterminded the structure of the purchase . . ." (Rose Response to IG at 52-53) but the cited evidence does not establish either proposition.

245 Ward v. Madison R.T. 196; Latham Deposition at 18-19, 33-34.

Violation of the Arkansas regulation: Section V of the Rules and Regulations of the Arkansas Savings and Loan Association Board pertains to service corporations. Section V(A) permits their creation and lists their ~~permitting activities, which include "[a]cquisition of unimproved real estate lots,~~ and other unimproved real estate for the purpose of prompt development and subdivision . . . ." Section V(C) limits a savings and loan's investment in its service corporations. It provides:

C. Limitations:

An association may make any investment under this section if its aggregate outstanding investment in the capital stock, obligations, or other securities of service corporations and subsidiaries thereof (including all loans, secured or unsecured, to service corporations, or any subsidiaries thereof, and to joint ventures of such service corporation or subsidiaries, whether or not the association is a stockholder in such service corporations) would not exceed thereupon six (6%) percent of the association's assets. For the purpose of this section, the term "aggregate outstanding investment" means ~~the sum of amounts paid for the acquisition of capital stock or securities and amounts invested in obligations of service corporations less amounts received from the sale of capital stock or securities of services corporations and amounts paid to the association to retire obligations of service corporations.~~

To read the testimony of Latham, it would appear that the issue here is whether Madison Guaranty's investment in its service corporation Madison Financial includes the $1,115,000 loaned to Seth Ward to pay for his portion of Castle Grande as well as the $600,000 that Madison Financial paid for its portion of Castle Grande. Ironically, Madison Guaranty may have violated the regulation regardless of how it structured the deal.

As of September 30, 1985, Madison Guaranty's assets totaled $93.2 million.<sup>246</sup> Six percent of this is $5.6 million. According to Madison Guaranty's Monthly Report to the FHLBB as of September 30, 1985, Madison Guaranty's investment in Madison Financial totaled $5.96 million,<sup>247</sup> or roughly $360,000 in excess of the limit. Therefore, whether Madison Guaranty's investment includes only the $600,000, or the $1,115,000 as well as the $600,000, the acquisition of Castle Grande would violate section V(C).

246 Madison Guaranty's Monthly Report to the FHLBB as of September 30, 1985, line 050.

247 Id., § K, line 005.

Be that as it may, the parties seemed to think that by reducing the investment to $600,000 they would have avoided a violation of section V(C). As intent matters, the analysis turns on whether Seth Ward should be deemed a bona fide borrower in his own right, separate and distinct from Madison Financial, or whether he should be deemed a straw man or nominee, who is simply holding the land for Madison Financial, so that the land did not show up on its books as a violation of section V(C). There are no reported cases construing section V(C). Nevertheless, the situation is similar to that presented by the federal regulation limiting loans to one borrower.<sup>248</sup> That regulation limits total lending to one borrower to a percentage of an institution's assets. The pertinent issue is whether a borrower that appears to be separate and distinct actually is a straw or nominee.

A case from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, United States v. Brown,<sup>249</sup> is instructive. An Oregon thrift, State Federal Savings & Loan Association, had financial difficulties--in particular, a lot of foreclosed real estate (in savings and loan parlance, "real estate owned," or "REO") on its books that earned little revenue. New management wanted to get this REO off of State Federal's books. Management agreed with a real estate developer and borrower, Nevis, to loan him money so that he could buy the REO. State Federal's loans to Nevis, however, already exceeded the limit imposed by the loans to one borrower regulation. Therefore, State Federal's management entered into a series of transactions designed to put money into Nevis' hands while concealing that fact. ~~One such transaction involved~~ defendant Brown. The Court of Appeals described that transaction as follows:

He [Brown], in effect, had one of his companies (Marin Federal) purchase certain property from Nevis and obtain a loan from State Federal to finance that purchase. The money went to Nevis, and Nevis retained possession of and the right to repurchase the property. Brown guaranteed the loan but Nevis agreed to pay it off. The sale would not have been made had repurchase not been agreed to in advance. Brown and his company were quite 248 Now 12 C.F.R. § 563.93 (1995). At the time, it was 12 C.F.R. § 563.9-3 (1985). An even closer analogy would be presented by the FHLBB's direct investment regulation, which, like the Arkansas regulation, limited investment in service corporations 12 C.F.R. § 563.9-8 (1985), later renumbered 12 C.F.R. § 563.98 (1990), expired July 13, 1990.

clearly no more than nominees and vehicles for getting cash from State Federal to Nevis.<sup>250</sup>

On these facts, the Court of Appeals affirmed Brown's conviction for aiding and abetting bank fraud and false entries by management, but reversed his conviction for conspiracy.<sup>251</sup>

Compare the situation in Brown with the situation here. Madison Guaranty funded 100 percent of Ward's acquisition of his portion of Castle Grande, and did so weeks before Ward's loan application was approved. The loan was nonrecourse; Ward placed none of his own money at risk.<sup>252</sup> Madison Financial had an option to buy back all of Ward's land, save perhaps for 22.5 acres. Madison Guaranty acted in all respects like an owner: It took charge of selling Castle Grande, including Ward's part, and did so, purportedly subject only to Ward's approval of the sales price. It conveyed parcels to the purchasers; typically, the deeds reflected Madison Financial, not Ward, as the vendor. Until parcels sold, Madison Financial, not Ward, collected the rents and paid all taxes, insurance and fees. On these facts, it seems highly probable that Ward would be deemed a straw. Indeed, Madison Guaranty alleged as much in defense of Ward v. Madison.<sup>253</sup>

As noted above, the use of Seth Ward as a straw has some of the earmarks of a fraudulent or intentional attempt to violate the law. Madison Guaranty's books and records were made to reflect a loan to a third person, not a straw. The terms of Ward's agreement with McDougal seem to have been hidden from others. Latham and Straynom say they knew nothing of the second letter of September 24, 1985, and Straynom says no copy of it could be located in Madison Guaranty's or Madison Financial's files.<sup>254</sup> At a minimum, it would seem that McDougal handled the transaction in a manner designed to mislead FHLBB examiners and regulators.

250. United States v. Brown, 912 F.2d at 1041.

251. Id. at 1042-45. The court found ample evidence that "Brown engaged in activities which misrepresented the true borrower and true purpose of the loans, all with the intention of deceiving State and Federal officials, FSLIC, and FHLB," and therefore affirmed the aiding and abetting count. On the other hand, the court found no evidence that Brown, who participated in only one transaction, knew of the other defendants' broader conspiracy, and therefore reversed the conspiracy count.

252. In contrast, Brown had guaranteed Nevis' repayment.

253. Defendants' Responses to Plaintiff's First Set of Interrogatories and Requests for Production of Documents, dated June 2, 1988 in Ward v. Madison, answer to Interrogatory No. 18, at 11-12.

254. Latham Deposition at 16-20, 34-36, Ward v. Madison R.T. 194-95.

Even if this conduct were not deemed fraudulent, however, it seems likely that it would be deemed an intentional violation of the Arkansas regulation, and that would be actionable as an intentional breach of McDougal's fiduciary duties.

A fiduciary is not automatically liable for violating the law. Good faith attempts to manage a corporation's affairs may not give rise to liability even if a statute or regulation is violated.<sup>255</sup> But conversely, a fraudulent or intentional effort to violate a statute or regulation will almost certainly constitute a violation of a fiduciary's duty of care--indeed, as the Brown case illustrates, it may be criminal. Thus, while the business judgment rule is recognized in Arkansas,<sup>256</sup> the rule obviously has no application to fraudulent or intentional attempts to violate the law.<sup>257</sup>

While this transaction looks like an intentional effort to violate the Arkansas regulation, and to cover up that violation, some evidence suggests that the parties might have thought the acquisition as structured would be lawful. Neither side in Ward v. Madison seriously urged that the transaction was unlawful. Hubbell, who paid some attention to the Ward trial and attended the closing arguments, doubts that Ward was a straw--at least as Hubbell understands the term:

Q. In 1985, did you give any thought whatsoever as to whether, given the terms as you understood them, Mr. Ward might be considered a straw man or nominee?

A. Yeah. You know, you use the word, and I remember it back in law school. But I didn't give it any consideration, you know. "Straw man" means, to me, somebody who you clear title through. So I don't think that's the way I would look at it, if I sold property, and you're trying to clear it to sell it through a straw man.<sup>258</sup>

255 E.g., FDIC v. Benson, 867 F. Supp. 512, 521-22 (S.D. Tex. 1994) (applying Texas law).

258 Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 22:17-26.

In addition, the question was put to Latham, who testified in deposition that he believed the transaction was lawful:

Q. You said that Madison Financial could not have taken a deal as large as the I.D.C. deal that Mr. Ward brought because of regulations.

A. I think at that point in time that was correct.

Q. Madison Financial could have taken the deal, could it not, if it had received financing from someone other than Madison Guaranty?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was no violation of the regulations from Mr. Ward to receive financing from Madison Guaranty?

A. I don't think so, as long as Seth had the financial ability to assume that obligation on his own.<sup>259</sup>

Given the apparent attempts to conceal the substance of the arrangements between McDougal and Ward, one may question whether Latham seriously believed what he said; in any event, the conclusion he reached is of doubtful merit. Assuming arguendo that Seth Ward had the ability to assume the obligation on his own, two problems remain with Latham's position. First, factually speaking, Ward had no reason or incentive to pay the loan unless he could profit by doing so, for the loan was nonrecourse. Second, legally speaking, Ward's "financial ability to assume that obligation on his own" is not a defense where the transaction is structured to conceal a violation of a regulation limiting the ability of the financial institution to make the loan.

An Arkansas case decided a few years before the Castle Grande transaction, United States v. Parsons,<sup>260</sup> illustrates the second point. Parsons was the treasurer of a school's credit union. He needed more money than the credit union could lawfully loan to him. Therefore, he convinced several teachers to take out loans in their own names and deliver most of the proceeds to him.<sup>261</sup> On appeal from his conviction for misapplication of credit-union funds and false entries, he argued that the jury should have received an instruction that he could be convicted only if the prosecution proved that he knew the other teachers lacked the ability and intent to repay their respective loans. The court rejected this argument, holding that where the straw is used to conceal violation of a legal limitation on lending, the financial condition of the putative borrower is irrelevant.<sup>262</sup>

All told, the evidence suggests that the RTC could reasonably state a claim against McDougal for fraud and for breach of his fiduciary duties. Perhaps McDougal could defend by arguing that he had a good-faith belief that the structure was lawful; at this point it is hard to determine how persuasive such a defense might be. In any event, such a claim, if brought against McDougal alone, would not be cost-effective.<sup>263</sup>

The evidence as to Ward is less compelling than the evidence as to McDougal (the intent to conceal is less clear), but on the strength of Brown, it appear that a claim might be stated for aiding and abetting in a fraud or for an intentional violation of the Arkansas regulation. Nevertheless, such a claim cannot properly be brought against Ward because he has been released.<sup>264</sup>

For purposes of this report, however, the ultimate question is not whether McDougal or Ward could profitably be sued, but whether the Rose Law Firm aided and abetted them in what looks like fraudulent or intentional misconduct.

2. The role of the Rose Law Firm.

The Rose Law Firm handled aspects of the Castle Grande acquisition. Of this there can be no doubt, despite the lack of files and the lack of recollection.

The extent of the Rose Law Firm's involvement in this acquisition is not well documented and has been further obscured by faulty memories. Seth Ward, who negotiated the acquisition for Madison Financial, denied that the Rose Law Firm had any involvement in the purchase of Castle Grande either on behalf of Madison Financial or himself--a statement that is demonstrably 262 Id. at 1279-80.

263 McDougal filed for bankruptcy in September 1991 and obtained an order of discharge on January 17, 1992 (PMS0532, PMS0552), well before the enactment of the RTC Completion Act of 1993. The order of discharge could be set aside only if the RTC could prove a fraud on the bankruptcy court; proof that McDougal defrauded someone other than the bankruptcy court would be of no avail.

264 Ward received a general release from the RTC when he settled Ward v. Madison, a settlement in which the RTC recovered $325,000.

incorrect.<sup>265</sup> He is not the only one who seems to have forgotten things: the Rose Law Firm lawyers who handled the transaction also have no recollection of it.<sup>266</sup>

Rose Law Firm records show that its engagement in this acquisition began in August 1985.<sup>267</sup> Hubbell says that Ward referred the matter to the Rose Law Firm at McDougall's instruction.<sup>268</sup> Recently discovered timesheets show that partner Thomas P. Thrash and former associate R. Davis Thomas, Jr. worked on this matter between August 6 and 20, 1985 and again between September 30 and October 18, 1985, spending a total of 17.1 hours on this matter.<sup>269</sup> Other than these time records, however, the Rose Law Firm has virtually no record of this transaction.<sup>270</sup>

Despite the absence of records, the work of the Rose Law Firm can be reconstructed in part from the files and recollections of the lawyer who represented IDC in the transaction, Darrell D. Dover of the Little Rock law firm of Dover & Dixon. Dover says that the principals, as opposed to the lawyers, put together the deal. He identified IDC's principal as R. A. "Brick" Life.<sup>271</sup>

Ward told the IG that he does not remember the Rose Law Firm doing any legal work for Madison Guaranty on the Castle Grande transaction or on anything else. IG Ex. III-35, at 2. Ward was not alone in denying the Rose Law Firm's role in the transaction. When asked about Castle Grande, other Madison Guaranty directors and officers did not mention the Rose Law Firm as having any involvement in the sale. According to Dover, the principals left the "scrivener" work to Dover and to the Rose Law Firm, mainly Thomas P. Thrash. Dover said that others at the Rose Law Firm may have been involved as well, but he dealt principally with Thrash and cannot clearly recall dealing with lawyers other than Thrash. Dover has no clear recollection as to whether the purchaser was Madison Guaranty or Madison Financial or others. He does not have the final documents; the drafts he has mention both entities.<sup>272</sup>

The documents that Darrell Dover and the Rose Law Firm have produced do not deal at all directly with the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial. The deeds mention both buyers; the purchase agreement mentions assignees; but someone who saw only these documents would not have notice of the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial, much less responsibility for their creation.

Hubbell, however, stands in a different situation. While he says he did not work on this matter, he also says that he knew of the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial, at least in broad outline, and he knew them shortly after the transaction closed. Hubbell knew of these matters because Ward discussed the transaction with Hubbell with some frequency. For example, Ward acquainted Hubbell with the terms of the September 3, 1985 memorandum:

Q. Let's turn to the next page, which says "Defendant's Exhibit 31" and also says "SW1-004." It's a memorandum dated September 3, 1985. Again, let me ask you if this is a document you saw in 1985 or 1986.

A. I may have seen it after the closing. Seth may have brought a copy home. So I can't say that I haven't seen it. Okay?

Q. Okay.

Do you have any recollection of discussing the terms of this document with Mr. Ward?

A. He discussed everything. So I mean -- I mean this specific document, no. But his deal with Madison, he talked about it all the time.

272 Darrell D. Dover Interview, July 18, 1995. Dover's firm represented John Latham when Latham was interviewed by the RTC Inspector General. IG Ex. III-29, at 1.

Q. Approximately how often would you see your father-in-law in this time period?

A. Fairly regularly. Not as often as after his accident. But fairly regularly.

Q. Again, focusing on '85, '86, could you be any more specific as to "fairly regularly"? Do you mean once a week?

A. At least once a week.<sup>273</sup>

Through these conversations, Hubbell came to know the terms of the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial:

Q. You mentioned that you learned that Madison was going to lend him [Ward] the money to buy a part. Did you know anything beyond that, about the terms in which the money would be loaned to your father-in-law?

A. I learned that later on.

Q. But in 1985, you did not know those terms?

A. I probably did after it closed; but, you know, exactly when, I couldn't tell you.

Q. When you say you probably did after it closed, why is that? Is there a particular event that brought it to your attention?

A. Well, I mean the deals changed, you know; and so he would have told me that he was borrowing the money, you know, as opposed to Madison just buying it all and him getting a commission.

Q. At the point at which you learned he was borrowing the money and was buying part of the property, did you have any understanding as to whether he was borrowing 100 percent of the money needed to buy his part of the property or some lesser amount?

273 Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 16:25-17:22.

A. My understanding was it was always 100 percent.

Q. Did you have any understanding as to whether it was recourse versus nonrecourse?

A. I believe -- you could tell me, but I believe it was nonrecourse. I believe that's been an issue. I can't tell you when I learned.

Q. What was your understanding as to the arrangement with respect to commissions on the sale of the property?

A. If I remember right -- but I may have learned this later on -- there was a written agreement between McDougal and my father-in-law. And I think in general it was 10 percent on anything he sold, 10 percent on any commercial real estate; and then a lesser percentage on residential real estate.

Q. When do you think you learned those facts?

A. It had to be sometime after the closing. My impression was that initially he was going to get paid when the deal closed, you know, like most real estate people. At some point, that changed.<sup>274</sup>

Hubbell also understood that Madison Financial could not buy all of the property in its own name:

Q. At this time, September 1985, what was your understanding, if any, with respect to the reasons why Madison was not going to buy the entire property itself?

A. My understanding was based on what Mr. Ward told me, that maybe whoever closed the loan was -- was that Madison had limits on what it could own in its own name, and so Mr. Ward was going to own part of it until it could be sold.<sup>275</sup>

The foregoing is fairly consistent with what Hubbell told the RTC's Inspector General, as summarized by an investigator:

274 Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 15:1-16:15.

275 Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 21:25-22:6.

HUBBELL said that WARD told him that he was negotiating on behalf of MADISON to buy the IDC property, which would then be split up between MADISON and WARD. HUBBELL said that ~~Ward may have told him that MADISON could only buy a portion of the money [sic], and that the limitation may have been regulatory.~~ HUBBELL recalled that Ward was negotiating the purchase as if he was the sole purchaser because the purchase ~~price would have been higher if the sellers thought that~~ McDUGAL was the actual purchaser. WARD also had told HUBBELL that his part of the purchase would be financed with money borrowed from MADISON GUARANTY.<sup>276</sup>

Exactly when Hubbell acquired all this information is unclear. He attributes most of it to after closing (October 4, 1985), but as set forth below, that might be incorrect.

It is much harder to say what other Rose Law Firm lawyers knew (if anything) about these matters. In the absence of evidence from the Rose Law Firm's files and lawyers, one must fall back upon evidence from other sources. ~~Of this there is plenty, chiefly because the arrangements between Ward and Madison Financial were the subject of extensive litigation in Ward v. Madison.~~ This evidence, unfortunately, does not clearly answer the question, presumably because the role (or lack thereof) of the Rose Law Firm was not an issue in the ~~case.~~ Nevertheless, there is much circumstantial evidence from which inferences can be drawn and arguments rebutted.

The circumstantial evidence revolves around two documents: the ~~second~~ second version of the letter agreement between Ward and McDougal backdated to September 24, 1985; and the option to the 22.5 acres that the September 24, 1985 letter gave to Ward. There is evidence, albeit not conclusive, that Hubbell saw and perhaps commented upon the letter. There also is evidence that Mrs. Clinton had something to do with the creation of the option. Neither, however, showed up on timesheets or bills.

The second letter of September 24, 1985: According to Ward, McDougal prepared the first September 24 letter and McDougal's secretary, <sup>276</sup> IG Ex. III-69, at 6-7. Regarding his role in the acquisition, Hubbell wrote a letter to the FDIC in June 1989 stating that he had "not represented Mr. Seth Ward in connection with any issue or matter relating to his disputes with 'Madison Guaranty.' RTCKC42271; Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 36:10-19.

Sue Strayhorn, typed it.<sup>277</sup> This seems correct: the letter bears her initials and she confirmed this at trial.<sup>278</sup>

The more important question is who prepared the second and operative letter. Again, Ward's story varies. In his deposition, Ward said that he prepared the second letter but he does not recall who typed it.<sup>279</sup> At trial, however, he was less sure of this:

Q. The second letter, dated September 24th, 1985, from Seth Ward to Jim McDougal, did you prepare this letter?

A. I think I had it prepared.

Q. By had it prepared, what do you mean?

A. Well, I either wrote it or dictated it or something.

Q. And had someone type it for you?

A. Yes.<sup>280</sup>

For a number of reasons, this may not be the entire story. The evidence presented below is far from conclusive, but a reasonable inference can be drawn that Ward prepared the letter in consultation with his son-in-law Webster Hubbell, then a Rose Law Firm partner.

The letter, and particularly the real property description attached to it, appear to be the work of a lawyer. The language is marked by legalese ("thereon," "commonly referred to as," "the aforementioned property," "the pro rata amount of the note," "the property or any portion thereof"). Ward is not a lawyer. He dropped out of Arkansas State Teachers College in 1941 to join the Marines; and by his own admission, "I don't like the fine print and I don't normally study what I'm signing carefully enough . . . ."<sup>281</sup>

280 Ward v. Madison R.T. 37.

281 Ward Deposition at 5, 7, 51. Ward v. Madison R.T. 5. On the other hand, the letter is ambiguous in some respects. One would expect greater clarity from a lawyer of Webster Hubbell's ability.

Webster Hubbell's secretary told the IG that she believed she typed this letter but could not otherwise recall the circumstances.<sup>282</sup> Hubbell said that Ward occasionally asked Hubbell's secretary to type things for him.<sup>283</sup> As Hubbell described it, on occasion Ward would bring draft letters into the Rose Law Firm, then sit in Hubbell's office and drink coffee while Hubbell's secretary typed up the letters. Hubbell's secretary would then bring in the finished letter:

Q. And you [Hubbell] might have read it over and talked to him [Ward] briefly?

A. Yeah. Or he might have gave it to me to read it, or vice versa, or not at all.

Q. Okay. But with respect to this particular letter, do you have any recollection of whether you did read it and discuss it with Mr. Ward?

A. No.<sup>284</sup>

The Rose Law Firm lawyers working on the Castle Grande matter (Thomas P. Thrash and R. Davis Thomas, Jr.) state that they did not draft the letter and had not seen it before their interviews.<sup>285</sup> They also recorded almost no time to this matter in September and they never recorded any time that references the preparation of this letter.<sup>286</sup>

The Rose Law Firm has indicated through counsel that, unbeknownst to the firm until much later, Webster Hubbell "often assisted Mr. Ward on various matters. However, Mr. Hubbell did not open client/matter numbers for those matters . . . ."<sup>287</sup> Hubbell confirms that he represented Ward on various matters, denies that he did so with respect to Madison Guaranty and disputes the Rose Law Firm's assertion that it did not know of his work for Ward until after he left the firm.<sup>288</sup>

Hubbell states that the Rose Law Firm represented Madison Guaranty, Madison Financial and Seth Ward, both individually and as an agent or employee of Madison Guaranty, in this matter.<sup>289</sup>

Ward's accountant gave testimony suggesting that Webster Hubbell represented Ward with respect to matters concerning Ward's compensation for this deal. The accountant, Mark Schaufele, testified that he met with Ward and McDougal and an unidentified man at Madison Guaranty on Jim McDougal's birthday to discuss the tax ramifications of the Castle Grande transaction, particularly the tax ramifications to Seth Ward.<sup>290</sup> There was discussion of how to apply rents from a portion of the property to Ward's debt to Madison Guaranty without having that rent become income to Ward. "They [presumably McDougal and the unidentified man] said they would take care of the collection of the rent and apply it directly against the interest."<sup>291</sup>

Q. So the discussion was to work out how best Mr. Ward would have no taxable consequence from the purchase and flow through and sale by Madison?

A. Yeah, of that transaction, realistically, or now it was going to be handled from that standpoint.

Q. Were any decisions made?

A. My recollection is, is that Jim McDougal suggested that he write a memorandum outlining their proposal as far as the purchase -- Mr. Ward's purchase, and then the option that Madison wanted to enter to buy it, to show to Mr. Ward so that he could take it to his attorney to see if that met with Mr. Ward's, you know, it was fine with Mr. Ward's attorney.<sup>292</sup>

Q. Have you had any other discussions with anyone other than Seth Ward concerning Mr. Ward's commissions?

A. At the time of the original transaction, I discussed it with Mr. Ward's attorney, Web Hubbell.

Q. Anyone else?

A. No.<sup>293</sup>

Hubbell brothers at the Rose Law Firm performed various other services that relate to aspects of Ward's agreements with McDougal. For example, Davis Thomas' timesheet for October 18, 1985 indicates that he performed "RS [research] on what approvals, permits, etc. are necessary to operate sewer and water facilities; multiple TCFW [telephone conferences with] state agencies; Memo to Webb Hubbell."<sup>294</sup> Also, the research later performed on the liquor permit issue was described as "an opinion Seth got from his attorney."<sup>295</sup>

Against the circumstantial evidence summarized above is Hubbell's express denial that he prepared the September 24, 1985 letter or represented Ward in connection with the Castle Grande matter.<sup>296</sup> It appears as well that Hubbell recorded no time to the matter and was not listed on any bill, nor on anyone else's timesheets except for the October 18, 1985 timesheet of Davis Thomas, regarding sewer and water issues.<sup>297</sup>

Nevertheless, Hubbell is not precise about when he learned various things. He has testified and been interviewed numerous times, and one gets the impression that things he heard after the fact sometimes get muddled with things he learned in 1985. For example, his testimony about how the IDC/Castle Grande matter came to the Rose Law Firm has shifted. Before the Senate, he testified that he did not initially know of the Rose Law Firm's engagement with respect to Castle Grande:

Mr. Chertoff. And the Rose Firm was also engaged to do some work in connection with the Castle Grande [sic] development; is that correct?

Mr. Hubbell. Yes, it -- I didn't know that initially but I do now.<sup>298</sup>

As set forth above, however, in a more recent interview Hubbell said that Ward brought the matter to the Rose Law Firm and discussed that with Hubbell essentially contemporaneously.<sup>299</sup>

Similarly, Hubbell has been vague about when he learned of the Arkansas investment limitation. In his Senate testimony on December 1, 1995, Hubbell first suggested that he had contemporaneous knowledge of the transaction: "I wasn't party to the representation of Madison and my father-in-law in that acquisition, but I was aware of it generally."<sup>300</sup> A few pages after this, however, he suggested that he may not have learned of the Arkansas investment limitation regulation until later: "I have grown to understand that."<sup>301</sup> And in his December 27, 1995 interview, he suggested that he knew of this limitation in September 1985.<sup>302</sup>

An alternative theory, advanced by the Rose Law Firm through counsel, is that John Latham, and not anyone at the Rose Law Firm, structured Ward's participation in the Castle Grande transaction. After first discussing evidence that Thomas Thrash did not structure the transaction, the Rose Law Firm argues:

Mr. Latham, Madison Guaranty's president, had the regulatory and legal background to structure the transaction. (See James Alford Statement, Sept. 7, 1994 at 1, RTC IG Report Ex. III-153)

Mr. Latham explained in detail the reasons the IDC purchase was split, and he has no recollection of Rose working on the transaction. (John Latham Statement at 2-3, RTC-IG Report Ex. 29) The evidence shows that Madison masterminded the structure of the purchase, a possibility that the Inspectors General did not consider.<sup>303</sup>

For several reasons, this theory is implausible:

Latham's "regulatory and legal background" was not substantial; he had graduated from law school less than a year before the events in question and had never practiced law.<sup>304</sup> The Alford statement is not to the contrary and has nothing to do with Castle Grande. Alford, an auditor with Frost & Company, CPAs, simply said that a year before the Castle Grande transaction, when Frost was invited to bid on becoming Madison Guaranty's auditor, he had met with Latham and recalled "being somewhat impressed with Latham because of his regulatory and legal background, and after the meeting I felt comfortable that Frost could successfully perform the audits."<sup>305</sup>

Whatever one might say about Latham's background, Ward and other witnesses testified in 1988 that Latham played no significant role in the Castle Grande transaction.<sup>306</sup> Indeed, Latham's testimony about the September 24, 304 In June 1983, when Latham joined Madison Guaranty as executive vice president, he was still in law school. Ward v. Madison R.T. 93-94. According to the clerk of the Arkansas Supreme Court, Latham joined the bar in 1984 and had his license suspended some time prior to 1992 for non-compliance with continuing legal education requirements and failure to pay dues. Harry Don Denton, in a deposition taken in RTC v. Frost & Co. in April 1990, described Latham as follows: "John Latham was quite talented, a great deal of skill and ability, diligence. Ability to get along with people. Was grossly inexperienced." Denton Deposition, April 10, 1990, at 23:25-24:4.

305 IG Ex. III-153, at 1.

306 Asked what Latham did, Ward testified: "He generally -- I don't know what he did. He was in the office with the door shut all the time." Asked if Latham was involved in the sale and development of the IDC property, Ward answered: "Not that I am aware of." Ward Deposition at 36:5-13.

1985 letter agreement was excluded as hearsay at the trial in Ward v. Madison because the principal basis for Latham's statements was things he had heard from McDougal.<sup>307</sup>

Harry Don Denton, who knew Ward well and had introduced Ward to McDougal, testified in 1988:

Q. Was Mr. Latham involved in the negotiations for the purchase of this property [Castle Grande]?

A. No.

Q. That would have been outside his area of responsibility?

A. I don't believe he had the contacts.<sup>308</sup>

Other evidence also suggests that Latham was not close to the transaction. On October 3, 1985, McDougal sent Latham a memorandum that read, in its entirety, as follows: "We will be funding the $1,750,000 purchase of the 145th Street property next week. What is your cash situation?"<sup>309</sup>

Finally, Latham himself testified in 1988 that he never saw the second September 24, 1985 letter until May or June 1986 and never discussed the terms embodied in the letter with McDougal at all.<sup>310</sup> Indeed, Latham testified that he had never heard of Ward's commission arrangement until Ward told him about it in 1986.<sup>311</sup>

The option of May 1, 1986: Hubbell, Thrash and Thomas could not identify this as a Rose Law Firm document, say they did not prepare it and <sup>311</sup> Id. Thus, while Latham did explain in detail the Castle Grande transaction to the RTC IG, Latham's knowledge was hearsay and acquired after the fact. Latham's statement that the Rose Law Firm did not work on the transaction far from proving that Latham "masterminded" the transaction, tends to confirm that Latham was out of the loop.

could not identify the notaries who signed it as Rose Law Firm employees.<sup>312</sup> Nevertheless, counsel for the Rose Law Firm has confirmed that this document was created at the Rose Law Firm and bears word-processing markings indicating that it was created by or for Mrs. Clinton.<sup>313</sup> In particular, the small letter "g" on the option stands for Mrs. Clinton.<sup>314</sup>

The RTC recently propounded interrogatories to Mrs. Clinton on this subject. As indicated above, while Mrs. Clinton has not yet responded to these interrogatories (her counsel has promised to do so shortly), her counsel has indicated that she has reviewed the option (which is attached to the interrogatories) and does not recall it.<sup>315</sup>

3. Analysis.

To be liable for aiding and abetting, one must be generally aware of his role as part of an overall illegal or tortious activity, and one must knowingly and substantially assist the principal violation.<sup>316</sup> There may have been a principal violation here, but there is no substantial evidence that the Rose Law Firm knowingly and substantially assisted in its commission.

The inquiry was an outgrowth of a statement by Davis Thomas that the letter in this code stood for a particular attorney, although he could not remember his own letter, let alone the letters assigned to others. Thomas Interview, Dec. 19, 1995, at 16:8-17:7. That the letter "g" was associated with Mrs. Clinton tends to be confirmed by RTCKC41005-06, a letter she signed that also bears a "g."

315 On December 21, 1995, the RTC propounded a set of interrogatories to Mrs. Clinton inquiring about this. David E. Kendall, counsel for the Clintons, says that Mrs. Clinton has reviewed the options (there were several versions) but does not recall them. Memorandum of telephone conversation with David E. Kendall, Dec. 28, 1995, at 1. Kendall has promised that Mrs. Clinton will respond to the interrogatories as soon as possible.

on which Seth Ward purchased his portion of Castle Grande.<sup>317</sup> No contrary evidence has been found. Hubbell knew in 1985 the essential terms of the transaction, including the aspects that arguably make it a straw-man arrangement, but he may not have learned these things until after the transaction closed.

If Hubbell had knowledge at a relevant time, it is possible that this knowledge might be imputed to the Rose Law Firm. As a matter of partnership law, that may happen if the partner who knows something but is not acting in the particular matter "reasonably could and should have communicated it to the acting partner."<sup>318</sup> Even so, it is unclear that the imputation of Hubbell's knowledge to the firm would mean that otherwise-innocent acts performed by other lawyers in the firm, who lacked actual knowledge of these matters, would somehow become "fraud" or "intentional misconduct" within the meaning of the statute of limitations extender. There is no relevant case law under the extender statute, nor much by way of analogy in cases construing the Uniform Partnership Act.

Substantial assistance: The argument here also is weak at best, although the reasons for this weakness differ as between the two principal documents.

The September 24, 1985 letter: Hubbell says that he did not draft the September 24, 1985 letter,<sup>319</sup> and he recently told the Senate that he "wasn't party to the representation of Madison and my father-in-law in that acquisition, but I was aware of it generally."<sup>320</sup> The evidence summarized above is not entirely consistent with Hubbell's declaration that he "wasn't party to the representation of Madison and my father-in-law in that acquisition," but it suggests at most that Hubbell may have cast a fairly casual eye over the September 24, 1985 letter.

The May 1, 1986 option: The option has less immediate significance than the September 24, 1985 letter. The option did not assist in the closing of the acquisition. It, unlike the letter, was created many months after the transaction closed. The option, unlike the letter, does not prove any awareness on the part of its author of Ward's arrangements with Madison Financial. Such awareness could be inferred only if one credits the Latham/Young view that the option was an attempt to obtain capital-gains treatment for Ward's commissions. If, instead, one credits Ward's view that the option had nothing to do with the commissions (as the jury in Ward v. Madison obviously did), then the author of the option need not have known anything about Ward's commissions, let alone his 100 percent financing or the other terms embodied in the September 24, 1985 letter. For these reasons, the option seems at most tangentially related to the acquisition itself.

The option might be related, however, to an effort to document Ward's rights. Ward and others have testified to such an effort, noting the need to have some written evidence for the FHLBB examiners to see of Ward's entitlement to the commissions.<sup>321</sup> Hubbell says that Ward was anxious about whether he would be paid.<sup>322</sup> In such circumstances, it would not be unusual to ask a lawyer to help reduce one's position to writing. Again, however, this theory makes sense as applied to the option only if one credits the view that the option bore some relationship to Ward's commissions.

If this view is accepted, then the option might be deemed a rather opaque and perhaps misleading means of documenting Ward's entitlement to commissions. But, as noted, this is a theory the jury in Ward v. Madison rejected, and it suffers from a number of problems, starting with its inconsistency with the September 24, 1985 letter and going on to its dependence on Latham and Young, witnesses whom it would be easy to impeach.<sup>323</sup>

Beyond this, the theory that Ward or McDougal wanted to have the Rose Law Firm document the terms that (arguably) make Ward a straw man is hard to reconcile with the fact that in other respects McDougal and Ward seem to have resorted to self-help rather than advice of counsel. Certainly the series of loans that they entered into in the spring of 1986 ($400,000 from Madison Guaranty to Ward; $300,000 from Ward to Madison Financial; and approximately $70,000 running in both directions) reflect a fairly unusual approach to documenting Ward's entitlement to commissions. There is no evidence that the Rose Law Firm had any hand in these loans, and it is hard to imagine that any competent lawyer could have recommended this course of action.

321 Ward v. Madison R.T. 27-29, 49-52, 101-02, 114-15.

322 As noted above, Seth Ward told Webster Hubbell in the spring of 1986 that he "had some sense Madison was having trouble" and was "very anxious" about whether he was going to be paid the commissions he was owed. Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 43:21-44:12.

323 Latham pled guilty to bank fraud. Young's problems as a witness are much less serious but there are a number of inconsistencies in his testimony.

The money received by the Rose Law Firm: The amount of money paid to the Rose Law Firm for its Castle Grande work ($4,670.35) is not substantial. Work was performed for the money, at least with respect to the liquor and sewage issues, and the initial review of the purchase agreement.

Missing documents: The Rose Law Firm did not have a centralized system of opening or maintaining files; instead, matters were left to the discretion of individual lawyers.<sup>324</sup> The "bright line" approach taken to the statute of limitations in Arkansas has made long-term document retention by law firms less customary than might be true elsewhere. In Arkansas, as in some other states, the courts have been reluctant to develop exceptions to the statutes of limitations. While in some states (e.g., California), various tolling doctrines make it exceedingly difficult to render advice on how long one must keep documents, in Arkansas this is not true. As recently as 1991, the Arkansas Supreme Court, in a legal malpractice case, refused to adopt a variety of tolling doctrines, stating as follows:

There is yet another significant reason we do not retroactively adopt the "discovery rule," "date of injury rule," or "termination of employment rule." Many abstractors, accountants, architects, attorneys, and other similar professionals surely have relied on our traditional and long-standing rule. In doing so, they had no reason to keep records for longer than three (3) years. As a consequence, if we retroactively changed the rule, they might easily have no materials to use in their defense.<sup>325</sup>

Summary: The only solid evidence tying the Rose Law Firm to this acquisition is evidence of the innocent activity of participating in the drafting of the purchase agreement. While some evidence suggests that Hubbell could have had a role in the drafting of the September 24, 1985 letter between McDougal and Ward, nothing proves he did, much less that he did so knowing it to be wrong. Similarly, while Mrs. Clinton seems to have had some role in drafting the May 1, 1986 option, nothing proves she did so knowing it to be wrong, and the theories that tie this option to wrongdoing or to the straw-man arrangements are strained at best.

324 Thomas Interview, Dec. 19, 1995, at 30-31; Hubbell Interview, Dec. 27, 1995, at 41:16-43:20.

325 Chapman v. Alexander, 307 Ark. 87, 817 S.W.2d 425, 427 (1991). Of course, nothing in this opinion, or elsewhere, would justify spoliation of evidence, such as has been suggested recently in the press, should that be proved. The only point being made here is that discarding files before investigations began and subpoenas were issued might be justifiable. Therefore, without more, the non-existence of certain files today is not proof of actionable wrongdoing.

The evidence taken as a whole does not amount to convincing proof that the Rose Law Firm knowingly aided and abetted a fraud, or a scheme to circumvent the Arkansas investment limitation regulation. This conclusion does not necessarily mean that the evidence exonerates anyone; it simply means, given the applicable legal standards and the statutory mandate under which the RTC operates, that no reasonable basis has been found to recommend the filing of a claim relating to the acquisition of Castle Grande against the Rose Law Firm.

D. The retainer.

As noted, for a time the Rose Law Firm received a $2,000 a month retainer from Madison Guaranty. The press has suggested that then-Governor Clinton personally solicited this retainer from McDougal and picked up the money monthly.<sup>326</sup> The suggestion is made that the retainer was paid because the Clintons wanted the money, rather than for services rendered.

This suggestion seems wrong for at least three reasons:

First, the retainer was treated as an advance fee payment for services to be rendered rather than a "true" retainer (a fee paid regardless of whether services are rendered, in effect, a fee for remaining available).<sup>327</sup> Consistent with this interpretation, the Rose Law Firm deposited the retainer into a trust account, at least starting in February 1986.<sup>328</sup> A "true" retainer need not be deposited into a trust account, because it is a payment for being available rather than an advance on services.

Second, the available evidence shows that services were rendered and that, when the representation was nearing an end, the unused portion of the retainer was returned to Madison Guaranty (indeed, perhaps while Madison Guaranty still owed the Rose Law Firm some money for the Babcock and Tulsa Econolodge matters). Thus, the suggestion that the retainer was some sort of gratuity, or was handled improperly, lacks foundation.

326 Los Angeles Times, Nov. 14, 1983. Cf. Strayhorn Interview at 45, Davidson Notes of Raglin Interview, May 11, 1994. The President states that he did not pick up the money. Interrogatory Responses of William Jefferson Clinton, May 24, 1995, answer to Interrogatory No. 17(f), at 32.

327 Interrogatory Responses of Hillary Rodham Clinton, May 24, 1995, answer to Interrogatory No. 17(d), at 34-35 ("I don't recall who negotiated the retainer arrangement (this was in fact simply a prepayment of fees and expenses, with any excess to be refunded to the client)."). This distinction is explained in Charles W. Wolfram, Modern Legal Ethics § 9.2.2, at 505-06, (1986).

328 RLF2-02995-96.

Third, as described above, McDougal's Madison Bank had refused to pay the Rose Law Firm in full for litigation services rendered in 1981 and 1982. Given this prior experience with McDougal, the Rose Law Firm could hardly be blamed for seeking advance payment before agreeing to represent a McDougal entity once again.

For these reasons, and in light of the small amount of money at issue, ~~further investigation of the retainer does not seem warranted.~~

VII. CONCLUSION.

The evidence does not provide a basis consistent with the extender statute on which to assert claims against the Rose Law Firm that could be pursued in a cost-effective manner. Accordingly, it is recommended that no further resources be expended on this part of the investigation.

VIII. APPENDICES.A. Appendix A: Subpoenas served on the Rose Law Firm.

Two subpoenas were served on the Rose Law Firm, one dated February 9, 1994 and the other dated August 31, 1994.

The subpoena dated February 9, 1994 called for:

1. Any and all documents in your possession, custody or control for the years 1982 through the present that reflect, refer or relate to the operations or management of Madison and/or MFC and their lending practices and transactions, including, but not limited to, the following:
2. All documents relating directly or indirectly to services rendered by you to Madison, MFC, and/or any related entity;
3. All documents relating directly or indirectly to legal opinions rendered by you to Madison, MFC, and/or any related entity;
4. Madison and/or MFC records;
5. Loan files, including, but not limited to, all attorney notes, closing binders, correspondence, billing statements, legal opinions, appraisals, financial statements or borrowers, and internal and external memoranda relating to the loan transactions;
6. Documents which reference Madison and/or MFC;
7. Documents reflecting the appointment of individuals or entities to positions as officers or directors of, or counsel to, Madison and/or MFC;
8. Documents relating to the incorporation or formation of Madison and/or MFC;
9. Board of Directors minutes for Madison and/or MFC;
10. Loan Committee minutes for Madison and/or MFC;
11. Written or oral communications with regulatory examiners;
12. Written or oral communications with outside or inside auditors;

12. Written or oral communications (including legal opinions or other memoranda) with, to or received from other Madison or MFC attorneys, including in-house attorneys and other outside law firms or counsel;

13. Organizational charts of Madison and/or MFC;

14. Audit Committee minutes for Madison and/or MFC;

15. Billing statements, invoices, and time sheets for, and/or referencing, your work performed for Madison and/or MFC; and

16. Retention agreements, engagement letters, and/or any other agreements between you and Madison and/or MFC.

II. Any and all documents in your possession, custody or control for the years 1982 through the present not covered by any prior request that reflect, refer or relate to Madison and/or MFC, including, but not limited to, the following:

1. Correspondence, internal memoranda or personal files;

2. Communications with employees of Madison and/or MFC;

3. Communications with state or federal regulatory agencies;

4. Board of Directors and Committee meetings for Madison and/or MFC, both formal and informal (including advice memoranda, minutes, personal notes, progress reports, strategy plans, policy and procedure guides, loan packages and presentations); and

5. Legal opinions, correspondence, documents reflecting legal research and the product of legal research, attorney notes, communications with Madison and/or MFC relating to legal opinions rendered or legal research performed.

Rider to subpoena dated Feb. 9, 1994. Most of the 44 boxes we received were produced in response to this subpoena.

To be sure that we have asked for everything of possible relevance, the RTC issued a second subpoena in August 1994. This subpoena, dated August 31, 1994, covered the following subjects:

1. Any and all documents referring or pertaining to Whitewater Development Company, Inc.

2. Any and all documents referring or pertaining to
  - a. Campaign committees or committees having any political or legislative purpose established by or for the benefit of William J. Clinton, including but not limited to Mr. Clinton's 1984 campaign committee.
  - b. James B. McDougal and/or Susan McDougal.
  - c. Rolling Manor, Inc.
  - d. Flowerwood Farms, Inc.
  - e. Riley-McDougal (partnership).
  - f. Great Southern Land Co.
  - g. Park Place, Inc.
  - h. McDougal and Associates.
  - i. Tucker-Smith-McDougal.
  - j. Smith-McDougal.
  - k. Kings River Land Co., Inc.
  - l. Pembroke Manor.
  - m. Madison Marketing.
  - n. Earth Movers, Inc.
  - o. Ozarks Realty Co.
  - p. Ozark Air Services.
  - q. Arkansas Ventures.
  - r. Chris Wade & Associates, Inc.
  - s. Appraisal Associates, Inc.
  - t. International Community Development Corp.

Rider to subpoena dated Aug. 31, 1994. In response, the Rose Law Firm, through counsel, offered to produce documents pertaining to Bobby Bratton, Camoobello, Madison Bank & Trust Company and Chris Wade. The Firm also indicated that it had nothing whatsoever pertaining to most of them, including Appraisal Associates; Arkansas Ventures; the various Clinton campaign organizations; Castle Grande; Dixie Continental; Earth Movers; Flowerwood Farms; Great Southern Land Company; International Community Development Corporation; Kings River Land Company, Inc.; Maplecreek Farms; McDougal & Associates; 101 River Development; Ozark Air Services; Pembroke Manor; Riley-McDougal Partnership; Rolling Manor; Smith-McDougal Partnership; Tucker-Smith-McDougal Partnership; and 1308 Main Street.

B. Appendix B: Comparison of two Castle Grande side agreements between Seth Ward and Madison Financial.

Here is a comparison of the two letters, both dated September 24, 1985, signed by Seth Ward and Jim McDougal. Underlining indicates words added in the second version of the letter; strikeouts indicate words removed in the second version of the letter:

Seth Ward
48 River Ridge
Little Rock, Arkansas 72207

September 24, 1985

Mr. Jim James B. McDougal, President
 Madison Financial Corporation
16th and Main Streets
 Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

Dear Jim Mr. McDougal:

This ~~letter~~ is to set forth our agreement concerning the property commonly referred to as all the land owned by the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock and certain improvements thereon.

On or about the 13th day of September, 1985, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association agreed to acquire all of the Industrial Development Company of Little Rock's property except the grounds and building commonly referred to as the Timex Building. In the agreement, Madison has the right to assign its rights ~~to that agreement~~ to any entity or individual. As part of our agreement, I have agreed to take title to all of the assets ~~and property of the aforementioned property that is located~~ immediately north of 145th Street, the water and sewer improvements, and the water and sewage sewer treatment ponds, including the one located south of 145th Street. Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association will agree to lend me on ~~a non-recourse basis~~ the purchase price for this property secured ~~only~~ by a mortgage of those parcels and the sewer and ~~waterworks~~ water works.

Madison Guaranty will pay $35,000.00 to me to have an option for at least 270 days from the date of acquisition to purchase the property from me at any time for the in whole or in part, for at least the pro rata amount of the note plus all accrued interest;
except one parcel described as follows:

Approximately 22 1/2 acres located and referred to as the Northeast Quadrant of the Interchange of Highway 65 and 145th Street. More specifically described in the attached legal description which is a part of this agreement.

It is the intention of both Madison and myself to attempt to develop all of the property acquired from I.D.C.; and sell it as quickly as possible. If there is any purchase of the property or any portion thereof is sold during the 270 day period, the sale price will be mutually approved by me and Madison Financial Corporation. The proceeds of any the sale will be applied toward the promissory note, less a ~~ten percent~~ 10% sales commission to be paid to me ~~if the property is sold by me, or at~~. At Madison's discretion, the ~~any~~ particular piece of property may be deeded back to Madison prior to the execution of the sales transaction. If it is sold by anyone else, then the proceeds will go to Madison Guaranty, ~~less the commission to the other seller, and a four~~ ~~percent commission to me, a sales transaction.~~

It is also agreed, in addition to the salary I am receiving from Madison Guaranty, ~~on all property acquired from I.D.C. sold~~ ~~either by me or by Madison Guaranty after the exercise of~~ ~~Madison's option, or on that portion of the property already~~ ~~acquired by Madison from I.D.C., I shall receive a ten percent~~
~~commission on said sale if it is sold by me, and four percent~~ ~~commission if it is sold by anyone else. Financial Corporation, I~~ will receive 10% sales commission on all property sold, regardless who sells it, except residential property that will be located south of 145th Street, in which case I will receive 4% commission if sold by any other person.

During the term of the option period, all of the net revenues of the ~~waterworks~~ water works and sewer department shall be forwarded directly to Madison Guaranty for application toward the note, unless such facilities are sold sooner. Madison Financial Corporation will also be responsible for all taxes, special assessments, dues, insurance premiums, etc. during the period of this option.

I would appreciate your acknowledging and agreeing to the terms of ~~this~~ the letter of agreement.

Sincerely,

Seth Ward

SW:ss

Acknowledged and accepted,

~~Jim~~ James B. McDougai, President

I. INTRODUCTION.

Pillsbury Madison & Sutro LLP ("PM&S") was retained by the Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC") to assist in the investigation of possible civil claims against individuals and entities associated with Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association of McCrory, Arkansas ("Madison Guaranty").<sup>1</sup> As part of this investigation, PM&S was asked to investigate certain issues with respect to the legal services rendered by the Rose Law Firm of Little Rock, Arkansas. Those services included services rendered to Madison Guaranty before its failure in February 1989 and services rendered to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC") and the RTC as successors in interest to Madison Guaranty after its failure. This report summarizes the scope and results of the investigation of the Rose Law Firm's services to the FDIC and the RTC after Madison Guaranty's failure. In particular, this part of the investigation focuses on the Rose Law Firm's representation of the FDIC and the RTC in an accounting malpractice action brought on behalf of Madison Guaranty against its former auditors, Frost & Company.<sup>2</sup>

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF THE INVESTIGATION.

A. Sources of information.

Documents were subpoenaed from the Rose Law Firm. The Rose Law Firm produced approximately 49 banker's boxes of documents, of which approximately 44 banker's boxes pertained to the subject of this report--the Frost & Company litigation of 1988-1991. Most of the remaining documents pertained to services rendered before Madison Guaranty failed, or to services rendered to other clients on matters that fell within the scope of the subpoenas.

Documents also were subpoenaed from several dozen other persons. For a full list of subpoenaed individuals and entities, see part II of the General

---

1 The scope and purpose of the investigation is set forth in the RTC's Order of Investigation dated February 4, 1994.

2 The Frost & Company action originally was brought by the Memphis, Tennessee law firm of Gernish & McCreary and was styled Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan Association, et al. v. Frost & Company, No. 88-1193 (Pulaski Cty. Cir. Ct.). After Madison Guaranty failed, the action was removed to United States District Court, and the FDIC was substituted for the plaintiffs. The action then was styled FDIC v. Frost & Company, No. LR-C-89-0216 (E.D. Ark.). In March 1989, the FDIC replaced the Gernish firm with the Rose Law Firm because of concerns about the Gernish firm's representation of other clients in matters adverse to the FDIC and other bank regulatory agencies. Later in 1989 the RTC was substituted for the FDIC, and the case became RTC v. Frost & Company, under the same docket number. Hereinafter, the case will be referred to as "RTC v. Frost & Co."

Report on the Investigation of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Related Entities (December 1995).

This report makes extensive reference to the Report of Investigation dated August 3, 1995 prepared by the RTC's Office of Inspector General and the bound volumes of exhibits thereto, which included sworn statements and notes of interviews of a number of additional witnesses.<sup>3</sup>

B. Issues examined.

Initially, this part of the investigation focused on work that the Rose Law Firm performed before Madison Guaranty's failure. There were several reasons for this. First, such work was more likely to have caused a loss for which the RTC could seek to recover in litigation. Second, the RTC's Office of Inspector General already was investigating the Rose Law Firm's alleged conflicts of interest and overbilling in connection with work for Madison Guaranty after its failure.<sup>4</sup> Therefore, the initial focus was on the Rose Law Firm's work for Madison Guaranty before Madison Guaranty went into conservatorship on or about February 28, 1989.<sup>5</sup>

Later, after the issuance of the report of the RTC's Office of Inspector General in August 1995, PM&S was asked to review the IG Report and the files of RTC v. Frost & Company with a view toward determining whether the RTC might have a cost-effective claim against the Rose Law Firm based on its handling of that litigation. The results of that part of the investigation are covered in this report.

III. RESULTS OF THE INVESTIGATION.

Between the time the Rose Law Firm was substituted in and the time the Frost case settled, the Rose Law Firm developed an impermissible conflict of interest, which it neither fully disclosed to its client, the RTC, nor had waived. Nevertheless, the conflict does not seem to have prejudiced the RTC, as the Frost case seems to have been settled on reasonable terms. A claim could be asserted against the Rose Law Firm with respect to the conflict of interest seeking to recoup some of the attorneys' fees that it received from the RTC, but

3 The Report of Investigation dated August 3, 1995 prepared by the RTC's Office of Inspector General with respect to the Rose Law Firm is cited frequently below. For example, a citation to "IG Report at III-15" is a reference to page 15 of volume III. Similarly, a citation to "IG Ex. III-35, at 2" is a reference to page 2 of exhibit 35 to volume III.

5 That work will be covered in another report.

such a claim would be difficult to prosecute, might well not succeed and, win or lose, would cost more to prosecute than the probable maximum recovery. Thus, the institution of legal proceedings against the Rose Law Firm by the RTC does not seem warranted.

IV. ANALYSIS.

This part of the investigation focused primarily on two questions:

1. Did the Rose Law Firm engage in actionable misconduct, primarily with respect to possible conflicts of interest?
2. If so, was the RTC damaged by that conduct?

Both questions are relevant to the ultimate issue of whether the RTC should institute legal proceedings against the Rose Law Firm. The two issues will be presented separately, starting with the issue of liability for possible conflicts of interest.

A. Possible liability for impermissible conflicts of interest.

1. Background and scope limitations.

The issue here is whether the Rose Law Firm had an impermissible conflict of interest during any part of the period that it represented the FDIC or the RTC as conservator of Madison Guaranty in prosecuting an action for accounting malpractice against the firm of Frost & Company and its directors. The malpractice action had been filed in early 1988 on behalf of plaintiffs Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial Corporation, its wholly owned subsidiary ("Madison Financial"). Plaintiffs were initially represented by Jeffrey Gerrish and the Memphis law firm of Gerrish & McCreary.

On February 28, 1989, the FDIC was named conservator for Madison Guaranty. Actual intervention occurred on March 2, 1989. Shortly after enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act ("FIRREA")<sup>6</sup> in August 1989, Madison Guaranty came under the control of the RTC.

In March 1989, the FDIC concluded that it would replace Gerrish & McCreary in the Frost suit because of potential conflicts. On or about March 27, 1989, the Rose Law Firm was picked by the FDIC as new counsel in the case. The Rose Law Firm thereafter represented the FDIC and later the 6 Public Law No. 101-73, 103 Stat. 364.

RTC as successor to Madison Guaranty until the Frost case was settled in April 1991.

This analysis does not consider events occurring after April 1991 or policies and guidelines of the RTC pertaining to conflicts of interest to the extent they were issued after April 1991. Accordingly, the analysis is limited to the following:

1. Model Rules of Professional Conduct, as adopted by the Arkansas Supreme Court, December 16, 1985;<sup>7</sup>
2. "Guide for Legal Representation," FDIC, June 1989;<sup>8</sup>
3. RTC regulations at 12 C.F.R. Part 1606, effective as of February 5, 1990;<sup>9</sup>
4. "A Law Firm's Guide: How to Be Considered for Retention by the FDIC and RTC," May 1990;<sup>10</sup> and
5. "Guidelines of the FDIC/RTC With Respect to Conflicts of Interest and Confidentiality and General Policies of Waiver Favored by the Outside Counsel Conflicts Committee," May 2, 1990.<sup>11</sup>

The RTC/FDIC guidelines and regulations do not add substantially to the meaning of "conflict" as used in the Arkansas Model Rules. The RTC/FDIC materials, however, do articulate a higher requirement for disclosure than do the Model Rules, in light of the reservation by RTC/FDIC of the right to determine whether there is a conflict in a particular situation.

There are also various Legal Services Agreements between the agencies and the Rose Law Firm.

2. Conflict issues.

Rather than recite the lengthy "facts" material to the conflict issues, all of which are contained in the Inspector General's Reports, it is sufficient to refer briefly to the relationships that bear on the conclusions that follow. Further facts will appear in the discussion of the reasons for a conclusion that a particular relationship created a conflict. The relationships--professional, familial and client-lawyer--are the following:

1. The Rose Law Firm represented RTC/FDIC as conservator of Madison Guaranty in litigation against Frost & Company from March 1989 through April 1991.
2. Webster Hubbell during the time in question was a member of the Rose Law Firm.
3. Hubbell is Seth Ward's son-in-law and is a brother-in-law of Seth Ward II.
4. Hubbell during the time in question had various business relationships with Ward and his son (Seth Ward II).
5. The Rose Law Firm through Hubbell and others represented Seth Ward in a variety of matters before, during and after the firm's representation of RTC/FDIC in the Frost litigation, including the following:
  - a. Rose attorney Thomas Thrash in September-October 1985 represented Madison Guaranty and Ward in the transaction by which Madison and Ward acquired from Industrial Development Corporation ("IDC") the property that became known as Castle Grande, in connection with which Madison Guaranty made loans to Ward.<sup>12</sup>
  - b. Hubbell in December 1986 apparently helped Ward frame his denial of liability to Madison Guaranty on certain notes arising from the above transaction.<sup>13</sup>
  - c. The Rose Law Firm through Hubbell in 1988 represented P.O.M. Inc. (a business owned by the Wards) and Seth Ward II in garnishment proceedings arising from a judgment in favor of Seth Ward and against RTC/FDIC as conservator of Madison Guaranty.
  - d. The Rose Law Firm through Hubbell assisted Ward in 1990 in an agreement with Ward's counsel (Alston Jennings and his law firm) that Ward would "pay or bond a final judgment the RTC may obtain" against Ward in the litigation between Ward and the RTC.

6. The Rose Law Firm in 1989 hired as a law clerk and then as a lawyer Patricia Heritage, formerly employed by Madison Guaranty and Madison Financial.

7. The Rose Law Firm, while the Frost case was pending and being prosecuted by the Rose Law Firm on behalf of the RTC, represented Precision Industries, of which James Alford (an individual defendant in the Frost case) was president.

8. The Rose Law Firm in 1985 represented Madison Guaranty before the Arkansas Department of Securities.

3. The Frost case.

Frost & Company had been retained in 1984 and 1985 to conduct audits of Madison Guaranty and subsidiaries. Two audits were conducted and completed covering 1984 and 1985.

An FHLBB examination begun in March 1986 criticized Madison Guaranty management for diversion of resources, including loans to insiders.<sup>14</sup> The reports referred to poor underwriting of loans and inadequate or non-existent documentation of loans. New management was installed at Madison Guaranty. The "Big 6" accounting firm now known as KPMG Peat Marwick was retained to determine the extent of damage done by the prior management. The Borod & Huggins law firm was engaged to investigate the prior management's irregular business practices and consider possible legal claims for damages. Jeffrey Gerrish, initially with Borod & Huggins and later with his own firm, concluded that Frost & Company had potential malpractice liability. A suit against Frost was authorized. In addition to Frost, the suit named as individual defendants the directors of Frost, including James Alford.

The plaintiffs' theory of malpractice was that Frost had failed to perform an adequate review of loan files and as a result established an inadequate loan loss reserve; an adequate loan loss reserve at the time would have rendered Madison Guaranty insolvent and regulators would have closed the institution down. The damages claimed were based on the loans, made after the institution should have been closed, that ultimately defaulted.<sup>15</sup>

For evidence of malpractice liability, plaintiffs expected to rely in part on evidence that the auditors had not properly reviewed files of certain loans made prior to the audit. The plaintiffs' theory was that these files, if properly reviewed, would have put the auditors on notice that the loans were poorly underwritten. For damages, plaintiffs relied on non-performing loans made during the "damage window," a period of roughly a year between Madison Guaranty's receipt of Frost's first audit report and Madison Guaranty's receipt of information from the FHLBB examiners that Frost's work might have been erroneous.<sup>16</sup> Among the loans made during the damages window were loans to Ward that were in part roll-overs of earlier loans made in connection with the purchase by Ward and Madison Financial of the Castle Grande property from IDC.

Richard Donovan, a Rose Law Firm lawyer who worked on the Frost case, stated that in preparing the case they focused on non-performing loans that would have "jury appeal", such as "loans to insiders, which a jury would readily conclude should not have been made."<sup>17</sup> Ward's loans were initially on the list as such.<sup>18</sup>

The Frost case was settled in February 1991, shortly after a motion to compel production of the Ward loan files and other documents had been granted.<sup>19</sup> At some point, however, Rose Law Firm lawyers made a decision to drop Ward's loans from the damage list. This was done, it was said, because in 1988 Ward had won a case against Madison Guaranty in a trial court for real estate commissions on sales of Castle Grande properties in which Madison Guaranty had counterclaimed to recover an outstanding note or notes. The lawyers concluded that Frost would have a good argument that it was overreaching for the RTC to seek from Frost amounts that another jury had found did not have to be repaid.<sup>20</sup>

4. Conclusions.

1. The Rose Law Firm had a conflict under the Arkansas Model Rules of Professional Conduct in continuing with representation of RTC/FDIC in the Frost case in light of the facts that (a) Seth Ward was at that time a current client of the Rose Law Firm, (b) the Rose Law Firm had represented Madison Guaranty and Ward in the acquisition of the Castle Grande property from IDC, in which questionable loans had been made to Ward, and (c) the Rose Law Firm had in its employ an attorney, Patricia Heritage, a former employee of Madison Guaranty, who while at Madison Guaranty may have created minutes of board meetings that never took place, and who was a potential witness in the Frost case. Because there were conflicts under the Model Rules, there were also conflicts under the various RTC/FDIC guides and regulations.<sup>21</sup>

2. The Rose Law Firm was required but failed to fully disclose the foregoing conflicts. While the Rose Law Firm did disclose the familial relationship between Hubbell and Seth Ward, his father-in-law, there was inadequate disclosure of the extent of the firm's representation of Ward. There is no indication that there was disclosure of the firm's representation in connection with the acquisition of the Castle Grande properties. While there may have been certain disclosures concerning Patricia Heritage, the claimed focus of them was on whether her being called as a witness would disqualify the firm as trial counsel, which was not an issue.

3. The Rose Law Firm was required but failed to disclose to RTC a potential conflict in its representation of Precision Industries while Precision's president was an individually named defendant in the Frost case.

4. Any conflict resulting only from Hubbell's familial relationship with Seth Ward was waived. We cannot conclude that there was any other waiver.

5. Discussion.

At the outset, the Rose Law Firm's Response to the Reports of the Inspector General attempts to separate the firm from its member Hubbell in a manner that implies that even if Hubbell had certain conflicts, they did not affect the firm. Thus, while acknowledging that Hubbell had business relationships with the Wards and P.O.M. Inc., the Response argues that "none of those 21 These conflicts may not have been appreciated at the time the Rose Law Firm initially undertook representation of FDIC in the Frost matter. However, under Model Rule 1.7, if a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer must withdraw unless the client consents after consultation. See Comment to Model Rule 1.7, IG Ex. I-1, at 522. Rose thus had a continuing obligation under the Model Rules to disclose and to seek a consent.

---

business relationships were known to Mr. Hubbell's partners at Rose.<sup>22</sup> Under the Model Rules, in particular Rule 1.10(a), where lawyers are associated together as a firm, conflicts are viewed from the premise that the firm is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rule governing loyalty to the client.<sup>23</sup> Hubbell was a member of the Rose Law Firm and knew fully his relationships. Hubbell was also the Rose Law Firm's lead attorney in the Frost case. If Hubbell was disqualified from representing RTC because of a relationship, the firm was likewise disqualified, whether or not the cause of disqualification was "known to Mr. Hubbell's partners at Rose."

In a similar vein, in arguing that the Rose Law Firm met its disclosure obligations, the Response implies that disclosure to the client was accomplished by disclosure of numerous items to Hubbell.<sup>24</sup> It was not.

Representation of the RTC in the Frost case was adverse to the interests of Ward. While Ward was not a party in the case, loans to Ward originally arising from the Castle Grande development and then partially rolled over were included among the transactions for which the RTC sought damages from Frost and were therefore material to the case. Those loans were on the Frost damage list because they were thought to have "jury appeal" as non-performing loans to an insider, i.e., they were improper loans that should not have been made.<sup>25</sup> Other litigation regarding those loans was pending between RTC and Ward.<sup>26</sup> While in 1988 a trial court had ruled in favor of Ward in that other litigation, that judgment never became final. The suit was not concluded until 1993. A finding in Frost that the loans to Ward were improper could have prejudiced Ward in the other litigation had there been a retrial. Such a finding could also have been embarrassing to Ward. Presumably, the Rose Law Firm did not want to cause embarrassment to its client Ward.

In addition, and more serious to the RTC, the RTC's position that loans to Ward would have "jury appeal" as improper loans was inconsistent with the interests of the Rose Law Firm, which had represented Ward and Madison Guaranty in the transaction that originally gave rise to the loans. Thus, the Rose Law Firm's own conduct in transactions involving Ward and Madison Guaranty that were potentially material to the Frost litigation was in question to the degree that the RTC's ability to have a fair trial could have been affected had that conduct been disclosed to the jury. The circumstances raise a serious question as to how the Rose Law Firm could have concluded that its representation of the RTC would not be materially limited by its prior representation of Ward and Madison Guaranty.

The Comment to Model Rule 1.7 points out that Loyalty to a client is also impaired when a lawyer cannot consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client because of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client. Paragraph (b) [of Model Rule 1.7] addresses such situations.

.....

The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have adverse effect on representation of a client. . . . If the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give a client detached advice.<sup>27</sup>

The reports amply illustrate the adverse impact related to this conflict. The Rose Law Firm's Response to the Inspector General's Reports refers to a "firewall" intended to exclude Hubbell--lead attorney for the RTC in the case against Frost-- from participating in any discussion about Seth Ward's loans. There is no indication in the Inspector General's Reports of an actual "screen" around Hubbell in the sense that ethical "screens" are usually understood. Hubbell was not screened from Ward in any way.<sup>28</sup> However, the very creation of any sort of "firewall" or screen between Hubbell and discussion of the Ward loans only confirms the conflict or impairment of loyalty: The "firewall" would prevent Hubbell from participating in discussions and decisions material to the preparation and handling of the Frost case, in which he was lead attorney. Issues such as whether Ward's loans were to be included or excluded from the damage list were apparently to be decided without Hubbell's participation. While, in different circumstances, it could have been appropriate to screen Hubbell from any participation in the Frost case overall, because of his relationships with Ward, it is unthinkable to keep the lead attorney in a contested litigation in the dark concerning issues material to the case, particularly without informing the client.

28 The RTC's Sorenson, who prepared the damage list of loans for the Frost case, and the list of "related party" loans, was never told or made aware of the "firewall" as to Hubbell. Sorenson regarded Hubbell as the lead attorney in the case who developed the litigation strategy. See IG Ex. III-145 (Statement of Lee Sorenson), at 2-3.

The employment of Patricia Heritage also created a conflict for the Rose Law Firm. The Rose:Lawyers were concerned that Frost would try to show that the major cause of the losses was criminal activity by Madison Guaranty's management.<sup>29</sup> There was evidence from which it could be argued that Patricia Heritage while employed at Madison Guaranty had created minutes of Board meetings that never took place.<sup>30</sup> Heritage had been deposed in February 1991, shortly before the Frost case was settled, and was questioned about the preparation of the minutes.<sup>31</sup> There was thus a risk that the Rose Law Firm's employment of Heritage could hurt the plaintiffs and undermine their counsel's credibility. There is no indication that this was discussed with the RTC.

The reports, which contain inconsistent and conflicting material in some respects, and which leave open many questions of degree and proximity, do not in our opinion indicate any other disabling conflicts within the meaning of the Model Rules. We do find failures to disclose.

6. Disclosure issues.

Resolving questions of conflict of interest is primarily the responsibility of the lawyer undertaking the representation.<sup>32</sup> The RTC/FDIC, however, have made it plain that they reserve the right to determine when a conflict may interfere with their representation by an outside counsel and therefore reserve "the right to decide whether an actual or potential conflict exists."<sup>33</sup> This reservation, and the law firm's agreement to it, imply a broader obligation to disclose circumstances that might be deemed a conflict than otherwise, and a broader disclosure requirement than the Model Rules suggest.

The Guide provides that in addition to conflicts covered by the Model Rules, there are other actual or potential conflict situations peculiar to . . . representation of the FDIC of which we should be promptly informed. These include, but are not limited to, such matters as: . . . representation of an officer, director, debtor, creditor or stockholder of any failed or assisted bank in a matter relating to the FDIC, representation of a creditor whose claim competes with that of the FDIC, . . . and representation of a client in a matter adverse to the FDIC. Upon notification, we will inform you promptly whether we believe a conflict exists.<sup>34</sup>

The reference to disclosure of both "representation of a creditor whose claim competes with that of the FDIC, . . . and representation of a client in a matter adverse to the FDIC" leaves no doubt that the RTC/FDIC expected to be consulted as to certain representations whether or not the particular representation was "in a matter adverse to the FDIC."

The RTC conflict regulations at 12 C.F.R. Part 1606, effective as of February 5, 1990,<sup>35</sup> likewise suggest a broad disclosure requirement: "organizational conflict," for example, is defined simply as "an interest or relationship which could adversely affect the contractor's ability to perform under the contract or to represent the RTC";<sup>36</sup> contractors are required to provide the RTC "with sufficient information to permit the RTC to make a determination with regard to organizational conflicts of interest."<sup>37</sup>

Similarly, "A Law Firms' Guide: How to Be Considered for Retention by the FDIC and RTC," May 1990,<sup>38</sup> requires that outside counsel must immediately notify the Corporation's Legal Divisions in writing of any actual or potential conflicts of interest as soon as they arise.

As the Comment to Model Rule 1.7 points out:

Conflicts of interest in contexts other than litigation sometimes may be difficult to assess. Relevant factors in determining whether there is potential for adverse effect include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that actual conflict will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict if it does arise. The question is often one of proximity and degree.<sup>39</sup>

Only by disclosure could RTC/FDIC exercise the rights they reserve to decide whether a particular relationship creates a conflict.

Under these standards, while there was not necessarily a conflict presented by the Rose Law Firm's representation of Precision Industries while representing the RTC in the Frost case (because Rose represented the corporation, not its president<sup>40</sup>), there was a potential conflict because James Alford, an individually named defendant in the Frost case, was president of Precision at the time. The Rose Law Firm was in a position to pull its punches against Frost, or at least against Alford, so as not to offend the president of another current client. The Rose Law Firm lawyers apparently recognized this situation as a potential conflict, and agree "in hindsight" that it might have been preferable to disclose it to RTC.<sup>41</sup> There is no indication that it was disclosed.<sup>42</sup>

B. Possible damages.

The second issue is whether, assuming there was an impermissible conflict, this conflict resulted in damages to the RTC. This has been assessed by reviewing selected portions of the record of the Frost case to see whether, insofar as one can tell in hindsight and at a distance, the case was settled on appropriate terms, and whether the case's value seems to have been materially decreased by the conflicts.

It is not easy to second-guess strategic decisions made in litigation or settlement negotiations. Trial counsel who lived with a case and who saw all the witnesses know far more about it than others ever can by reading a cold record years later. Nevertheless, trial and appellate lawyers often are called upon to assess the value of a case tried by someone else, so with these caveats we proceed here to assess the value of the Frost case based on a selective review of limited portions of the record.

42 Id. It is impossible to say whether the Rose Law Firm did "pull its punches" against Alford. Richard Donovan's statement (id. at 18) and the Rose Law Firm's response to the Inspector General's Reports say they did not.

1. Negligence.

For purposes of attempting to assess the strengths and weaknesses of the RTC's case against Frost & Company, we reviewed parts or all of the following depositions taken in the Frost case: Michael Jones, James Alford, Kelli Alford, James Cullen, Jeffrey Freuchting, Dorsey W. Jackson, Michael Jones, Art Kellam, James Timothy McBrayer, James P. Neumeier, Stanley Smith, William Daniel Thomas, Jr., William L. Blackwell, Roland Brock, Bonnie Crocheron, Stephen K. Cuffman, Harry Don Denton, Patricia Heritage, Sarah Hawkins, M. G. "Chip" Kiesewetter, John Latham, Jack C. Owen, Charles Peacock III, Charles Peacock IV, John Selig, Lee Sorenson, Barbara Spears, James Smith and Gregory T. Young. As appropriate, we also reviewed the exhibits and materials related to those depositions. We also reviewed a January 19, 1988-89 accountants' professional liability policy (claims made) issued to Frost, the first amended complaint and the answer to the first amended complaint.

It appears from the transcripts that counsel on all sides were competent and adequately aggressive in pursuing the interests of their respective clients. In particular, the Rose Law Firm did not appear to be less than aggressive, and it was reasonably effective in pursuing legal theories and asserting the interests of the RTC.

The transcripts are consistent with a strong case for negligence against the Frost firm. Percipient witnesses from the Frost firm made damaging statements and admissions. The expert witnesses retained by the Frost firm were of limited effectiveness in asserting defenses and addressing problems raised by the plaintiff. Frost's principal accounting expert (Jones), however, was tenacious and reasonably effective in his testimony, particularly with respect to raising triable questions about the adequacy of the review and the conclusions of KPMG Peat Marwick as successor auditors of Madison Guaranty. In addition, the last day of deposition of the plaintiff's expert (Blackwell) did much to undermine his previous testimony.

The testimony as a whole establishes quite well that the audits conducted by the Frost firm with respect to the 1984 and 1985 calendar years of Madison Guaranty were seriously flawed. The testimony showed that Frost auditors were insufficiently skeptical of information received from management, failed to check adequately the values of many loans on the books of Madison Guaranty (the failures concerned, inter alia, the adequacy of loan loss reserves, the adequacy of documentation, the validity of appraisals, the value of delinquent loans, and the appropriateness of security and documentation of related party loans), failed to follow many of Frost's own internal procedures with respect to audits, failed to respond in an appropriate professional fashion with respect to information from federal regulators and the prior auditor of Madison Guaranty (the Deloitte firm), utilized many audit personnel who were poorly qualified with respect to financial institutions and offered seriously inadequate explanations of why observed problems and deficiencies were not carried into management letters.

In contrast, the testimony of witnesses with the successor auditor of Madison Guaranty, KPMG Peat Marwick, was strong and effective in establishing that the Frost firm committed numerous errors. The partner in charge of the Peat Marwick audit for 1985 and 1986 (Jackson) testified particularly strongly that in his opinion the Frost firm had repeatedly committed substantial errors. The cross-examination of such witnesses for Peat Marwick was not effective.

Accounting liability cases are not easy to present to a jury. The subject matter is dry and technical. The applicable auditing standards are vague and elastic. The auditor's client often must share some of the blame. Nevertheless, on this record there would appear, overall, to be a high likelihood that the negligence of the Frost firm could have been established, in substantial part based upon the testimony of its own witnesses.

2. Causation.

Proof of negligence is of no use to a plaintiff unless it can be proved that the negligence caused damages. Thus, causation is the next essential element of an accounting malpractice case, and often a difficult element to prove. It is apparent from the transcripts reviewed that there were substantial problems with causation issues in the Frost case.

The principal problem is that the federal regulators put Madison Guaranty on notice of its noncompliance with federal regulations for the year ending December 31, 1983, and bank management was notified of that in writing by no later than June 1, 1984. Based upon testimony about that notification, it is apparent that the information conveyed was strongly critical of Madison Guaranty's internal auditing and controls, and raised a number of issues and problems, establishing strong inferences that the Frost firm had failed to discharge properly its professional obligations to Madison Guaranty.

It appears that Frost may not have seen or been aware of the FHLBB communications to Madison Guaranty, although it is unclear why that was so. Frost should have sought out and reviewed Madison Guaranty's communications with its regulators. In any event, Frost's 1984 and 1985 audits did not consider the regulators' criticisms, which had been conveyed to Madison Guaranty's management and directors in mid-1984.

The Frost firm argued that the FHLBB notice of Madison Guaranty's deficiencies meant little because (to paraphrase the argument) the federal regulators were finding problems at every savings and loan, the regulations were too strict for any S&L to comply with, the real problem was the general failure in the real estate market and (more generally) the problems identified were not as substantial as the federal regulators had advised. In the context of the litigation against it, the Frost firm obviously did not have an interest in arguing forcefully that Madison Guaranty's board and the federal regulators were already on notice of serious problems, but that would almost certainly be an argument raised now by the Rose Law Firm.<sup>43</sup>

Another causation issue that made less likely a successful claim against the Frost firm arose out of the very substantial ownership and managerial control exercised by McDougal. It is apparent from the transcripts that McDougal's control and management of Madison Guaranty caused many of the problems from which Madison Guaranty suffered between 1984 and 1986. Testimony from relatively senior officers (e.g., Denton) suggested that McDougal ran all aspects of Madison Guaranty despite his lack of a formal position, directed the use of unqualified appraisers, funded loans without appraisals and would have ignored anything critical of management that Frost might have said--at least so long as he could hire replacement auditors.

Other testimony suggested that Frost (and undoubtedly others) deferred to McDougal in many respects because of his ownership and management positions. As one of the Frost accountants testified, it was very unusual to have the owners of an S&L also actively managing it, and that led to a lower degree of oversight by the Frost firm of certain aspects of the Madison Guaranty operation.

Testimony shows that the Board of Directors of Madison Guaranty was not strong and deferred to McDougal to a large extent until McDougal's removal from the institution in July 1986. The depositions taken of Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors did not help the RTC. With perhaps one exception, the directors said nothing that suggested, let alone convincingly proved, that they would have acted differently had Frost's audits raised the issues that should have been raised. In that context, the Frost firm could argue that, even if it had raised more substantial issues with the management of Madison Guaranty, no action would have been taken because the issues raised would have implicated McDougal's control of Madison Guaranty.

Another problem with establishing causation is in the defense raised by Frost that the problems of Madison Guaranty were both common to the industry

43 A related argument is that the regulators would not have taken over Madison Guaranty any more quickly had they known of its insolvency earlier. Supporting this argument is the fact that the regulators did not take over Madison Guaranty quickly once KPMG Peat Marwick determined that it was insolvent (that occurred in May 1987; the takeover occurred in February 1989). Opposing this argument is the fact that the regulators clamped down on Madison Guaranty's risky activities long before they took it over.

and caused by extraneous forces. While the defense is relatively weak in the circumstances, it nonetheless might have had a substantial impact upon a jury in Arkansas during the period in which the case would have been tried. In essence, it was Frost's argument (principally through an expert witness) that the general rise in interest rates led to relaxation of federal regulations limiting investments by savings and loan associations, inducing S&Ls to engage in riskier investments, while at the same time the regulators were both understaffed and more willing to enforce remaining regulations in a lax manner. The Frost firm also argued that the real estate industry in Arkansas generally collapsed in the 1984-1986 period, leading to many of the problems of Madison Guaranty. These defenses might strike a responsive chord among a jury in Arkansas, many of whom might have experienced similar problems during that period as a result of declining real estate prices, bank and savings and loan failures and related economic problems. These defenses raised the risk that a claim could not have been established successfully against the Frost firm.

On balance, it appears that establishing causation on the claims against the Frost firm would have been difficult, notwithstanding the relatively clear case of negligence. Of greatest import are the FHLBB notice to management of the deficiencies it found with respect to the 1983 financial statements and the evidence that McDougal so dominated the affairs of Madison Guaranty that even if Frost had done an adequate job, its advice and recommendations would not have been carried out by Madison Guaranty's Board of Directors and management.

3. Damages.

Assuming that Frost's negligence can be established, and assuming that causation can be demonstrated, there remains the question whether substantial damages could be proved, and whether any recovery in a substantially greater amount than was achieved ($1.025 million) was reasonably likely had somebody lacking the Rose Law Firm's conflicts handled the matter.

The apparently applicable accountants liability insurance policy carried a $50,000 deductible and a $3 million per claim limit. The settlement with the Frost firm was achieved by a payment of $1.025 million. It is our understanding that the Frost firm paid the $50,000 deductible and that the carrier paid the rest.

It is not entirely clear exactly how much the RTC would have prayed for at trial. The draft trial exhibits we have reviewed suggests that a realistic maximum would have been approximately $7 million, much of which was subject to question,<sup>44</sup> and certainly could not have exceeded $10 million.<sup>45</sup>

Regardless of whether the amount prayed for was to be $7 million or $10 million, the primary source of recovery was to be the $3 million insurance policy.<sup>46</sup> There was no expectation either on the part of the Rose Law Firm or the RTC that the Frost firm or its partners had substantial assets, or could make a substantial contribution toward a settlement, nor is it customary in accounting malpractice cases for the RTC to focus on individual ability to pay when insurance coverage is available.<sup>47</sup>

Thus, the RTC and the Rose Law Firm both assumed that the most the RTC could recover was approximately $3 million, regardless of the size of any judgment that might be awarded. For purposes of valuing the case, therefore, the figure of $3 million can be used as the upper limit of any possible recovery.

4. Litigation risk analysis.

The foregoing means that the RTC faced serious problems at trial, particularly with the issue of causation, and even if it won, it probably could not have recovered more than $3 million. Taking into account all the risks, it is apparent that the expected recovery would not have been more than roughly one-third of the $3 million, or approximately $1 million. A strong case could be made that the expected recovery was significantly less than $1 million.<sup>48</sup>

---

44 The expert CPA who testified for Frost stated that in his view a substantial portion of what Peat Marwick determined was the shortfall in loan loss reserves at year-end 1985 was improperly calculated under GAAP principles, and under RAP principles there would have been a substantially smaller loan loss reserve required of Madison Guaranty at year-end 1985. While we are not in a position to express an opinion as to which set of figures would be most likely to be accepted by a jury and a court, there is at least a substantial risk that much of the deficit found by the Peat Marwick analysis would be eliminated under RAP principles if the expert for Frost were believed.

45 An RTC witness, Lee Sorenson, calculated principal damages of $5.7 million and total damages (including prejudgment interest) of $10.3 million. Ex. 4 to Sorenson Deposition. It is not clear whether these were the numbers that were to be used at trial. Of Sorenson's $10.3 million, $222,395 represented losses attributed to several loans made to Seth Ward. Id.

48 By "expected recovery," we mean the expected value of the case, calculated in the ordinary fashion.

Given this assessment, the settlement of $1.025 million that was achieved appears to be well within the reasonable range for the case even if the RTC had been represented by comparable counsel without conflicts.

C. Potential for cost-effective litigation against the Rose Law Firm.

The ultimate issue is whether, on this record, the RTC should assert claims against the Rose Law Firm. In analyzing this issue, one must start with the applicable legal standard governing RTC litigation.

Congress established the RTC "to contain, manage, and resolve failed savings associations."<sup>49</sup> Congress gave the RTC the statutory duty of "maximiz[ing] the net present value return from the sale or other disposition of institutions . . . or the assets of such institutions . . . [and] minimiz[ing] the amount of any loss realized in the resolution of cases . . . ."<sup>50</sup> The RTC fulfills this responsibility in part by bringing civil actions in appropriate cases to recover damages.<sup>51</sup> Such cases are brought, however, only if there is reason to believe that the litigation will add to the value of the thrift's estate and thus minimize the losses caused by its failure. If there is no reason to believe that litigation will result in a net recovery, then there is no statutory basis to file a case.

This statutory mandate requires the determination of whether any claim that might be asserted against the Rose Law Firm can be litigated in a cost-effective manner. Put another way, the issue is whether claims can be stated that have an expected value greater than the expected cost of litigating them.

Applying this standard, it is recommended that no such claims be asserted. The reasons for this recommendation are as follows:

Liability: For the reasons stated in part IV.A above, a claim could be asserted that the Rose Law Firm had an impermissible conflict of interest in the Frost case, which it did not adequately disclose or have waived. An ethical violation, however, does not always translate into a tort. The rules of professional conduct are written as disciplinary rules. While the rules may inform a court as to the appropriate standard of care for certain purposes, a violation of the rules does not necessarily mean the commission of a tort for which damages may be awarded.

---

49 FIRREA § 107.

50 12 U.S.C. § 1441a(b)(3)(C), as amended by FIRREA § 501.

51 12 U.S.C. §§ 1821(d)(2), (k), (l), as amended by FIRREA § 212.

Convincing a jury that a tort was committed may not be easy. The applicable rules are complex and the subject matter is dull. Also, the Rose Law Firm might receive support from several quarters, including their opponents in the Frost case. In all probability, counsel for Frost & Company in the Frost litigation would testify that they did not see any conflict and do not think that the Rose Law Firm did the wrong thing.<sup>52</sup> If so, the RTC would be up against not just the opinion of one of Little Rock's leading firms, but the opinion of several such firms, and the lawyers for Frost & Company would likely be viewed as people without any axe to grind.

In addition, an Arkansas jury, in a close case, might well prefer the home-town defendant to the federal-government plaintiff even assuming that the jury agreed there was a conflict. A jury might well be reluctant to charge the current members of the Rose Law Firm for the ethical misdeeds of a former partner who currently resides in a federal prison.

Damages: There are two possible theories of damages. The first is that the case would have resulted in an outcome more favorable for the RTC but for the conflict. The second is that, regardless of the outcome, the fees paid by the RTC after the conflict arose should be returned.<sup>53</sup>

The unfavorable result theory: To recover under this theory, "[m]ere wistful speculation . . . is insufficient. [The client] must prove that, had [the law firm] disclosed the alleged conflict, [the client] would have received a more favorable result."<sup>54</sup> For the reasons stated in part IV.B above, the Frost case seems to have been settled on reasonable terms. In any event, proving otherwise would be difficult and might look like so much Monday-morning quarterbacking.

The fee refund theory: Some cases hold that a conflict of interest, if not disclosed and waived, entitles the client to recoup all legal fees paid even if the client is otherwise undamaged. That theory, if available,<sup>55</sup> ordinarily takes

---

52 IG Ex. III-159, III-160.

53 Both theories were advanced in Blecher & Collins, P.C. v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 858 F. Supp. 1442, 1457 (C.D. Cal. 1994).

54 Id. (emphasis in original).

55 Some courts reject the notion that the lawyer's breach of fiduciary duty automatically means "that he must forfeit fees for services he had already performed or would thereafter perform. Under New York law, attorneys may be entitled to recover for their services, even if they have breached their fiduciary obligations." Mar Oil, S.A. v. Morrissey, 982 F.2d 830, 840 (2d Cir. 1993).

effect only after the conflict becomes apparent: "[the law firm] must refund (at most) only the fees it received after the actual conflict arose."<sup>56</sup>

In this case, it seems likely that the conflicts did not become apparent until some time after the Rose Law Firm lawyers became familiar with the issues and strategies to be used in the Frost case. Thus, even if this fee refund theory were applicable, it could at best be used to seek only a portion of the fees paid to the Rose Law Firm. It is our understanding that the total fees paid to the Rose Law Firm for this engagement were approximately $200,000. We do not think that the RTC could reasonably seek to recover fees from other engagements of the Rose Law Firm by the RTC on matters unrelated to Madison Guaranty.

Litigation costs: A case against the Rose Law Firm based on the foregoing could not be litigated to judgment in a cost-effective manner. Preparing and trying such a case would involve many depositions (both of Rose Law Firm lawyers and others), heavy use by both sides of expensive experts and probably a fair amount of motion practice. There is no reasonable likelihood that such a case could be prepared and tried for $200,000. Thus, in all probability, the expense of litigating the matter would exceed the maximum recovery. Regardless of whether it won or lost at trial, the RTC would lose money on the case.

V. RECOMMENDATION.

While a claim could be stated against the Rose Law Firm, litigation would be difficult, the outcome would be uncertain and the expected recovery would not cover the costs of the litigation, much less lead to a net recovery for Madison Guaranty's estate. Thus, it is recommended that such litigation not be pursued.

56 Blecher & Collins, P.C. v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 858 F. Supp. at 1457 (emphasis in original). But see In re Eastern Sugar Antitrust Litigation, 697 F.2d 524, 533-34 (3d Cir. 1982) (recognizing the court's power to forfeit fees earned before the conflict arose, but rejecting that remedy except in cases where "the breach of professional ethics is so egregious that the need for attorney discipline and deterrence of future improprieties of that type outweighs [the fact that such an award would provide the client with a windfall and deprive the attorney of fees earned while acting ethically] . . ."; in that case, the remedy was rejected despite the lawyers' failure to disclose that plaintiffs' counsel began merger discussions with counsel for one of the defendants after approval of a settlement agreement but before resolution of attorneys' fees awards).

Dear Jerry:

It was good to talk to you today. I am enclosing herewith three file folders, labeled: A3880.1 MADISON GUARANTY LTD. FINESSE Application Brokerage Activities; A3880.1 Madison Guaranty - NewNorton - (1988) Preferred Stock Offering; and A3880.1 MADISON GUARANTY Preferred Stock Offering. Documents which were among the late Vincent Foster's files. They appear to me to be files of Rose Law Firm documents. I thought it most appropriate to transmit them to you, for retention and storage.

I would be grateful if you would confirm for me the receipt of these files.

Best wishes for a good Thanksgiving!

Sincerely,

David E. Connolly

---

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1996

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WHITEWATER
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS,
Washington, DC.

The Committee met at 10:00 a.m., in room 216 of the Hart Senate Office Building, Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (Chairman of the Committee) presiding.

OPENING COMMENTS OF CHAIRMAN ALFONSE M. D'AMATO

The CHAIRMAN. Let me say, for purposes of the witnesses and those who are assembled and those who are waiting, that the Ranking Member and I have been meeting with our Counsels in an attempt to try to expedite some of the hearings, and to resolve some of the technical difficulties that we might encounter, to be quite candid with you. So that is what has delayed the process and we believe we can start any moment.

[Whereupon, Jane C. Sherburne, Special Counsel to the President, and David E. Kendall, Attorney, Williams & Connolly; were called as witnesses and, having first been duly sworn, were examined and testified as follows:]

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kendall, Ms. Sherburne, we thank you for your cooperation in appearing here today, and as in the past, if there is any statement that you would like to make to the Committee, we would be happy to receive it.

Mr. Kendall.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF DAVID E. KENDALL ATTORNEY, WILLIAMS & CONNOLLY

Mr. KENDALL. I have none, Mr. Chairman.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF JANE C. SHERBURNE SPECIAL COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Sherburne.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I have no statement, either, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I'm about to have put before you, a set of billing records which I just want you to have because we're going to be referring to them.

I want to ask you, Mr. Kendall, whether these are billing records which you produced to the Senate Whitewater Committee on Friday, January 5, 1996. I don't need you to go through every one. I won't hold you to every one, but do these look like some of the records you produced?

Mr. KENDALL. These appear to be those records, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Kendall, when is the first time you saw those records?

Mr. KENDALL. I first saw the entire group of them at approximately 12:45 p.m. on Thursday, January 4, 1996.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you come to see them?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I had received a message from Ms. Huber to please stop by her office before I left the White House that day, and I stopped by her East Wing office and she handed me a sheaf of documents.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now was the sheaf of documents billing records and computer printouts which were Xeroxes but which had original handwriting in red on them?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Sherburne, when is the first time you saw those billing records?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I saw those billing records for the first time on January 4th when I went to the East Wing office with Mr. Kendall and Carolyn Huber's lawyer, Mr. Schuelke, and I believe it must have been around 5:00 p.m.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you come to go to that meeting at around 5:00 p.m.?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Kendall called me, I think, about an hour before that and told me that Carolyn had identified some records he thought we ought to take a look at immediately, that he and Mr. Schuelke would like to come over to the White House and go over to the East Wing with me so we could all take a look at them.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At this meeting around 5 p.m. you were there, Ms. Sherburne, Mr. Kendall, Ms. Huber, and Mr. Schuelke?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Anybody else?

Ms. SHERBURNE. There may have been other people around, but no one participating in what we were there to do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Schuelke was and is Ms. Huber's personal attorney?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Kendall, I want to just go back and ascertain from you the universe of requests for documents that you were considering in dealing with these records. Am I correct that in December 1993, there was a subpoena from the Department of Justice that was received to which these documents were responsive?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, that was a subpoena addressed to me. I received it on December 24, 1993. I remember the date distinctly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was a subpoena that—was it addressed to you, or was it in care of you, but actually addressed to the President and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. No, it was addressed to me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And did you understand that the subpoena was directed at documents in the personal custody and control of the President and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You believed they were simply addressed to documents in your custody and control?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you understand that you had an obligation to convey to the President and Mrs. Clinton the substance of that subpoena?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you do so?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you receive a second subpoena from the RTC at some point calling for, among other things, billing records?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was that?

Mr. KENDALL. I received document requests from both the RTC and the Independent Counsel. I received a document request in, I think, March 1994, followed by a subpoena that would have called for these records. And, likewise, I received further requests from the Independent Counsel in May 1994, addressed to the President and Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK. So the May 1994 subpoena was specifically addressed to the President and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was the RTC request?

Mr. KENDALL. The RTC request was in March. As I recall, it was followed up by a subpoena in June, but the subpoena called for the same things that the request did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the subpoena simply took the request and embodied it in a subpoena?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that RTC subpoena directed at the President and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. It was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now with respect to the requests and the subpoenas in 1994 about which you've just testified, did you understand you had an obligation to communicate the substance of those orders or subpoenas to the Clintons?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you do so?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Sherburne, did you get—

Mr. KENDALL. Excuse me, Mr. Chertoff. There was one other. I don't know if you wanted all of the requests.

Mr. CHERTOFF. OK, yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Also in, I think, March 1994, I received a request from the FDIC which quite specifically asked for billing records, and that was, as I say, in March or April of 1994.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that in connection with an investigation concerning the Rose Law Firm and possible conflicts of interest?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I don't know what the investigation was in connection with entirely. It did look to conflicts of interest, but it was focusing on Mrs. Clinton's work for the FSLIC on behalf of an Illinois savings and loan. She had billed 2 hours to the case.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was that FDIC request followed by a subpoena?

Mr. KENDALL. No, it was not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you communicate the substance of that request to the Clintons?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, we're still in 1994, Ms. Sherburne. Did you receive the same requests and subpoenas in 1994 about which Mr. Kendall has testified?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you receive any subpoenas or requests in 1994 to which these billing records were arguably responsive?

Ms. SHERBURNE. There was one subpoena in May 1994, from the Independent Counsel that called for records that had been authored by Mr. Foster, and because these records have Mr. Foster's handwriting on them, I believe they would have been responsive to that request.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you understand was the scope of your obligation to search for these records?

Ms. SHERBURNE. In May 1994, I personally was uninvolved in the search except peripherally. The search was conducted primarily under the direction of Joel Klein, who was then Deputy Counsel to the President. Mr. Klein sent a request to the entire White House, as I recall, and asked for such records to be located, identified, and delivered to the Counsel's Office.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say he disseminated it around the White House, did he disseminate the actual subpoena, or did he prepare a memorandum that explained what was required?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I am not certain of that since I was not directly involved, but I believe that he circulated a request and he may have attached the exact language from—no, no. As a matter of fact, he couldn't have because the subpoena was much broader, it was narrowed by agreement with the Independent Counsel, so the language that was actually sent around was not the precise language of the subpoena, so he couldn't have done that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And it was sent all over the White House?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's my understanding, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Finally, I want to just turn to our own requests and subpoenas, meaning the Senate's. In 1995, Mr. Kendall, did you receive first a document request from the Senate, and then later, a subpoena that was issued by this Committee?

Mr. KENDALL. I first received a document request, and then I received three subpoenas on Halloween 1995.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you understand that you had an obligation to convey those requests and those subpoenas, the substance of them, to the Clintons?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you do so?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Sherburne, did you receive requests and subpoenas from this Committee?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, many.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you understand that you had an obligation to respond to those, certainly with respect to the subpoenas, in the White House?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Absolutely.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you circulate the substance of what was required under those subpoenas around the White House?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now since we are on the issue of document requests, I have to indicate to you, Ms. Sherburne, that late yesterday we received at the Committee a package of documents with a cover letter signed by you dated February 7, 1996, indicating that these were documents responsive to the Committee's subpoena on October 31, that had been in the possession of Mr. Gearan whose staff had "inadvertently packed them with material Mr. Gearan took with him to the Peace Corps." And you are familiar with these documents?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I am.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you first receive them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe sometime last week.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was that, last week?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I'm not sure. I don't have—we received them by cover of a transmittal letter from Mr. Gearan's attorney, and I'm not sure of the date of the letter.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you review them?

The CHAIRMAN. Would you provide us with that information, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Sure, be happy to.

The CHAIRMAN. So you will, like this afternoon, check back with the office and see if you can't tell us when you actually got the transmittal letter and the documents from Mr. Gearan.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I'd be happy to.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you review them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Did I personally review them?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I personally reviewed the documents that we produced. I did not personally review whatever documents were contained in the box of material that was sent.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now there were documents that were produced that were redacted. Who did the redactions?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I reviewed the documents that were redacted in complete form, and others on my staff did; and the redactions were reviewed with Counsel to the President, Jack Quinn.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I just want to put up one of these because I am frankly baffled. It's a part of a legal pad, S20431 through 20433, 3 pages of the package. Do you know whose handwriting this is?

Ms. SHERBURNE. What was the number?

Mr. CHERTOFF. S20431 through 20433.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe this is Mr. Gearan's handwriting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's headed, "Whitewater" and dated 1/7/94. Then there's a redaction until we get to item 4 and item 5, and item 5 by the way indicates—do you know who PB is?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Could it be Paul Begala?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Those are his initials. But I don't know if that's what this refers to.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It talks about, "PB, BL, Waldman to Arkansas to meet with Beverly Bassett. Try to poke holes in their story." Do you know who Mr. Waldman is?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is Mr. Waldman?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Michael Waldman is a White House employee who works in the communications department.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Under Mr. Gearan?

Ms. SHERBURNE. At that time, I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, and to put this in context, I guess, in December 1993, we had that editorial with the President's handwriting next to it regarding Beverly Bassett. Can you remind us, Ms. Sherburne, when did Mr. Fiske get appointed by Ms. Reno?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Fiske was appointed in January, maybe the 12th or sometime in the middle of January, the 20th.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you redact the material down to item No. 4?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I didn't personally, but I reviewed the redaction. I should tell you, Mr. Chertoff, that as has been our practice, if you would like to review the unredacted set to determine and verify our redactions, we're more than happy to sit down with you and show it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. That's very good. I thank you for that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I would like to go to the next page, to S20432. Again, the redactions on this page are redactions which, I guess, Mr. Quinn made the decision, but you were involved in?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, I don't know how we characterize it. I reviewed the redactions and made recommendations, and Mr. Quinn reviewed them, and we agreed on how to proceed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now the copy we have put up, deletes and puts instead of, I guess an expletive, puts in something in its place, so I don't want you to think we've altered this in some nefarious way.

But this discussion also relates to Beverly Bassett and talks about "if we 'blank' this up, we're done. Let's not talk it to death—let's just get it done." Then if you continue to the next page, which is S20433, do you know who "HI" is, who is apparently the person who is speaking?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe that's Harold Ickes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was Mr. Ickes in 1994 a person who you understand to have been responsible for coordinating the Whitewater issue within the White House?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I know he certainly had a role. I don't know in January—I guess this was January 7th. I'm not sure of his role. I believe he had a significant role at that time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you notify him on January 4, 1996, later in the evening about the discovery of the billing records we have been talking about?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember what time of day you notified Mr. Ickes?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I know it was very late at night, after 10 p.m.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you notify him because he was the person to whom you report on Whitewater matters?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I report to both Mr. Ickes and to Jack Quinn, who is Counsel to the President. And I notified Mr. Ickes because yes, I did report to him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Finally, on page S20433, it says next to HI, "We can't send PB, BL, MW." Do you know who MW refers to here?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, but based on the previous page, I would suspect it's Michael Waldman, but I don't know that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Michael Waldman. It says, "It will come out." Then it goes, "Item by item make sure her story is OK." Finally, there's a reference at the bottom that says, "Quinn—arm's length." Do you know, was Mr. Quinn in the White House in 1994?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was his position?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't know if he was Chief of Staff to the Vice President at that time or if he was Counsel to the Vice President.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is Skip?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't know. Mr. Chertoff, I don't—I haven't talked to Mr. Gearan about these notes so I'm not sure what these things mean. I really am reluctant to try and characterize them or identify the handwriting.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Could it be Skip Rutherford?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If you didn't talk to Mr. Gearan, what I guess I'm curious about is how one could redact a document, the entirety of which is labeled "Whitewater," and appears to be several pages of discussion of a meeting on Whitewater, how one could decide what to redact. But you may not be the right person to ask—

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think I am the right person to ask because I supervised the redactions. It's precisely because of your curiosity that we are offering to let you review the unredacted portions.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that's quite fair.

Ms. SHERBURNE. May I just add one other thing about the production and the discovery of those records, since you have raised an issue about having only received them yesterday, because I think it's important, in this particular hearing where we're talking about the sufficiency of document searches, to establish just how it is that we located these documents. I think it is an indication of the diligence with which we've proceeded.

We received documents from Mr. Gearan's lawyer that were copies of records that he believed had been sent by Mr. Gearan to Records Management when Mr. Gearan left the White House last fall. And when we got the copies, we realized that the search we had done of Mr. Gearan's records in Records Management had not turned these documents up. So we began an inquiry about why didn't Records Management have the originals of these documents. That inquiry is what led to discovery of these documents at the Peace Corps where Mr. Gearan had inadvertently taken them. So it was the diligence with which we were trying to comply with your request that led to the production.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But since you raise it, Ms. Sherburne, let me ask you this. You received a request for documents on August 25, 1995, from this Committee that set forth a whole list of things based on the Resolution; right?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When was the first time you circulated a memorandum in the White House asking people to produce responsive files in response to that request or any later request?

Ms. SHERBURNE. We circulated several memoranda along the way. We had, as you know, several communications with you, I believe, mostly with Mr. Giuffra, about the meaning of that request. The request that we received on August 25th, which was approximately, I believe, 3 months after the passage of the Resolution, essentially just lifted the language from the Resolution and put it in the request.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Which is what the subpoena in late October also did; right?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But my question, which you haven't answered yet, is, when did you first circulate any memo around the White House calling for people to produce documents in response to the first request or any later request after August 25th?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe the request for billing records was not sufficiently defined until October 17th and the first request that we circulated that asked specifically for billing records, which by the way the August 25th letter did not ask for, was on October 23rd.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But I still have a question you haven't answered. With respect to anything in that August 25th letter, anything, when was the first time you circulated anything within the White House to request people to collect, produce, and gather documents so they could be produced in response to anything in the August 25th letter?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe it was, although I'll have to verify this from the records, I believe that the first time that we had sufficient clarity—although I would hardly call it that, frankly—to circulate a request to the White House was, I believe, October 4. We had to, on October 6, because on October 5, Mr. Giuffra changed his mind about the scope of the search, we had to send out clarifications for that. That was for a limited part of the August 25th letter.

We had worked with Mr. Giuffra to establish priorities for our search. Mr. Giuffra for quite awhile was unwilling to identify priorities. When he did, we were able to circulate a request White House-wide for the first five items in the August 25th letter as modified by subsequent communications with Mr. Giuffra.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, Ms. Sherburne, I want to make sure we are very clear on this. Between August 25 and October 4, you did not circulate anything in the White House to tell people that they ought to hold on to their Madison—or to files related to Whitewater in any way, or to indicate that they should start the process of going through it to collect it so it could be reviewed?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Before October 4th, we did not have sufficient direction, clarification from this Committee to do that in a responsible way so that we had any assurance that we could possibly get anything that was reliable or that we could certify to you was responsive.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But I'm not even asking you whether before October 4th you could have responded. I'm just asking when you got an August 25th request, which literally took the language of the Resolution and is, in fact, virtually identical to the subpoena we ultimately issued here, am I correct that between August 25 and October 4, you didn't circulate anything around to tell people—because you have raised this issue with Mr. Gearan taking the documents out—do not disturb or remove anything relating to Whitewater? You didn't circulate any memo relating to handling of Whitewater documents in response to our subpoena—our request on August 25 until October 4?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It was not until October 4th that we had sufficient clarification from the Committee of any of its requests that we could put anyone on notice in any meaningful, comprehensible way. I had several meetings with Mr. Giuffra. On September 5, we met and I told him that the August 25th request as presently stated was confusing, that it would be difficult to give direction to White House employees as to what specifically they should search for, and that we needed priorities. We didn't get sufficient clarity until October 4.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I just want to close up on this I—

Ms. SHERBURNE. And that, by the way, was only with respect to A through E in the August 25th letter.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me make an observation, and then give you a letter that was addressed to you on September 6, 1995. Do you have a copy of the September 6th letter from Mr. Giuffra to you?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's the third page of this letter.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I am going to close this off in a second, but this specifically makes a request for any documents or records in any form that reflect, refer, or relate to the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison; right?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe that what this does—we had told Mr. Giuffra that the August 25th letter asked for the following:

Documents related to the policies and practices of the RTC and the Federal banking agencies, as that term is defined in Section 3 of the FDIC Act, regarding the legal representation of such agencies with respect to Madison.

I told Mr. Giuffra that that request, as stated, was something I did not believe White House staff would understand and asked if he would clarify it. He clarified it on September 6th with a description asking for Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison or representation of the RTC with regard to Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you will agree with me that on September 6th it was crystal clear that there was a request for documents that reflect, refer, or relate to the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison; right? It was in the letter—

Ms. SHERBURNE. On September 6th, yes, that was one portion of the request that Mr. Giuffra had responded to for clarity.

Mr. CHERTOFF. By the way, when you collect documents from the White House, you essentially circulate a memo and rely on the individuals to dig into their files and give you the documents?

Ms. SHERBURNE. If the request goes to White House staff, that goes to over 500 people, and yes, we do specifically rely on the individuals who receive the requests to search their files.

Mr. CHERTOFF. After receiving the September 6th letter, when did you first tell people to look for documents relating to the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison?

Ms. SHERBURNE. After receiving the September 6th letter, which also addressed a number of different issues, we asked Mr. Giuffra for priorities, which he finally gave us, and told us to emphasize collection of documents in paragraphs A through E. This was paragraph H of the August 25th letter. So our first request was in October for White House-wide—or a White House-wide search.

With respect to documents requested in paragraphs F through H or through L of the August letter, which this request was also part of, we circulated that request at the point at which—throughout this period we were requesting of Mr. Giuffra a cutoff date. We were negotiating a cutoff date. That issue had not been resolved.

We had informed the Committee that we could not circulate a request to the White House until we had a cutoff date. We proposed cutoff dates. We proposed March 4, as a cutoff date on September 21. On October 17, Mr. Giuffra said that we could have the March 4th cutoff date for this item H.

On October 23, we circulated the first White House-wide request for these records in response to Mr. Giuffra. I wrote a letter to the Committee on October 23, making it perfectly plain that you had now, only now, enabled us to search for these records.

The CHAIRMAN. Before I go to Senator Hatch with a few minutes remaining, let me tell you, Ms. Sherburne, one of the problems is that we do not believe that we have had the kind of cooperation that the Committee should be having. That's based on a number of incidents, not the least of which is this, because I believe that it is disingenuous to say that they could not have begun a document search for, clearly, those relevant matters—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, I didn't say we didn't do a document search. We did do a search. We didn't do a White House-wide search. Excuse me for interrupting, but there's an important distinction there, which I'm happy to explain to you, because we had produced over 7,000 pages by October 23.

The CHAIRMAN. I'll give you an opportunity to do that. It doesn't matter if you produced 7,000 pages, but key documents are withheld or not made available, and let's hope that it is just because it fell through the cracks, and if that's the case, that's fine. I'm not prejudging that.

But one of the things, I have to tell you, that troubles me tremendously and greatly is the remarks that come from the White House spokesperson in requests that are genuinely put forward for E-mail, electronic mail, relative to the matters that we are concerned about.

When we get remarks from an attorney and a spokesperson for the White House that says, let some fat cat of the Chairman's pay for the production of this, that is absolutely—that's not responsible, it's inappropriate, it's not right; and I certainly don't think that you condone that kind of remark.

If we are asking for materials of a private nature that we have no right to seek, I could understand saying you're going well beyond, but when we ask for electronic mail as it relates to those matters that this Committee has been charged with reviewing, then I have to tell you, the response has been absolutely, totally deficient. I heard that a contractor was supposedly hired. Now the contractor hasn't been hired. And we are talking about months and months and months.

Now, you say that you're going to go forward and produce these documents. It is inconceivable to me that—and it looks like, when I hear these remarks that come from the spokesman and the political spin doctors, you're not going to dissuade this Committee from seeking the facts and the truth. That's what adds to the problem.

It is not just one thing, it is a pattern. So I say that we need this, we are entitled to this, and we are going to continue to pursue it. I would hope that we do not have to seek enforcement, but it comes down to that. It's the same matter with the diary. It takes us to a point that we seek almost a Constitutional test, and that's not right.

Now don't forget, this is the White House that says we're going to cooperate, we will make things available. Well, it seems to me that they were looking at a timeline and that if we could get past that timeline we wouldn't have to produce these documents. After all, the Committee's authority is over.

Senator Hatch.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, may I respond to that first, please?

The CHAIRMAN. I will give you an opportunity later, but I know Senator Hatch wants to—I'm just telling you what troubles me, but the only problem is we're on the clock, and I will give you an opportunity to respond.

Senator SIMON. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that you made some allegations, and she should be entitled to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to ask that the clock be shut down and you can respond. Go ahead.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, I have a different view. I have heard your remarks, both outside this Committee and inside this Committee, about White House cooperation, and your dismay with our cooperation and your belief that our cooperation justifies the continuing work of this Committee beyond February. I have—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me ask you. There is the question of the E-mail. Address that, please, and address the response.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I'd be happy to address the question of E-mail.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago did we ask you for the E-mail?

Ms. SHERBURNE. The first request for E-mail that we received was on October 17, and that—

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was August 25, I think.

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I'm sorry.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you didn't know what was in the memo and there was a question of clarity on August, et cetera?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, that simplifies a very complicated, technical problem, and you're misleading people.

The CHAIRMAN. No, I'm not misleading.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, let me explain.

The CHAIRMAN. And I haven't characterized your comments as misleading, nor have I suggested that you have been withholding, but I'm suggesting that when a spokesperson comes out and says, "Let some fat cat pay."

On August 25th, "Accordingly, please provide all records, regardless of format, including, but not limited to, E-mail." Now, my gosh, we talked about this.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, in the summertime when you asked for E-mail related to the Foster inquiry, we all went to school on how to retrieve E-mail, as your staff did. What we explained to your staff at that time was that E-mail in the White House was very difficult to retrieve up through July 1994. And the reason for that was because in the Bush Administration, there had been a decision not to retain E-mail or keep it in a retrievable form. There is a way to do it, but you need to specify the specific weeks and the specific names of the people whose E-mail is to be searched. It's cumbersome, it's expensive, it's time-consuming and we all learned that in the summer.

We worked through, with your staff, the specific requests for the specific time periods and your staff was fully aware on August 25 that a blanket request for E-mail without regard to specific names of people whose E-mail had to be searched was something that was not doable. In September—

Mr. CHERTOFF. We gave you on September 6th, and you've given very lengthy answers, Ms. Sherburne, but the point is this: You asked for clarification, and then interpretation of clarification. Two things should have happened right away. First of all, someone should have made a start on the process. Whatever week it was going to be, whether it was what we said on September 6 when we laid out a number of priorities or not.

But more important than that, and I raise it only because you told us Mr. Gearan inadvertently took things out, and I don't dispute that, I will tell you and I will tell you from my experience in the Department of Justice, when it was common to have Congress request from 1994 U.S. Attorneys or 1993 U.S. Attorneys everything relating to a year's worth of activity.

The very first thing that happens is you give everybody, who is potentially the subject of the subpoena or the request, notification not to disturb anything that might be relevant. And I understand there are issues that have to be hashed out—

The CHAIRMAN. Look, we are now going beyond and intruding on the Minority's time, and I thank them for their patience. But we're trying to give you an opportunity to respond. The fact of the matter is that if we came to an agreement in October, this is November, December, January, February. Where is it and what have you done? Where is the E-mail?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Chairman, as you know, we have started to produce the E-mail. In October, we wrote back to you and said that the request, as finally defined, would cost $125,000, and that we did not have an appropriation in the White House sufficient to cover that, and we asked to engage in discussions with you about how to pay for it.

The CHAIRMAN. That's disingenuous at the least.

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's what you said at the time as well.

The CHAIRMAN. I saw Mark Fabiani's remarks about $250,000 and get a fat cat to pay for it, not $125. So I'm just telling you, this disturbs me. The manner in which that request has been handled was inappropriate.

Ms. SHERBURNE. We did in January—

The CHAIRMAN. I'm not going to argue with you about it. Senator Hatch, in the 2 or 3 minutes that you have.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR ORRIN G. HATCH

Senator HATCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Sherburne, I personally want to apologize to you for an earlier hearing where I—it was an exciting hearing and I certainly didn't mean to offend you in any way so I want you to know that.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Thank you, Senator.

Senator HATCH. I want to thank both of you for being here today. I understand the sensitive positions that you are in, since you both represent the President and the First Lady, and you are now witnesses in this investigation and in the investigation of the Independent Counsel. So I know it is a difficult position, one in which your very representation of the individuals under investigation itself leads you to be part of this as well.

Ms. Sherburne, I would like to ask you questions about the memo the White House provided to us last night. As I understand it, the memo records a meeting that occurred on January 7, 1994, at 5:30 p.m. Only a few days after President Clinton had read an editorial in the newspapers about Beverly Bassett Schaffer and handwrote on it, "will she hold up," and after President Clinton himself had talked to Ms. Schaffer at a basketball game in Arkansas. The timing of this meeting is critical and no one can understate Ms. Schaffer's importance to this investigation, since as the Arkansas State Securities Regulator, she had oversight over much of the activities of Madison Guaranty, and that's important.

Now as I read this memo, which I understand contains the heading "Whitewater," it seems to me to describe a meeting about how to coordinate Beverly Bassett Schaffer's story. My colleagues have and certainly will discuss the import of some of the language in this memo, but let me say that I personally am disturbed a little bit about some of the implications of this language, particularly that someone was going to be sent to meet with Ms. Schaffer and that holes had to be poked in "their story," and that "if we F--- this up, we're done," I wonder what that means.

I don't know whether you know or not, but I wonder what that means. Could it mean that Ms. Schaffer does not get—if she does not get the story right, the President could be done, to put it in a bad light, but nevertheless one that is naturally implied there? The memo then states, "Let's not talk it to death, let's just get it done."

What I'm hoping is that there was no effort on the part of these White House aides either to influence Ms. Schaffer's story or to convince her to change her recollection of important events. Can you enlighten us on that at all?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, I believe that, you know, as I said I didn't take these notes, I wasn't there at the time.

Senator HATCH. Sure. No, I'm not holding you to that.

Ms. SHERBURNE. But I think another possible interpretation of the remarks there is that people were trying to understand what the facts were. Ms. Schaffer obviously knew the facts. I think, as we heard from Mr. Lindsey's testimony, that Ms. Schaffer's husband had said that because she had been harassed in some way during the campaign, that she was unwilling to step forward as a spokesperson. But she still clearly had possession of facts that people needed to confirm, and that "tried to poke holes in their story" may refer to the story or the understanding of the facts that the White House had, and to try and understand what Ms. Schaffer knew. I don't know.

Senator HATCH. You personally do not know what those words mean?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I don't.

Senator HATCH. So they could mean either?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Senator HATCH. The interpretation I have given or the one you just gave?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Senator HATCH. I see. But what is more disturbing to me is the manner in which these documents have been turned over. Now, I appreciate it personally, that you've said that Counsel here can read the redacted portions, but these documents have been under subpoena, at least in our opinion, since the August date in 1995 and just turned over—

Ms. SHERBURNE. The subpoena was in October, Senator.

Senator HATCH. OK. The subpoena was in October, but the documents were requested back then. Now, I'm very concerned about this because we've had criticism because the Chairman has said that we need to extend this Committee, and yet a lot of the what appear to be very important documents haven't been delivered until just recently.

And frankly, as the Chairman has said, we haven't even gotten the E-mail materials and a lot of other materials here and we have what, 2 or 3 weeks to go with the life of this Committee, so I can understand why the Chairman is going to have to move to extend the life of this Committee until we just put these things to bed. I personally hope everything is just fine for you, but the fact is that's why it has to be extended.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, no one is more dismayed than I when these documents turn up late, I can assure you. But we recognize our obligation to quickly turn them over to the Committee as soon as we get them, whenever we get them.

Senator HATCH. But there's also this business of redaction. We have seen that time after time. We have to keep fighting to get the words in the redacted part. Now the memos you have turned over have numerous redactions. If you look at these documents and you look at the pages, there are 3 pages but most of them are redacted. Someone—I think you said you made the redactions, you have—

Ms. SHERBURNE. I supervised it, yes.

Senator HATCH. You supervised it. Well, you've decided to erase about half of each page.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Because we determined that it wasn't responsive to the Committee's subpoena, Senator.

Senator HATCH. You look at the other memo recording a meeting in Mack McLarty's office, all but the first 3 pages have been covered up. And look at this memo on January 5th, out of 5 pages, the first 3½ have been redacted. I take it Counsel can review every one of those?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Absolutely.

Senator HATCH. OK. I think that's good, but on what grounds do you choose to decide what should be redacted and what should not be redacted?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It's responsiveness. If there is a document, this was a legal pad, we go through it and look at what on the document responds to the Committee's request, and if there's material or information there that is plainly unrelated, we redact it.

On something like this, I think we're willing to let Counsel look at it because it does say that the subject of the meeting was Whitewater, and so I think it's perfectly reasonable to infer that the redacted material may be related, so we are happy to have you verify it.

Senator HATCH. All right. Well, what I'm concerned about is that if there is relevancy to that, it then has to be brought out so that the people will know about it. I think I'll let it go at that.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Let me just say, we went considerably over the time. I want to thank the Minority because we were able to keep things in some type of order. I am going to ask how much we went over and that an equal amount of time be given to the Minority. Again, I thank the Minority.

Senator Sarbanes.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm glad this issue has come up, because I think it needs some public airing, and I want to pursue it now with Ms. Sherburne.

The Minority did not sign the August 25th request. The reason we did not sign it is that we viewed it as being overly broad, so much so that it, in fact, would impede getting information rather than contribute to getting information.

Now, people have to judge that for themselves, and to really understand this, one needs to go through each stage of it, the nature of the requests that were being made and the response that was being offered by the White House. In fact, there was an extended correspondence. Is that not the case, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It fills two 3-inch, 3-ring binders, since the 25th of August.

Senator SARBANES. That's right. Now subsequent to August 25, an effort was made to try to get this into some form that would be reasonable, rational, and that could be responded to; correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, let me just give you an example of the problem. In fact, we said when we filed our report in the Senate a few weeks ago:

The Majority's report's description of the obstacles faced by the Committee in obtaining documents and testimony from the White House does not allow for the breadth and complexity of the Committee's various document requests. In a number of instances, the White House experienced difficulties in complying with document requests because some of the Majority's requests were extremely broad and burdensome.

A good example of this problem is the document requests the Majority sent to the White House in September. That's the letter that was referred to you by the Majority here this morning. If you could turn to it, that's the September 6th letter to you from Mr. Giuffra. Do you have that in front of you?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I do.

Senator SARBANES. I direct your attention to the second page of that, paragraph "d," and let me just quote that paragraph, because we cited this as a good example of this problem of extremely broad and burdensome requests. Paragraph d said: "Any communication, contact or meeting between January 20, 1993 and August 5, 1994." That was a period of 18½ months. "Any communication, contact or meeting between January 20, 1993 and August 5, 1994, including, but not limited to, all records of telephone conversations or wire communications, relating to any subject, between"—the Clintons or any present or former member of the White House staff. How many people might that involve, any present or former member of the White House staff?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't know how many former members there would have been at that time. We did not seek to reduce it to a number but it would certainly, I assume, have been dozens, if not hundreds.

Senator SARBANES. All right. On the one hand, this was any communication whatever between this large group. And in subparagraph "ii," it then lists approximately 50 people; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, that is correct.

Senator SARBANES. Including any present or former employee of the RTC. How many people could that be, any present or former employee of the RTC?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I have no idea.

Senator SARBANES. Well, literally thousands if you take it at its face value. Would that not be the case?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe so.

Senator SARBANES. Then it names specific people. Then we get any present or former employee of Frost & Company—of course, I don't know how many people that might be. Then we list other specific people, any present or former employee of Maple Creek Farms, and so forth and so forth.

Now, we pointed out in our report, we said a good example of this problem is a document request the Majority sent to the White House in September calling for the production of, among other things, any record of any communications, contacts, or meetings over an 18-month period between anyone in the White House—actually should have said "or formerly in the White House"—on the one hand and anyone on a list of approximately 50 people, on any subject matter whatsoever. Now if people would just stop and think about that for a moment, that's an extraordinarily, extremely broad and onerous request.

Ultimately this request was narrowed down, was it not?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, it was.

Senator SARBANES. And of course, in the meantime it slowed up the document production. Now when you finally began responding to the October 17th subpoena, the thrust of that subpoena had been narrowed in accordance with a conversation, so you weren't confronted with providing this kind of information; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, I think that nothing had been narrowed from the August 25. I think these 56 names and these present and former employees was actually quite an expansion from the August 25th request, and that was retained as an expansion, even though when it was finally narrowed, it still had been expanded beyond the August 25th request.

Senator SARBANES. But this is what you were encountering all along, was it not?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's absolutely right, Senator.

Senator SARBANES. Well, I think that it's very important to make that point. In the meantime you were producing documents, were you not?

Ms. SHERBURNE. We produced—by the time we received the subpoena, I believe we had produced about 8,000 pages of documents. What we had done, because we knew, as the Chairman had said, that there were Whitewater related records, records responsive to the August 25th request, we knew we had them in the White House. We knew that they had been collected from prior productions, that they had been collected by people who were working on the issue, and the repository of those various collections was in the Counsel's Office.

So from August 25th forward, we undertook to identify those records that we had already collected in our possession that were undoubtedly, in our view, going to be the best source of material in response to the subpoena, the most voluminous source of material responsive to the subpoena. So we began the search through that material immediately and began producing documents responsive to that material, I believe in the middle of September, documents responsive to those requests in the middle of September.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now with respect to the E-mail request, those requests started out broad, then they narrowed, and then they expanded again; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct. They became sufficiently defined so we could work with them on October 17th. And then they expanded by 50 percent in early January, and then contracted again through a meeting that we had in the middle of January, and then expanded again last week.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And last week, how did they expand again?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Last week, we got a request for 3 more weeks of E-mail during the July 20th to August 15th time period. And that request we met, I believe in the middle of January, certainly after the billing records had been produced, and identified the 9 weeks that the Committee wanted of E-mail. This was it. This is what the Committee wanted, subject of course to further discovery of information that would require an expansion of the request. Of course at that time the billing records had been presented to the Committee, but then over the weekend, or maybe it was last Friday, we got an expanded request or modified that added those 3 weeks of E-mail related to the discovery of the billing records.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In connection with the request for E-mails and the explanation as to why it is difficult to produce E-mails, it was correct, was it not, that a procedure was reinstituted by the Clinton Administration to make the E-mail discovery more accessible?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So at a particular point during the Clinton Administration, we don't have, or you don't have the same problems that you have described in producing E-mails; and those requests have been met, have they not?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now during the summer hearings, there was a request for the deleted E-mails from two secretaries in the White House Counsel's Office, I believe Ms. Tripp and Ms. Gorham. Do you recall that?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I do.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Those were secretaries who sat across the way from each other, and they were typing out messages to each other on a couple of days right after Mr. Foster's death. There was a request to undelete those E-mails and to find them and to bring them to this Committee. How much did it cost the White House to recover those E-mails?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe it cost in the neighborhood of $30,000.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Just for that group of E-mails?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct. That was for a 2-week period.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you have indicated that the reason why this is so onerous is because of a procedure put into effect during the Bush Administration that made it extremely difficult from a technological standpoint to recover E-mails; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yet that process has been ongoing. And to some extent, some of those E-mails were recovered during the Iran-Contra investigation?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe that's right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What is the present estimate as to the cost of the recovery of E-mails requested by this Committee, apart from the most recent expansion of that request?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, we determined that our only option was to contract with an outside source and get contract workers to assist our technical people in this process. By doing that, although it's difficult to say, some of this technology is being invented as they do it—I believe that the estimates that we have right now is that the cost is somewhere between $130,000 and $180,000 to retrieve the E-mail that the Committee has requested.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now certainly if the remark that the Chairman had referred to was indeed made by someone at the White House, it's my view that would have been most inappropriate. But the fact of your communication with this Committee about the cost of the recovery process for these E-mails, and, therefore, the need to be precise about what the Committee needed in order to be responsive and to maintain the minimum amount of cost to comply with us, is indeed reflected in correspondence and meetings that you have had with this Committee; is that not so?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, that's correct. I would like to note, I believe it was in September that the Committee in correspondence—on, I believe, September 21—acknowledged that E-mail had still been not sufficiently defined and that we needed to still work together on that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Then there was a narrowing; and as you say a most recent, again, expansion.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes. I would also like to add that the remark the Chairman referred to, I too regarded as inappropriate, and that was communicated to the spokesperson who made it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Indeed, while we are discussing such things, Senator Hatch, as you know, addressed the issue today with you, but privately, he had conveyed a similar sentiment through me to you about the earlier remarks that had been made.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, he did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So this is not something that has been left unanswered. With respect to the question that Senator Hatch posed earlier, I would like to assure him that in the past, where issues of redactions have come before us, I can assure Senator Hatch that both Mr. Chertoff and I have worked with White House Counsel to review all redactions that have been previously made about which there was any question so that we could assure ourselves that the redactions were made in good faith. And, indeed, I believe Mr. Chertoff will join me in saying that there has been no occasion since this Committee has been in existence where a redaction has been made and we have concluded that it has been made in bad faith. There have been occasions where we have asked for additional material to be produced and you have done so; correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I never questioned Ms. Sherburne's good faith and I want to go on the record for that. I know she has a difficult job to do.

Senator HATCH. I appreciate you making those remarks, Mr. Ben-Veniste. It means a lot to me. You also, Ms. Sherburne.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If we may turn to what I have regarded as the focus of today's hearing, which is the discovery of the billing records on January 4, 1996. You, Mr. Kendall, were the first, so far as you know, to have received word from Carolyn Huber that records had been found by her; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Could you tell us in your own words what you recall of that event?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes. I was at a meeting at the White House and was handed a note by an Usher, asking me to please see Ms. Huber before I left the White House that day. I went to Ms. Huber's office in the East Wing at about 12:45 p.m. on Thursday, January 4, 1996. I went into Ms. Huber's office. She said to me, David, I have some documents for you, and handed me the sheaf of documents, a copy of which I have before me now.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What occurred next?

Mr. KENDALL. I examined the documents. I asked her where these had come from. She indicated that they had come from a box in her office there that, apparently she had had a table moved out that morning and had discovered or focused on the documents at that point.

She appeared to me somewhat nervous, agitated, flustered. She said do you think I have done the right thing, and I thought I had to tell you. I said absolutely, you've done the right thing.

I examined the documents. She——

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Excuse me, Mr. Kendall. When she asked you whether she had done the right thing, was she referring to the fact that she had called you to tell you that she had realized that she was in possession of these records?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I think—that was my interpretation. And I reassured her, I said—we looked at the documents. She had been office manager of the Rose Law Firm and was familiar with Rose Law Firm documents. She indicated that the handwriting in red appeared to her to be Mr. Vince Foster's handwriting.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So I take it you began to examine the documents with Ms. Huber?

Mr. KENDALL. I did. And I told Ms. Huber that I thought we would immediately produce the documents. I tried to reassure her that she had, in fact, done the right thing. I said I thought the documents would indeed be helpful to us. I advised her that she ought to call her attorney, Mr. Schuelke, and safeguard the documents, that I would contact White House Counsel's Office, and that we would have a meeting at a later point.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And you did, in fact, contact the White House Counsel, Ms. Sherburne?

Mr. KENDALL. I did, later that afternoon.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you reconvene to meet?

Mr. KENDALL. We did. We, as I recall, had a meeting set for 4:45 p.m. I think we all got there somewhat later than that, it was I think after 5 p.m. Mr. Schuelke and I and Ms. Sherburne met with Ms. Huber in her office.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What was the discussion at that time?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, the discussion again was about what the records were, where had they been, and what some of the writings on them indicated.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Sherburne, you were present at the meeting, throughout this meeting?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What do you recall Ms. Huber saying about how the records had been located by her?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I recall Ms. Huber as being—she said a number of different things that were inconsistent. She was flustered, she was upset, her hands were shaking. She said that she had brought the documents over from the residence at some earlier point. She said she thought it was maybe 3 months ago. A little while later in the conversation, she referred to bringing them over 10 months ago. She was very confused about the timing.

She also said that—we asked her where she had found the records in the White House. She said they were on the third floor, and she identified the Book Room. I don't know that she used the term "Book Room," but that was what she was describing.

She was unclear about where she had found them. I had the impression, from the various things she said, that they were on top of something, not inside of a drawer or a box, but she was unclear whether she found them on a table or a shelf or—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, you are referring to when she initially saw the records before she took them to her office?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. All right. So she explained to you a chronology of events from the time she first came into possession of them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What was that chronology?

Ms. SHERBURNE. The chronology was that at some earlier point, what appeared to be in her mind somewhere between 3 and 10 months prior to January 4th, she had been in the Book Room in the residence, which is on the third floor, and that she had identified these documents when she was putting a box together or a couple of boxes together of material that she was going to move to her East Wing office, and sort out later and decide what to do with.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So although she was unclear about the date when she initially saw the documents, she was clear that they were discovered by her in the Book Room and in the open; correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Kendall, is that your recollection?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, it is. Her stories, though, were extremely vague. At one point I recall her indicating that when she had first seen the records, they appeared to her to be Rose Law Firm billing records. But then again at another point, I understood her to say she had first seen these documents and just considered them to be a sheaf of documents.

We really decided early on that Mr. Schuelke, at a later point alone with her, should examine her about the exact way in which she found the documents, that that would be the most appropriate way to proceed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So at some point, you all agreed that further questioning of Ms. Huber would be inappropriate at that time and left it to Mr. Schuelke to go back over the details with her; correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did either of you take any contemporaneous notes of your conversation with Ms. Huber?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I did not.

Mr. KENDALL. Nor did I.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now the three of you are in the area of Ms. Huber's office and you have heard this recitation by Ms. Huber about her initial discovery of the records and her transportation of them to the Executive Office Building office that she maintained. What happened next?

Mr. KENDALL. We decided that we had to review the documents more carefully so we moved to an office down the hall, which was a little bit bigger than Ms. Huber's office. Ms. Huber was able then to sit at a desk and review the documents with us page by page, as the three of us stood around her and could observe each page.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What did you learn as a result of that review with Ms. Huber?

Mr. KENDALL. That each of these pages did appear to in some way reflect law firm records of the billing for the Madison Guaranty representation in the 1985-86 period. There was a little work in 1987. And the top document appeared to be a client billing and payment history, which had a run date of February 12, 1992. She also identified various handwriting in the documents. She also was able to answer questions about certain accounting practices at the Rose Law Firm.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So now what time did this review conclude, approximately?

Mr. KENDALL. My best estimate is that it probably concluded—it lasted from 30 to 45 minutes, probably concluded around 6:30.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What did you do next?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, we had had a discussion during this review about how to copy, how to produce the documents, what we needed to do after we ascertained that they were indeed producible—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When you say they were producible, you mean that your review of the records with Ms. Huber reflected clearly, by that point, that they were called for by certain requests that were already in existence by various agencies of the Government?

Mr. KENDALL. That is correct. And at the end of that page-by-page review, we concluded that the documents were. We had had a discussion—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Probably at the beginning of the review, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, it wasn't clear, Mr. Ben-Veniste, what all these documents were. Certainly the top page would have been producible, but there really was a need to examine the documents.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I don't mean to quibble with you. So you go through them, it's 6:30 p.m. and you make a determination to photocopy the documents?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now at that point or theretofore, did you have any conversation about whether you ought to phone Independent Counsel or any other agency that had requested the documents?

Mr. KENDALL. We had had a discussion, both during the review and then after the review was completed, in which we had jointly decided that we needed to produce the documents as quickly as possible, we needed to keep a copy, and we should get this done as quickly as possible.

Because some of the comments, though, were in color—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You mean the handwriting on the documents?

Mr. KENDALL. The handwritten comments and the Post-its, we felt that it was necessary, because there were more agencies than one that we were going to be producing to, that we obtain a color photocopy. Ms. Huber and Ms. Sherburne set out at the end of our review process to try and locate, in the White House, a color photocopier.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I take it you were able to do so and then proceeded to photocopy the documents?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct. A color copier was located in the New Executive Office Building, and between about 7 and 10 p.m. we were able to make two copies. It was a very slow, slow process.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And during that period of time, was Ms. Huber present?

Mr. KENDALL. She was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. During the photocopying process?

Mr. KENDALL. She was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And by the time you had made the two copies, you say it was about 10 in the evening?

Mr. KENDALL. That's my recollection.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What occurred next?

Mr. KENDALL. I took the original of the documents and one color copy with me back to my law firm. I left at the White House with Ms. Sherburne the other color copy. And then at my law firm, we produced that night and the next morning copies for the various agencies from the copy that we had made the night before.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you ask questions at that time of Ms. Huber as to where she thought the documents had originated, beyond the point of her finding them in the Book Room at some point some months ago, be it 10 or 3 or however many?

Mr. KENDALL. No. I think that once we left her office in the East Wing, there was an agreement that Mr. Schuelke, her own lawyer, would—when she was perhaps more rested, would examine her in detail as to what she could recall about the circumstances of her discovery of the documents.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Sherburne, do you have anything to add about conversations that occurred with Ms. Huber or others up to the point that Mr. Kendall has taken us, at 10 in the evening?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, I believe he has covered most of it in a general way.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any specifics to add?

Ms. SHERBURNE. The only specifics that I have to add is that we did have an extended discussion in the hallway about who should produce the records, whether Carolyn should produce them, through Mr. Schuelke, whether the White House should produce them, or whether Mr. Kendall should produce them. And we also discussed whether or not the handling of the records themselves at some point might interfere with an interest in fingerprinting the records, and if that should affect how we proceeded. We talked about those two issues before proceeding to do the copying.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What did you conclude?

Ms. SHERBURNE. We concluded that the records would be produced by Mr. Kendall, and we concluded that we would proceed to copy the records so that they could be produced as promptly as possible to all the entities that had subpoenaed them.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who took possession of the original document that Ms. Huber had located?

Ms. SHERBURNE. After the copying?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Kendall did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who took possession of the copies?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Kendall took 1 copy and I retained a copy.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now did there come a time when the President was notified of the fact that the records had been found?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you participate in that?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I did.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Approximately when was that?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That was the morning of January 5th.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The next morning?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Approximately what time was that?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I am not sure what time it was. I believe it was probably in the morning before noon, and probably somewhere between 10 and 12.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who was present at that time?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It was myself, the President, and Mr. Ickes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was there a time when the First Lady, Mrs. Clinton, was notified that the documents had been located?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe Mr. Kendall notified her.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. Without getting into specifics, I drafted a press release later that day, indicating that she had learned of the documents that day—excuse me, January 5th.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And did there come a time when any agency of Government apart from the White House was notified? Obviously there did.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that on January 5th?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Who was notified?

Ms. SHERBURNE. The first notification was made in a conversation that Mr. Kendall and I had with Mr. John Bates, who is the Deputy Independent Counsel.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the Independent Counsel's Office was notified, and, obviously, this Committee was notified on that day as well, and indeed received a copy of the billing records on January 5th; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the determination was made that—

Mr. KENDALL. Excuse me, Mr. Ben-Veniste, the RTC/FDIC was notified, and the House Banking Committee was also notified.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you. And a release of information was made regarding the discovery of the billing records and the fact that they had been turned over; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct. They were publicly released later that afternoon, Friday, January 5, about 6 p.m., as I recall.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did there come a time the determination that they would be released to the Committee the following day was made by you in consultation with each other, I take it, on January 4th; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There was no discussion between you about doing anything other than turning those papers over on the following day; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me turn to the question of the Gearan records which were transmitted along with a cover letter. Incidentally, the cover letter that we received last evening reflected that the process of recovering the White House E-mails has been underway and that the first review reflects that nothing responsive to the scope of our request has been found; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct. We have completed the first of the 9 weeks of the request and there was nothing in the first weeks that was requested that's responsive in any way.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now with respect to the notes of Mr. Gearan which were turned over to the Committee last evening, let me ask you, Ms. Sherburne, to explain how it was that those notes were not produced earlier. What is your understanding of where those notes were located and the circumstances under which you were able to locate them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. My understanding is that Mr. Gearan had kept a box of documents related to—that he maintained that he had frozen, if you will, all of his records that were arguably related in any way to any of the ongoing investigations, whether it's this one or the Travel Office or anything else. And in this box, from this box, his lawyer had copies of some of this material.

We had received a document request for subpoena from the Independent Counsel that required a research of Mr. Gearan's records that I understand his counsel undertook from the set that he had, and he had produced copies to us as a result. It was related to that subpoena, and that was what created a concern that we didn't have the originals because these documents should have turned up in our earlier search of these records that Mr. Gearan sent to documents management.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So if I understand you, you now had a clue that led you to believe that further inquiry would be necessary or would be warranted to determine whether additional records responsive to our requests and the requests of others were in existence somewhere?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And then you pursued those leads and what occurred?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, we discovered that the Office of Records Management said that they didn't have the originals. And so we contacted Mr. Gearan's attorney and told him that and asked him if he could initiate some sort of verification of where those originals may have gone, if they were lost somewhere in the bowels of Records Management or if Mr. Gearan had made a mistake. It was following that inquiry that we learned that in fact the records, the box, had been mistakenly included with other material that Mr. Gearan took with him to the Peace Corps.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now can you say how many hours have been devoted by you and your staff to complying with the requests that have been made by this Committee?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It's thousands of hours.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thousands?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Thousands.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Everytime a request goes to the White House staff for one or another or subsequent requests for documents or information, do you have any idea of how many hours are involved in those people complying with your requests to search?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I know that it's obviously different for different people. There are some people who, for example, have to review phone messages repeatedly. Each request always asks for phone messages that identify communications with a particular person or persons. And going through 2 or 3 years' worth of phone messages to see if there are any responsive records has been incredibly time-consuming for a number of senior White House staff who receive hundreds and hundreds of phone calls. And that process has to be repeated over and over again, searching for files of communications with people that are unrelated to Whitewater or Madison; we have gotten requests for meetings related to any subject.

So to search—when you don't have a particular Whitewater file or Madison file or a press file that you look at. You have to search through all of your records to identify meetings that may have occurred with any of the individuals specified in the request.

It's different for different people. I'm sure there's some segment of the White House staff that knows that they have never had any connection with these activities and can dismiss it rather simply without checking through every single piece of paper.

That was not true in this request for communications with 56 individuals on any subject. That was one where we had a lot of people who thought at one time or another they may have had some communication with any one of these 56 individuals, and they did have to go through their records. And that one was enormously time-consuming, but to put a number on it, a number of hours is very difficult. It's substantial.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Ms. Sherburne.

Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shelby.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR RICHARD C. SHELBY

Senator SHELBY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

You are the Counsel for the White House, is that correct, to the President?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Special Counsel, that's correct.

Senator SHELBY. You are an attorney, is that also correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. Mr. Kendall, you are a private practicing attorney but you are Counsel to the President and Mrs. Clinton in a private way?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. You do not work for the U.S. Government?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not.

Senator SHELBY. On this occasion when Ms. Huber notified you that she had recently discovered or found these missing records, billing records, did you first, Ms. Sherburne, call Mr. Kendall? Was that the first person you called?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Actually, Senator, Mr. Kendall called me.

Senator SHELBY. He called you up?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. Ms. Huber called Mr. Kendall, and Mr. Kendall called you as Counsel; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's the sequence, yes.

Senator SHELBY. Now both of you people are attorneys. Do you believe that protecting the integrity of a possible piece of evidence is important?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Certainly.

Senator SHELBY. Do you, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. Certainly.

Senator SHELBY. In this case these missing records that had been under subpoena by the Independent Counsel, I understand, and a request by this Committee, when you found out, both of you, that they had been so-called discovered, I believe you used the term, you were dismayed; is that right, Ms. Sherburne, your term?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think I was referring to the Gearan notes, but I was certainly dismayed at this as well.

Senator SHELBY. What about you, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. I think my first reaction was surprise.

Senator SHELBY. Surprise?

Mr. KENDALL. But then also as I indicated to Ms. Huber, I was pleased by their discovery because I thought they would be quite helpful, and I think, properly understood, they are.

Senator SHELBY. But you realize that those records were being sought by the Independent Counsel, Mr. Starr; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. I did.

Senator SHELBY. Why, then, sir, or to both of you, when you knew what these records were, why didn't you call Mr. Starr that afternoon on the 4th?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, we called him very quickly the next day.

Senator SHELBY. I know that. But why didn't you call him that day?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, for one thing, I wanted to meet with the White House Counsel's Office, to meet with Ms. Huber's lawyer and to determine exactly what the documents were, whether they were indeed producible. We owed them, Senator Shelby, not only to the Independent Counsel but also to other investigative entities.

Senator SHELBY. But you saw these records, you saw handwriting on the records, some of it in red ink?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. Which supposedly was Vince Foster's notes and others. So you had reason to believe that they were genuine billing records, did you not?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I didn't know until we had really scrutinized them, but certainly, I thought when I first saw them that's what they appeared to be. They appeared to be copies, excuse me. They were not the originals. They were photocopies of billing records.

Senator SHELBY. But they had original writings on them, did they not?

Mr. KENDALL. They did.

Senator SHELBY. Ms. Sherburne, did you raise the issue in a little conference with Mr. Kendall and the other gentleman about protecting the integrity of these records; in other words, what should be the proper procedure to copy these records because when you copy records, other people handle them, do they not?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. When you handle them, you handle them with your hands and different people handle them and there are different prints on them; correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Senator SHELBY. Was that your first thought when you said I'll raise the issue of protecting the integrity of the records?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe what I realized when we were sitting there looking through these records that I thought that before we proceeded much farther, we ought at least to vet the question, should we continue to handle these records, should they be produced immediately, should—

Senator SHELBY. Who did you vet or discuss this with besides Mr. Kendall?

Ms. SHERBURNE. And Mr. Schuelke.

Senator SHELBY. Mr. Schuelke was Ms. Huber's attorney—

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. —that had been called in. But no one else, just the three of you?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. What did Mr. Kendall say to you when you raised the question of protecting the integrity of the records; in other words, make sure if there were fingerprints on there, and obviously or more than likely there was somebody's fingerprints that the Independent Counsel or the FBI, whoever did it, had a chance to lift these fingerprints to see who had handled these records?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't remember exactly who said what. I know we talked about the issue and—

Senator SHELBY. But you were the one who raised the issue?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, sir.

Senator SHELBY. You raised the issue?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, I did. I'm not sure that I—I don't believe I used the words "protecting the integrity." I think I just talked about whether we ought to proceed to handle these documents given that there may be some investigative interest at some point.

Senator SHELBY. Can I just refresh an answer. This is February 6, 1996. Your testimony on deposition. You said, "Well, I"—

Senator SARBANES. What page is this, Senator?

Senator SHELBY. This is on pages 15 to 20. It's on page 18. You want to look at your record? You go ahead with your Counsel. Do you want me to go ahead, Ms. Sherburne? Maybe you can follow me here.

Question: You mentioned there was discussion of doing something prior to copying the records. Do you recall precisely what that something would be?

Answer: Well, I asked the question whether these records were records that there may be some interest in fingerprinting at some point, and should we, you know, reserve on copying or handling them. And that was the question that we discussed and then decided that the competing demands for these documents, as well as the obligation to the clients to analyze them, were compelling and we ought to get them copied . . .

They were compelling to you—

Ms. SHERBURNE. "Copied promptly and turn them over as quickly as possible to the Independent Counsel."

Senator SHELBY. But again, did you think about calling Mr. Starr or someone else who was trying to find these records to protect the integrity of them in the ongoing investigation?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No.

Senator SHELBY. You raised the question, but were you talked out of it by Mr. Kendall and the other—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Oh, no, no. We discussed it. I think we all—

Senator SHELBY. You discussed it. You brought up the question, which was a good question, protecting the integrity of these records for possible fingerprints. Obviously, they talked you out of it. What was said?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't remember using the words "protecting the integrity" unless you found them somewhere in my deposition. But I raised the question. I said let's discuss this before we proceed, and the three of us proceeded to discuss it. I listened to what the two of them said. I contributed to the conversation. I knew Mr. Schuelke to be a former prosecutor. I knew that he had been retained by the Senate for an ethics inquiry. I knew he was someone who had sufficient—extensive experience. So did Mr. Kendall. I thought that the three of us by talking about it together could examine the various arguments for proceeding or not proceeding, which is what we did.

Senator SHELBY. Did you think about or did Mr. Kendall—I'll ask both of you—did you think about calling Mr. Starr, the Independent Counsel, on such a discovery and say look, we've got something here that you've been after. We don't want to touch it because we could destroy some evidence, perhaps? Did you think about calling him and if you did, why did you dismiss it? Was it competing interests, your own? Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, Senator Shelby, I did not regard this as a forensic matter. It was clear we were going to talk to the Independent Counsel. We also had an obligation—

Senator SHELBY. Excuse me a second, if you could. You didn't regard this as a forensic matter, yet this was under subpoena and was long sought after for many months. Were you the only one that didn't regard this as a forensic matter as an important matter, as a possible link? Go ahead.

Mr. KENDALL. I think we were jointly of the view that this was not a forensic matter. I think, as I said earlier, these billing records are quite helpful. They are not a smoking gun kind of evidence.

Senator SHELBY. That's not the question, sir.

Mr. KENDALL. Well, it goes into my mind—

Senator SHELBY. Did you help contaminate this evidence by copying and going through the copying process and going through many hands when the best thing to have done was to call the Independent Counsel and say look, we've got some records here you need, we're not going to touch them, let you come and see—make us copies. Wouldn't that have been a better approach?

Mr. KENDALL. No, it would not have been, Senator Shelby.

Senator SHELBY. Why?

Mr. KENDALL. Because we had a number of competing obligations—let me finish my answer.

Senator SHELBY. Let me ask this first. Your conflicting obligation was representing your client in this case rather than trying to let the Independent Counsel do their work with untainted evidence?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, my responsibility was to represent my clients within the bounds of the law. I think that I discharged that responsibility here. We had to examine the documents. We had to get them copied for other agencies. When I said a moment ago that the documents were helpful, that really was an important consideration and whether this was a forensic matter.

We had been looking for these documents. We're happy to have found them, and believed that they would be helpful when we released them. And as I say, properly understood, they are helpful. These were not something that people would have taken any pains to hide. Moreover, it was, we thought that we could get from Ms. Huber, when she was examined by her lawyer, a chain of custody which would explain their appearance.

Senator SHELBY. Ms. Sherburne, my time is up, but why did you raise the possibility of not copying these documents unless you thought it would contaminate them if they were copied and handled by other people?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I raised the question because I recognized that these documents and that this whole event was one that would be of significant investigative interest. I fully expected that we would be here talking about our conduct, and I wanted to make sure that we had reviewed all possibilities and were conducting ourselves with our eyes open and making good judgments that we had discussed with one another carefully before we proceeded. I thought that the consideration of the handling of these documents was one that we ought to talk about before we proceeded, and we did.

Senator SHELBY. But the term "competing interest" was used, I believe, by you—competing demands for these documents?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SHELBY. Demands by the Independent Counsel who was doing his work and demands by Mr. Kendall and others—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Oh, no, sir.

Senator SHELBY. What were you referring to?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Competing demands would have been the subpoena from this Committee. That's what I meant by that. We had subpoenas from a number of different entities, and which one were we going to choose? Was it the Independent Counsel? Was it this Committee? How did we resolve that and how did we protect ourselves from a judgment by this Committee that somehow we had failed in our obligations to this Committee? That was certainly foremost in my mind having worked months and months and months to cooperate with the requests of this Committee. That was the competing demand.

I also recognized the obligation that Mr. Kendall principally had to his clients to review these records carefully as well. But the competing demands that I was thinking about were the expectations and the obligations that we had to this Committee.

Senator SHELBY. But you realize that the Independent Counsel has copying machines just like you do at the White House. They had the capacity to copy?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Presumably they do.

Senator SHELBY. Mr. Chairman, I know my time is up but just for the witness, I want to go back over this one question, at least her answer to it.

The CHAIRMAN. And I will see, as we did previously, that we will give to the—

Senator SHELBY. I will be short.

The CHAIRMAN. —Minority the additional time.

Senator SHELBY. You were asked:

Question: Ms. Sherburne, you mentioned there was a discussion of doing something prior to copying the records. Do you recall precisely what that something would be?

Answer: Well, I asked the question whether these records were records that there may be some interest in fingerprinting at some point, and should we, you know, reserve on copying or handling them. And that was the question that we discussed and then decided that the competing demands for these documents, as well as the obligation to the clients to analyze them, were compelling and we ought to get them copied.

Ms. SHERBURNE. You don't like to add that last part, "copied promptly and turn them over as quickly as possible to the Independent Counsel."

Senator SHELBY. That's right. Well, that was in there, too, "and turn them over to the Independent Counsel."

Senator SARBANES. It got left out the last time as well.

Senator SHELBY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SIMON. Yes. If I may—

The CHAIRMAN. I just want to make note of this, we will add four additional minutes to—the last time we went over, we added additional time, just so that my colleagues know we're not looking to infringe but looking to complete areas if we possibly can.

Yes, Senator Simon.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL SIMON

Senator SIMON. Mr. Chairman, if I may make a few general observations before I ask a few questions here. I have said two or three times on the Floor of the Senate that one of the changes in my 22 years here is that we have become increasingly and excessively partisan, and I have made clear that both political parties share the responsibility for that. I think it has not served either party well. I don't think it has served the country well.

I cast one of three votes against creating this Select Committee, the other two were Senator John Glenn and Senator Jeff Binghanton, neither of whom is regarded, I think, by anyone as excessively partisan. My concern was that this thing is going to be spilling over into politics, that we created the Office of the Independent Counsel so that we could remove this kind of thing from the political arena. I think I can safely assure these two witnesses—I say this on the basis not from any assurance or discussion with anyone else in the Committee, I can assure these two witnesses and all the other witnesses that after November 5th of this year, they will not be asked to testify before this Committee or any committee about this once we have elected a President.

First, I am concerned about taking a huge amount of time on these matters, and I know in this morning's Congressional Daily, Mr. Chairman, the heading is "Confirmation Hearings Backed Up in Senate Bank Panel," suggesting the Banking Committee isn't doing some of the things it should be doing because of these hearings. I don't know whether that story is accurate or not accurate. Mr. Chairman, you know much more about that than I do.

Second, I want to have a word of commendation for those reporters out there. I'm a journalist by background. They deserve medals. They have to strain to get stories out of minutia. The lead sentence almost every day ought to be "Another Dull Nonproductive Day Took Place Today in the Whitewater Hearings," but obviously the editors would not like hearing that lead story day after day, so something else has to be done.

Third, we've talked about the cost to the U.S. Government now in excess of $30 million between the Special Counsel and our Committees. Those aren't the only costs. I see today eight lawyers sitting behind the two witnesses. They look to me like they're more than $25-an-hour lawyers. We're hauling in secretaries, people who are just frightened by appearing before a Senate Committee and on television and everything, and I think we have to ask ourselves what is the purpose of all of this, and if the purpose is to simply gain some political ground, then I think we have done a disservice to the process.

And let me refer again back to the stories, and tell people who are reading these stories that if they really want interesting reading, I suggest they read Al D'Amato's autobiography——

The CHAIRMAN. It's a good one.

[Laughter.]

Senator SIMON. It is excellent reading and I recommend it.

The CHAIRMAN. I get no royalties. They all go to my high school.

Senator SIMON. I'd even mention the name of it, but I forget.

The CHAIRMAN. Power, Pasta & Politics.

Senator SIMON. The Chairman did not ask me to ask him, I want you to know.

Let me ask this, because I think it's very pertinent of the two witnesses. First of all, by way of background, the fingerprinting and so forth becomes less important when you realize there is nothing in those documents that does not confirm what has already been said. So there's nothing sensational there. But I think there is one key question, and that is, when you finish copying—this was at 10 or roughly 10—you first found out, Mr. Kendall about 12:45 p.m. on January 4th?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Senator SIMON. Did either of you, Mr. Kendall or Ms. Sherburne, have any conversation with the President or Mrs. Clinton in which either suggested that there should be any delay in notifying this Committee, Special Counsel, and the others about providing the information to them?

Mr. KENDALL. Senator Simon, without getting into the content of any communications, I did not speak to the President between 12:45 Friday and the time the documents were turned over. I did not speak with Mrs. Clinton at all on that Thursday, January 4th. I did have a conversation with her that morning very shortly before the documents were turned over.

Senator SIMON. And without asking you to violate your lawyer-client privilege, did Mrs. Clinton suggest to you that there should be a delay in turning those documents over?

Mr. KENDALL. Senator, I can say that the documents were turned over very speedily after that conversation, and that she has herself expressed in her various news interviews that that was the right thing to do.

Senator SIMON. Ms. Sherburne, was there any communication to you by either the President or Mrs. Clinton suggesting that there should be a delay, or any emissary of either of them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Absolutely not.

Senator SIMON. I have no further questions, Mr. Chairman. I turn the balance of my time over to our Counsel.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Senator Simon.

Let me pursue two areas that were raised, the first of which is the issue of competing demands, so that we have with clarity what you meant by that, Ms. Sherburne. I understood your testimony to mean that you understood that this Committee, the House Banking Committee, the RTC, and the Independent Counsel had all made either requests or issued subpoenas which would have covered all or part of these records; is that correct?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And whether or not this Committee issued a subpoena that would have covered these records—I don't believe we did or that our subpoena could fairly be interpreted to cover it—nonwithstanding that, there was no question that you knew that the Committee was interested in the material and that you were going to get it to us as soon as possible?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If the only copy had been sent over to the Independent Counsel, which was running a Grand Jury investigation, pursuant to a subpoena of Independent Counsel, then this Committee would have been deprived of that evidence unless Independent Counsel had changed its previous position that material obtained by it through the Grand Jury process of subpoena would not be disseminated to this Committee. Is that fair to say?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's fair to say.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Kendall, would that have been your understanding?

Mr. KENDALL. It would.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that in the event that has been suggested here, the original was turned over to Independent Counsel, then you would not have had the opportunity to continue to refer to the document in response to questions about it in preparation of your clients with a document, nor would this Committee have had access to it unless the Independent Counsel changed its previously stated position with respect to providing us with material obtained by the Grand Jury?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that's what you were referring to as competing requests, including now the House Banking Committee, the RTC, and whoever else—whatever other three-letter agencies may have been asking for this material along the way.

Let me go to the question that you raise by your answer that you did not regard this as forensic material. Clearly, if a crime had been committed, if there had been a stabbing and a knife had been found, you would know enough not to touch the knife that was found because fingerprints contained thereon might well be important forensically to any police or investigative agency of the Government. Is that so?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You did not, I take it, regard the discovery of these billing records as finding the missing knife in the O.J. case?

Mr. KENDALL. Quite the contrary, Mr. Ben-Veniste. As I indicated earlier, I thought they were helpful. We had been seeking them, and I thought they would be very useful to us. In any large document production, all lawyers know this but I think it's important to say it, you do your best to get all the documents the first time through. You try and plan a thorough search. But human beings, being what they are, and human fallibility being what it is, very frequently documents pop up late, and when they do, you produce them. It's happened many times in this case. It happens in all cases where there are a large group of documents to review and complicated document requests, so we had many times before other documents emerge and when they did, we turned them over to the proper authorities.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Such as late last evening, the Gearan notes. Now the Gearan notes were under subpoena. There have been requests made for those notes. I take it, Ms. Sherburne, you're not concerned with handling the Gearan notes so that somebody's fingerprints would appear on them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I wasn't.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. How many pages of documents have been produced pursuant to subpoena, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. We have now produced to this Committee almost 30,000 pages of documents.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I believe the White House in response from August 25th forward has produced—I think it's around 14,000 pages.

Senator SARBANES. Isn't it a fact that every time documents have been found which had not previously been produced, they have then been immediately or promptly sent forward to the requesting agencies?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Therefore, in a document discovery matter, where we have received 50,000 pages of documents from you, not to mention hundreds of thousands of pages of documents from other agencies over the time this Committee has been in existence, the notion that because a document has been subpoenaed, that it has some special quality that involves fingerprints and who handled it absent any indication of a crime would, I take it, Mr. Kendall, not occur to you as being an important consideration?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I see my time is up, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me make an observation before I recognize Senator Faircloth that we're not talking about just any document. We're talking about one that brought to the White House yourself, Mr. Kendall, Mr. Schuelke, and that you had an extended conversation that went into the evening until about 10 p.m. in terms of working on it and preparing documents.

The question wasn't a naive one put forth by Ms. Sherburne. She is an experienced attorney and she has done a heck of a job. We may have conflicts at times, but she represents her client in a point of view and perspective, and does it with great ability. She didn't just dream this up about the importance—or at least considering the question of whether or not copies should be made at that point in time or whether preserving the integrity of the document as it related to fingerprints that may or may not have been present that could have because she knew this would be the subject of how did these documents turn up in the manner in which they did and the place in which they did. She knew it. That's not unreasonable. She's been down this road, and she knew if any questions were going to be raised, they would and could.

And it is not unreasonable for Senator Shelby or anyone else to say how is it, why is it that there were not precautions taken such as notifying the Independent Counsel or calling the FBI and saying we are desirous of seeing to it that these documents are made available, copies to the appropriate parties, all the parties concerned, and that we want a copy also for ourselves but we want to preserve the integrity of them as it relates to the fact that there would be no contamination.

I think her question was absolutely on point and appropriate; and I'm sorry that a decision was not made to see to it that there was a minimum of handling, that the copies could have been made appropriately, that the parties, all of their interests could have been protected, and it seems to me that could have and should have been done. Ms. Sherburne was absolutely correct in raising that as an issue and it is an issue and it has turned out to be one, so I commend her for doing it.

Senator Faircloth.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR LAUCH FAIRCLOTH

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just to elaborate very, very briefly on what you were saying. Mr. Ben-Veniste said—to some degree—that if you were investigating a murder and found the knife, that he would immediately not touch it and preserve it for fingerprints. Well, if ever there was a paper switch blade in investigating a case, these documents were the paper switch blade. They were the paper knife and glaringly evident to anybody involved that had been searched and subpoenaed for 2 years by two or more agencies. I would have thought that would have been recognized as very, very vital and very sensitive information and documents; and that they would not have been touched until they had been turned over to the Independent Counsel. But anyway, another decision was made.

Another thought I have, and Ms. Sherburne and Mr. Kendall, I realize the complexity of getting, and certainly from hearing your testimony, documents from the White House and the many, many people involved and the problems of getting them. That be as it is, we're 21 days from the time that this Committee was supposed to have finished its work. We are still getting very, very vital and revealing documents often. So all I have to say is that I think it is ludicrous to expect us to finish by the appointed time, and I can't imagine anyone, Minority or Majority, objecting to extending the life of this Committee indefinitely until we have completed our work. Now the zigs and zags of why we are still here there is no need to debate, but I want to make the statement that I think the Committee needs to be extended and should be extended indefinitely until we have finished our work.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Wait a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. I didn't mean to cut the Senator off, nor would ever attempt to do that.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Ms. Sherburne, your deposition suggests that Ms. Huber may be or may have been confused about when she found these documents, but I was here during her entire testimony, and I found her quite credible and very exacting in her memory.

My comment is this: There's been no suggestion that Ms. Huber is in any way confused. I understand she ran the Rose Law Firm with an iron fist. That was the description we had and further, if she was incompetent in any manner or even lacking in any degree of high confidence, the First Lady and President wouldn't have hired her to handle bills and very personal correspondence. Do you in any way feel that she might be incompetent or confused?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, Senator, I certainly thought she was confused that night. I heard her testimony as well when she testified before this Committee and recognized that her description of the events had become much more precise. That doesn't change the fact that on the night of the 4th of January when she was describing this, that she was very confused and that her recollections were very imprecise.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Let me ask you another question, then. You have described, Mr. Kendall—and I believe you, too, Ms. Sherburne—and I am not asking for what she said, but you described in detail Ms. Huber's reactions and mannerism and frustration when she found the documents or discovered them. Would you mind telling me, what was the reaction of the President and the First Lady when they were told the documents had been found? Not what they said. I am not trying to get into your privilege, but what was their response?

Mr. KENDALL. That's privileged, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait. Let me say this to my friend and colleague, and I have not advised you about this, and that's why we delayed the hearing so that we would not even have a question as to what is privileged, et cetera, so Mr. Kendall would not even have to raise it. We agreed as it related to any conversation, et cetera, covering that, that we are reserving their right. We are not raising it at this hearing today. I would ask the Senator to withhold that particular—you were not aware of that and I did agree so we could proceed and I must say that Mr. Kendall and Ms. Sherburne then agreed to be responsive to some of our questions as it related to the manner in which their clients were advised when the subpoenas were served and so we had a trade-off so we could move the hearings.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. All right. I wasn't asking for statements anyway, but I didn't realize we had done that, and that's fine.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm sorry and I apologize to the Senator for not having advised him about that.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Kendall or Ms. Sherburne, we have new documents here today that indicate the following, that on January 5th, Harold Ickes wants to send people to Arkansas to further talk to Beverly Bassett Schaffer because it is important in his words. Do either of you know if White House staffers or others on behalf of the White House went to visit with Ms. Schaffer in Arkansas in the January 1994 time period, or thereafter, as a result of what Mr. Ickes said? Did somebody go to visit with Ms. Schaffer?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Not that I'm aware of, Senator.

Mr. KENDALL. I don't know, Senator.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Kendall, did you help prepare the answers that Mrs. Clinton gave to the RTC and to Pillsbury Madison & Sutro?

Mr. KENDALL. The interrogatory answers, Senator?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Excuse me?

Mr. KENDALL. The answers to the RTC interrogatories?

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. Yes. Without getting into specifically what I did, I assisted in the preparation of those answers.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Do you think there's any possibility that the First Lady misled investigators when she said she did no work on Castle Grande?

Mr. KENDALL. I don't think that's what the answers were, Senator. If you would put them in front of me, I would be happy to see them, but her answers were perfectly accurate in those interrogatories.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. She seems to be the only one that thought that IDC and Castle Grande were different. When the First Lady gave—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, I believe there was testimony from some of her partners that they as well believed they were the same, as well as Mr. Fitzhugh, that they referred to the development as IDC.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Well, I don't remember that testimony, but we have had a predominance of testimony here that everybody thought it was the same, and nobody was confused that it was—

Mr. KENDALL. The Rose billing firm, though, Senator—the Rose billing system—in fairness, the Rose Law Firm always considered this matter to be IDC as the various Rose people have testified.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. You find no coincidence against these billing records that show she did work on Castle Grande, but Castle Grande was the one transaction that the RTC thought a lawsuit could be brought on—just a minute—and that the documents were found 4 days after the statute of limitations expired. Do you think this is coincidence?

Mr. KENDALL. Senator Faircloth, let me address that question. First of all, there's a tolling agreement with respect to any lawsuit the RTC wants to bring over the IDC proper.

Second, her work on the IDC proper was known long before these billing records were discovered. There was testimony in the House about it. When I told Ms. Huber that the billing records were going to be helpful, I really meant that. These records were not, to use your metaphor, a paper switch blade. They were records which showed—first of all, they just confirmed a lot of information out there, but they showed that the law firm's work was limited. They showed her work was limited, and they showed that the work was really not very much involved in the acquisition of the IDC project.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Kendall, it's all in the eyes of the beholder what is limited and what is not very much, but the one hook that the RTC could have gone after in a lawsuit would have been Mrs. Clinton's work on Castle Grande. So let me ask you—

Mr. KENDALL. Senator, what I meant to say is they can still do that. That's what the tolling agreement means.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. She is willing to grant them a waiver of the extension of the statute of limitations?

Mr. KENDALL. The Rose Law Firm has already granted it.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Would that include Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. I think that would be a question of law, but she was certainly in the law firm at the time and would be one of the people who had worked on the matter.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. The Rose Law Firm has granted an extension. Would Mrs. Clinton agree to the extension as an individual?

Mr. KENDALL. I think she was then a member of the Rose Law Firm. She was never asked for such an extension, but she is bound up in the work she did for the law firm.

Senator FAIRCLOTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Kendall, perhaps you ought to explain what a tolling agreement is. Again, for nonlawyers, this is not toll-house cookies or——

Mr. KENDALL. Or toll booths across the bridge. A tolling agreement simply suspends for a period of time the running of the statute of limitations. In other words, if an action can be brought in 3 years, and the time is ticking away, the parties may for a variety of reasons seek an extension by mutual consent, and so that's what a tolling agreement is.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So in point of fact with respect to the question posed by Senator Faircloth, the Rose Law Firm has entered into an agreement with the RTC and its successor, the FDIC, I trust, to extend the period of time where the FDIC, the Government can now pursue any claim it thinks it may have against the Rose Law Firm irrespective of the time the statute of limitations would normally have run out?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct, with respect to the IDC claims.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To add to the point with respect to how that transaction was characterized by Mrs. Clinton and her partners at the Rose Law Firm, we have now had testimony from Mr. Massey, Mr. Clark, Mr. Fitzhugh, Mr. Thrash, Mr. Donovan, and Mr. Dover. So six different witnesses have appeared here under oath and have testified that the matter was referred to as the IDC matter. In addition to that, when you review the billing records which have now been discovered and turned over in January, what do those billing records tell us about how that matter was described by the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. KENDALL. Matter No. 5, IDC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It is not described in any way, shape or form, is it, as Castle Grande?

Mr. KENDALL. Castle Grande Estates is a trailer park which is part of the 1,050-acre development.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When you talk about the consideration of the substance of the material not being a matter of forensic interest, you said two things. First, you talked about documents being produced in a large document case and there being a continuing production of documents over a period of time. The second thing you talked about was the nature of the documents themselves. What did you mean by the nature of the documents being another consideration in connection with the forensic issue?

Mr. KENDALL. These billing records are helpful. They are not entirely new. A great deal was known about the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison Guaranty before the discovery of these records. I have been amazed at the focus on the billing records. It seems to me to call it—"a tempest in a teapot," "no there there,"

"the Emperor's new clothes," you could choose your hackneyed metaphor, and it would apply to all of the hoopla over the billing records.

Before the records were discovered, it was known that the Rose Law Firm had in a 15-month period performed about $21,000 worth of work over that period. It was known what projects it had worked on. Mrs. Clinton's participation was well known both because of testimony about it, and because of other documents and other billing records that were available. When I identified these billing records for Mr. Chertoff at the beginning of this hearing, I tried to indicate that I had seen some of these records before, as has the Committee. The House of Representatives released several of the bills that had gone to the Rose Law Firm. So the publicity over the billing records is, in my opinion, quite exaggerated because much of what is in here was known before.

Now there's some detail. They do provide attorney detail, but by and large, that is helpful because one of the questions having to do with the RTC's investigation is did the Rose Law Firm participate in any substantial way in the acquisition of the IDC property. From the billing records, you see that they really did not. You see that Mrs. Clinton had nothing whatsoever to do with the acquisition. You see that her work, such as it was, comes much later.

So that was why my initial reaction was that these records were helpful. I was not simply trying to hypocritically reassure Ms. Huber. I knew when these got out and were properly considered, quite—they would certainly not be a paper switch blade, but would be something that would be helpful, and as I said earlier, I wish they had been discovered earlier.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In connection with the confirmatory information that was contained in the billing records, I take it when you say they're helpful, you mean in connection with prior statements made by the Rose Law Firm and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct, and also in limiting and defining the nature of the work done. I think the Rose Law Firm has been quite unfairly criticized. They were not the major outside counsel for Madison Guaranty. Their work was limited and it was defined. It involved specific projects, such as the stock offering, which, in fact, Ms. Beverly Bassett Schaffer held up in what I think was a really extraordinarily good display of regulatory courage and integrity. So Madison Guaranty did not get its stock deal approved.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And by that, you mean the fact that there was a requirement, despite the fact that she agreed that a State-chartered S&L could issue preferred stock, there was a prerequisite required of Madison to increase its capital prior to the time that any such preferred stock offering would be allowed?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct. She required that their regulatory capital be up to the Federally-required limit, whereas—then there was an argument that went back and forth over the summer of 1985, the S&L's position was look, we need to raise stock to get our capital up. But she held tough, and the stock deal did not go through.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now the records that you say are duplicative of what had already been—by January 5th, had already been produced to this Committee and elsewhere consist essentially of bills which were sent by the Rose Law Firm to Madison; is that correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct, and that identifies the attorneys, so you knew H. R. Clinton worked on Matter No. 5, IDC, but it did not list the specific tasks, so the billing records are helpful in defining precisely what she did with regard to the IDC matter.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And all of this, in your view at the time that you discovered the records, putting aside whatever questions there may have been about where they had been prior to the time they were discovered, but the actual fact that the records were there, they could now be reviewed by all parties, they could be turned over immediately, and they were, in your view, largely confirmatory and corroborative of what your client had said about the underlying activities, all motivated you to get them copied, to get them disseminated immediately?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Ben-Veniste, it would not have mattered whether they had been favorable or unfavorable. I would have gotten them copied and disseminated. In fact, though, they are favorable, and I think again, when people understand what is in them, it will be recognized that this is, to choose a phrase, "a tempest in a teapot."

Senator SARBANES. Ms. Sherburne, with the exception of the E-mail requests from this Committee on which you're now working, in which you have made a special contractor arrangement, as I understand it, and you have now gone through the first time period and working on subsequent time periods, have all requests for material and information from this Committee been met?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, last weekend, over the weekend, we received three or four new requests from the Committee.

Senator SARBANES. On the E-mails?

Ms. SHERBURNE. One was related to E-mails and another was related to additional records. We have complied as fully as we can in that short time period. I think one request we received Saturday night at 10 asked for a response date by noon on Monday. We didn't make it. There were other requests that came in; I think, there were 3, 4, or 5 different letters, and we partially responded to those. But apart from that, and the E-mail question, we believe that we have complied with the Committee's subpoena. Again, you know, Gearan documents can turn up.

Senator SARBANES. No, I understand that you may have had a request and provided material and then subsequently something else may turn up, an effort was made to get it and for one reason or another, it wasn't found, then it's found and it's provided, but that is always a possibility with respect to anything that has been requested. I wasn't aware of the other things. I thought only the E-mails were outstanding. These were requests that came to you from Mr. Giuffra, were they or do you know?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think most of the requests were signed by the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be requests that we continue to make if facts that we were unaware of become known to the Committee, and I think that's only reasonable. For example, we had no knowledge, at least the Chairman didn't, as it related to any possible relationship that the Southern Development Bank may or may not have had, that the Bank of Kingston may or may not have had, various timesheets that we were told Mr. Hubbell removed. We just learned that yesterday for the first time, so there will be occasions, and we obviously can't hold the White House, nor do we attempt to do that, nor Ms. Sherburne responsible for producing documents that we've never requested, and obviously, it has to be realized that when we do get new information, that will take place.

Let me, before I call upon Senator Bennett, make an observation. As it relates to characterizing this as a tempest in a teapot, I cannot even begin to subscribe to that. This is the most incredible—to say that this Committee and others who want to attempt to get the facts should not find it incredulous, difficult, even if these were viewed in the best light, exculpatory billing records, and I don't accept that for 1 minute, not 1 iota because they are not, in my view, exculpatory, but demonstrate much more work and much more activity than has heretofore been known. And there's a question of the 15 hours. Was it overbilling or was it work not accounted for? The question of frequent numerous contacts with Seth Ward, who was the major participant in IDC and Castle Grande.

Having said that, that would totally negate a question as to how it related to these documents and find themselves in the personal residence of the President and the First Lady. The fact is we have to believe that they were there, they had them for an extended period of time because to this date, the last known person, and we have testimony yesterday for the first time that clearly establish that Mr. Hubbell saw them in the possession of Vince Foster.

We have, by your own admission, Mr. Kendall, Vince Foster's personal handwriting, not a copy, his personal handwriting on these documents. How did they get to the residence? When we look at the record, and it is incomplete, we're going to continue to examine other people, I think it's highly improbable that a construction worker brought these records in, and if he did, where did he bring them from.

But the fact is, when you look at the testimony of a young man who works for the White House, Mr. Castleton, and he says, that as he's carrying a box of documents, documents that were assembled from Mr. Foster's papers in his office at the behest of Maggie Williams, the First Lady's Chief of Staff. Ms. Williams says, "Well, we're bringing these upstairs so that the First Lady or the President can review them." We can check the exact quotation, but that's the sum and substance. How did the documents get there, then, that Mr. Foster was working on in his office—or certainly was working on, maybe at home? Did they come from his house? How did they get there?

Mr. KENDALL. Senator, may I respond?

The CHAIRMAN. No, I'm going to finish because I think when you say this is a tempest, you know——

Mr. KENDALL. In a teapot.

The CHAIRMAN. —in a teapot, it just—that's your analysis, and I listened to you. I didn't interrupt you, and I am going to finish. It is not a question, it is an observation on my part. I observe further that when Officer O'Neill testifies that he sees the First Lady's Chief of Staff taking papers, files out of Mr. Foster's office, bringing them into her own, and then thereafter, 2 or 3 days later—that's undisputed—that they went upstairs with Ms. Huber and had documents—anyway. I think by any reasonable interpretation, you have to find that those papers were there or may not be; maybe there's a better explanation.

But when you put these things together, I think most reasonable people are going to conclude that certainly Mr. Foster was the last person to have them in his possession. Certainly, there was a change of plan in the manner in which a review of documents that he had in his office would be undertaken; and certainly, there is evidence that Ms. Thomases called Bernie Nussbaum, and we have people who testified that the First Lady wasn't happy about the manner in which this review was going to take place, and then guess what? It changed.

Now, I don't think this is a tempest in a teapot when we say that we have some very real concerns as to how these documents got there, and I'm not going to get into the business, and I have heard you and you have very articulately put forth why you believe these documents are exculpatory. That's fine. You have a right to your opinion. We are going to just try and gather the facts and indeed, if they are, let it be. Wonderful. We will make that determination. And I'll be the first to say that, if we get other evidence and other information that indicates nothing is there. If there's nothing there, that's fine, and I would like to close this down as soon as we possibly can, but I'm not going to close it down on the basis of incomplete information.

By the way, I want you to know, Ms. Sherburne, I do not in any way hold you responsible or anyone else in the White House responsible for production of the documents that we got last evening at the point in time they came. But the information in there certainly leads us to say we have much more work to do and following up the conversations that we have gleaned from the information that we have received.

So I just wanted to respond, as you had made your observations, Mr. Kendall, I make my observations.

Senator Bennett.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR ROBERT F. BENNETT

Senator BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think I will let it go over to the other side so I can have full time.

The CHAIRMAN. We are going 15 minutes, how many minutes—

The CLERK. About 8 minutes left.

Senator BENNETT. I can handle it in 8 minutes.

I just comment, Mr. Kendall, that if you find this discovery of documents useful to your client, I would really be interested in seeing some documents that you didn't think were useful to your client because from my standpoint, from my perception, the discovery of the billing records was quite damaging to previous testimony and previous positions that I heard, previous comments that I elicited from Mr. Hubbell and others on the issue of billing, and I am a little surprised, frankly, to hear you say that you find these would be useful.

Ms. Sherburne, just an observation as a layman, and I am not burdened with a legal education, so I can make these kind of comments. In my lifetime, I have been the subject of a subpoena, I have been the subject of an IRS audit, and I have undergone a root canal, and I would tell you I would much prefer the root canal and I would much prefer the IRS audit to the receipt of a subpoena.

They are always broad. They just stun the layman like me when they say we have to have everything you have ever done in all your life and everybody you've ever talked to and then we'll talk about narrowing it later on when you get an attorney to come argue with us. That's the impact that a subpoena has on a layman.

I would suggest to you that upon receipt of that first request in August, as a layman I would have issued a general memo to everybody under my jurisdiction and said yeah, our lawyers are going to fight to try to get this narrowed, but in the meantime, the prudent thing to do would be to not throw anything away. And your failure to make any kind of notice to anybody until you had fought that fight about narrowing would suggest to me a suspicion that there was an attempt to drag this thing out as long as possible in the White House. This is not an unreasonable suspicion for some people to have.

And as an old PR man, I would suggest to you the next time you get a subpoena that's broad, yes, you did what you did, what every good defense attorney does for a client and say well, we can't comply with that, let's fight to narrow it, and you succeeded in doing that over about a 60-day period, but in the meantime, it might have been a good time for you to issue the memo to everybody that says don't throw anything away in the meantime, so that there's at least something on the record that makes it clear that you're trying to protect whatever has to be protected while you're doing the back-and-forth that lawyers do in an attempt to get to specificity. It's just gratuitous advice.

Ms. SHERBURNE. May I respond?

Senator BENNETT. Surely.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, I have dealt with document requests and productions my entire professional life. And the normal course of proceeding is always to try and capture as much as possible and then begin the narrowing process.

I would like to remind you, Senator, that first of all, there's no indication anywhere that any record that was called for by the subpoena was tossed out in the intervening period; and I don't think you were suggesting that.

Senator BENNETT. No, that's not my point.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Second, I believe that the bulk of the responsive material had already been collected in response to other requests and subpoenas. And so we had that material already essentially captured in the Counsel's Office, and we began reviewing that material and providing that to the Committee promptly.

Senator BENNETT. Well, just my reaction to your exchange with Mr. Chertoff on his suggestion that you had not done what you should have done in August, and it took you until October, and of course, we are now coming up against the expiration of this Committee and the existence of this Committee. And clearly, we will not have 96 votes to extend the life of this Committee as we had in the creation of this Committee. I remind you of that a little, Mr. Kendall, when you talk about a tempest in a teapot. We are, in fact, operating under a mandate of 96 Members of the U.S. Senate who told us to be here to do this, so it was not a partisan kind of circumstance in the beginning.

But we are coming up against a deadline. There are those who think the deadline has to be extended, those who would like to see the deadline not extended because they would like to see some things not come out and would, indeed, do whatever they could during the period of this existence to try to slow things down even though they ultimately do produce the documents.

I'm not going to accuse you of doing that, but I do have the suspicion that there are some people involved in this who would like to do that.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, I would like to share a concern that I've had related to that, which is that the long period of time that it's taken for us to reach agreements with the Committee about what is a workable request has made me think quite the reverse; that, in fact, the Committee is interested in creating excuses and making it difficult for us to respond to requests so that you have an opportunity to argue that our compliance with these requests has not been sufficiently timely. It's been very difficult to work to reach agreements about what we can actually ask people for and produce to the Committee. It's been a very time-consuming process, and it's been something that we've worked hard to achieve.

But there are times, as early as September 6th, when the Committee indicated that because we said that we couldn't produce the documents within a few-day period from the August 25th request, that you may have to extend the life of the Committee. As early as September 6th, you were saying that.

Senator BENNETT. The light is going on. That is why I apologize for trying to cut you off.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I don't mean to take up your time.

Senator BENNETT. I will simply say that if that is the strategy of the Committee, it has not been shared with this Senator. I am completely unaware of any desire on the part of any staffer or Senator to deliberately extend the life of the Committee. The point I would make of the documents we got today, and these notes just came up. We got them yesterday. We frankly were not prepared to talk about them at this hearing today because they caught us by such surprise.

It is very clear to me, Mr. Chairman, going through these pages that we've gotten of Mr. Gearan's notes, that we're going to have to have Mr. Ickes here. He is very clearly a key player in the damage control efforts that are going on with respect to this issue, and I will just tell you how I read these.

I understand you weren't part of this meeting, but I read these as to those parts that have come through the redaction and available to us that particularly point number 5 on the first page, PB, whoever that is, Paul Begala, BL, whoever that is, Bruce Lindsey, I'm guessing—and we now know his first name from Ms. Sherburne, Mike Waldman, are all going to go to Arkansas to meet with Beverly Bassett and try to poke holes in their story, whoever "they" happens to be, and they're going to try to get independent validation of their effort to poke holes in their story from a securities attorney, unnamed, and a search of all regulations.

This is clearly a carefully constructed plan of something to do, and then you go to the second page, and HI enters, and you have identified him, Ms. Sherburne, as Harold Ickes, obviously disagreeing with this strategy. That's the way I read it. That's why I say we have to get Mr. Ickes here, so he can describe to us exactly what happens.

He says the boxes are going to a prosecutorial authority anyway. He's concerned about meetings of attorneys outside of the White House. Beverly Bassett is so fouled up or whatever, that if we foul this up, we're done, let's not talk it to death. Let's get it done. In other words, he says—you go to the next page—we can't send these three people down to see Beverly Bassett because it will get out. And we will be done.

That is the way I read the sequence of things. Instead, Harold Ickes is saying let's go down this item by item to make sure her story is OK.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, I think—

Senator BENNETT. I find this, Mr. Kendall, more than a tempest in a teapot when the Deputy Chief of Staff to the President is sitting in a meeting—this is the way I read these notes—and overruling a previous decision that is outlined in 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 fashion on the first page and saying we can't do this and if we mess this up, we are done, and this is what we are going to have to do.

I think these are things that are perfectly appropriate for this Committee to pursue and the fact that we get this note yesterday—and I do not accuse anybody of deliberately hiding it—the fact is we get this note yesterday, and this is something that I think we should appropriately pursue. I think the Committee has a mandate to pursue it, and we need to extend the existence of the Committee so we can pursue it. I think we need to get Mr. Ickes up here to tell me that my interpretation is completely false and tell us what really happened. But this is something that we can't say, "Oh, there's no there there," and we just have to ignore it.

If you would like to respond, I am very generous now that my time is gone. I'll be happy to—

Ms. SHERBURNE. As you read through the notes, I think you said at one portion that it read that Beverly Bassett is messing up. I think it's Beverly Bassett is important is how I read the notes, and I think that's an important distinction—

Senator BENNETT. I think it's important for us to get somebody here who really knows what it says, tell us what it says. I don't know for sure and you don't know for sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Sherburne, when did you receive a subpoena from this Committee?

Ms. SHERBURNE. October 31, 1995.

Senator SARBANES. I think it's very important because Senator Bennett is making reference to a subpoena in August, and August is a document request.

Senator BENNETT. I stand corrected.

Senator SARBANES. We did not join in that document request because we felt at the time that it was overly broad and, in fact, would inhibit the efforts of this Committee to move its inquiry along. At the time we indicated in a memo to the Majority staff when this very broad request was before us, and I think it's important to get some of this background because it's more complex than it appears and there's been a consistent effort to, in effect, throw it all on Ms. Sherburne. And I think, frankly, that's unfair to her. I think this is a difficult task under the best of circumstances.

We said at the time, "We foresee potential problems that could arise from this approach," and the approach I'm making reference to is just these overly broad and sweeping requests. "Most important is a simple matter of timing, requests of this breadth may substantially slow down the responses of the White House and Mr. Kendall, Clinton's personal counsel, to this round of document requests." We went on to say, "We believe it would be prudent to prioritize the Special Committee's document requests and correlate them to reasonable deposition schedule."

Now, I think our concerns were well-founded. What happened actually is the Majority's document requests to the White House were onerous and ever-expanding, and a lot of time was spent between August 25th and the latter part of October trying to clarify these extraordinarily broad document requests. Actually, rather than clarifying them, the process seemed to add confusion, as a matter of fact. And only 10 days after the original document request, White House attorneys met with Committee staff to discuss compliance with that broad document request, the one that I thought was overly broad as I indicated.

The next day the Committee's Chief Counsel sent a letter to the White House which began as follows: "You have advised us that the White House will not be able to produce documents by the September 7, 1995 return date specified in the Committee's August 25th request." Now keep in mind this was an extremely broad request. There's no person on earth who could have come anywhere close to complying with it by the September 7 return date. Further quoting, "as we discussed, any delay by the White House in producing documents will impact negatively on the Special Committee's ability to conclude its investigation by February 1996."

This was on September 6th that this observation was being made, and this letter included the requests that I made reference to earlier. And I want to put that back on the record, because I think it's a dramatic illustration of the problem that Ms. Sherburne was being confronted with in this process.

It included, amongst other things, expanding the already very broad request, any communication, contact or meeting between January 20, 1993 and August 5, 1994, a period of almost 19 months, relating to any subject, any communication relating to any subject between the Clintons, President Clinton, Mrs. Clinton, or any present or former member of the White House staff, and then a paragraph that lists approximately 50 people, including—and I don't know what number to give to this category—any present or former employee of the RTC. So it's any communication over 19 months on any subject between all former and present White House staff and paragraph 2.

Now, I mean, in the subsequent analysis and discussions, I have to concede the Majority staff, I think, recognized the extraordinary breadth of that request and that matter was narrowed down. But it is clear that Ms. Sherburne was being confronted with these sweeping requests in terms of trying to address this matter. Finally by mid-October, a narrowing took place; is that correct, as I understand it, about that period of time?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think that was, the final request was arrived at. There were lots of discussions in between.

Senator SARBANES. A subpoena was then issued toward the end of October, if I'm correct.

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. In fact, when we were first confronted with that question, if the Chairman will recall, we had a discussion and a difference in the Committee about the original breadth of that subpoena as it was being proposed. A decision on it was deferred, discussions were held amongst the Members of the Committee, the staff, and Ms. Sherburne. In the end it was focused, in my judgment appropriately so, and in fact, we then joined in that request, the Minority joined with the Majority at that time in that request.

Now subsequent to that, I think we've been able to move this matter along. We've had the E-mail situation which was addressed earlier, which is now moving along as well. There we had the problem of—the difficulty of retrieval, the cost of retrieval and we've worked through that. So the response to the E-mail request is now taking place. My understanding is that all the matters that were contained in the subpoena have been provided, allowing for things that have been overlooked or just discovered. I mean, as we have indicated, we understand that that may happen.

In fact, Ms. Sherburne wrote a letter on October 23, I think.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Right. The review of the bidding letter?

Senator SARBANES. This is a letter from you, Ms. Sherburne to Mr. Giuffra, Chief Counsel of the Committee. Let's review the bidding letter, which says:

As far as we are aware, the White House has nearly completed its response to the Chairman's August 25, 1995 document request, and your subsequent expansions of his original request. Our compliance does not include certain material about which there had been outstanding cut-off date issues that were only resolved in your letter of October 17, 1995 or the new requests made in your October 17 letter. Although your October 17 letter raises new issues that require further discussion, we anticipate we will have essentially completed our response to it by October 30. To date, we've produced nearly 8,500 pages of White House records to the Committee.

Then you note that it's been very difficult to move this process forward because you have encountered a "confusing labyrinth of embellishments, qualifications, and elaborations." Which I take it refers to the back-and-forth in the intervening period subsequent to August 25, or perhaps subsequent to September 8, was this the first letter of elaboration that came to you from Mr. Giuffra?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That was on September 6th, that's right.

Senator SARBANES. That's the first elaboration?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Senator SARBANES. That was the one that contained this. It contained many other things, but amongst other things, contained this extraordinarily broad request which I just quoted?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Now what transpired then in the intervening period, further efforts to try to refine the requests? It seems to me you just had these overwhelming requests. Was there some effort to prioritize the requests so you had some sense of—

Ms. SHERBURNE. We sought guidance from the Committee staff about priorities, believing that it was likely that the Committee would proceed with the Washington issues before the Arkansas issues, and sought guidance from the Committee that we could emphasize first retrieving the documents that we thought the Committee would need first. And in the early part of September, the Committee staff was unwilling to set those priorities.

As we proceeded into September and in early October, the Committee staff encouraged us to focus on the first five paragraphs of the August 25th letter, which related to the Washington issues. So that's what we did. We provided all those documents, I believe in time for the hearings on the Washington phase issues.

At that point we were also continuing to negotiate and discuss with the Committee staff how to narrow and focus and make manageable the requests for the so-called Arkansas phase documents. There were discussions, numerous phone conferences, and meetings. There was a letter from Mr. Giuffra on September 25th that elaborated further. There was a letter from David Fein of my staff back to Mr. Giuffra, verifying further clarifications that we had achieved on October 15th, and then finally Mr. Giuffra's letter on October 17th.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to make the observation that when the subpoenas were finally issued on October 26th, the Minority joined in issuing the subpoenas, but at that point there had been, what I thought, a process that should have been taken place earlier, which were very serious discussions about the breadth and scope of the request. In fact, there was, as it finally turned out, extended discussion between Committee staff and White House attorneys.

Those negotiations resolved several important issues that had previously hindered the production of documents, and the clarification that came from that, the definition of time periods, a limitation on the people affected, the proper narrowing of the subject matter to be covered and so forth, that then gave us, I think really for the first time, a workable request for Ms. Sherburne and her colleagues to respond to. And of course, they have been trying to do that ever since. I think in the meantime, they were responding even though they were dealing with an unworkable request. I mean, they were still trying to send documents and materials to the Committee. I think it's very important to have this record. And actually I think the October 23rd letter ought to be included in the record, and I ask consent that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. So ordered.

Senator SARBANES. Thank you. I see my time is up. We yield to the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Grams.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR ROD GRAMS

Senator GRAMS. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I would like to just start out by talking probably about one of the little things that Mr. Kendall referred to as the tempest in the teapot, in dealing with these documents that were discovered in the White House, documents that apparently people didn't think were that important as far as the way they were handled, that they would be a positive in showing to corroborate some of the statements that Mrs. Clinton had made, that she wasn't involved with a lot of the billing dealing with Castle Grande. I just wanted to make a couple of quick comments on that, because all the billing, and it's been insinuated that everybody knew this by IDC.

I've been involved with some developments, and I know that might be the legal term and that might be the way the billing is, but once a project has been given a name such as Castle Grande, it's always referred that way. And I think Mr. McDougal had spent a lot of money in trying to inform the community of Little Rock, Arkansas that Castle Grande was there and was for sale.

I don't see that everytime he talked to his legal representation, he would refer to it as IDC; yet in the public or in common terms, it was always referred to as Castle Grande. So I am not sure that there is a complete innocence of not knowing the two were somehow the same pieces of land.

Also, what we have heard, Mr. Chairman, about the cooperation and the thousands of documents that we have received, it looks like—we are looking for the needle or some pertinent information and what we've been given is the haystack. So we've been given a lot of information that probably is worthless, and the information that we have been after, we don't seem to be getting it. And when we do get some of the information, it's heavily redacted.

But Mr. Kendall, dealing with when the information was found and you were notified by Ms. Huber that these records were found, why was the need to analyze them for your client more important than evidentiary concerns? It kind of reminds me of the old axiom which says, "It's easier to beg for forgiveness than to give permission." So in other words, decisions were made that were irretrievable as far as maybe getting some fingerprints, as Ms. Sherburne brought up, in the meeting. So there was some concern about evidence on this, and knowing well in the media—and you yourself knew that these records had been subpoenaed and the subject of a lot of conversation. Why didn't you think it was more important to at least preserve that and still be able to protect your client?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I think that we have testified about what we did. There were a number of different responsibilities. One was to furnish copies to the agencies that had requested them. We did that in a way which would interfere least, we thought, with any forensic tests that might be done. We ran copies and then copied from the copies.

But in terms of the review of the documents, that was obviously necessary to determine that they were responsive, that there were not privilege issues or other matters that ought to be dealt with. And this was the joint judgment of the three lawyers involved. It was not one person making the decision.

Senator GRAMS. Once the decision was made, though, in the review of the documents, there still could have been a time to have others brought in and counseled before copies were made or more possibility of disturbing any kind of evidence, because I know you've tried to shift it and say that the contents of the records are what's important or questioned here, but I think, as the Chairman mentioned a while ago, sometimes it's the question of how they got there, where were they, who handled them, that is as important in this as the contents or what the billings indicated.

Mr. KENDALL. Senator Grams, let me say to that, we may never know precisely how these records got there. This may be one of the many meaningless mysteries of Whitewater. My point was that there is no conceivable reason to hide them or to secrete them, so that they're really not a paper switchblade at all, they are helpful evidence. And that weighs in the question of what was done with them to get them out.

Senator GRAMS. But then I go back, it is important how they got there because we do have questions about files taken from Mr. Foster's office. His handwriting was on these documents. We know, as the Chairman pointed out, Mr. Castleton and Ms. Williams moved documents from the White House offices to the personal residence, so there was a lot of questions on how they got there, who handled them. So that's why I disagree with—evidence was very important in part of this.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, may I add that I don't think that we disagree that the question of how the documents got there is one that's entirely appropriate to examine, that's one of the reasons we are here cooperating with you, that we've encouraged witnesses to cooperate in this inquiry. I think that the substance of the documents is supportive, it's one of those situations where there's good news and bad news with the discovery.

One is, you know, the records are found, they support what we have been saying, but they were found in the residence and there are going to be questions about how they got there and why they weren't found earlier. We recognize that those questions are appropriate and we are trying to cooperate with you, and with the Independent Counsel in helping get those answers.

Senator GRAMS. But some of the evidence about it then was really eradicated and we won't know, and maybe will not be able to glean from that, so you know, after—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Senator, we don't know that.

Senator GRAMS. —looking for 2 years, one more day would not have hurt.

Ms. SHERBURNE. No one has said there is an issue—

Senator GRAMS. By handling them and photocopying, it didn't erase or anything any of the, maybe, evidence or fingerprinting—

Ms. SHERBURNE. I haven't heard anyone say that.

Senator GRAMS. Well, I have a question about that Ms. Sherburne. In talking about Ms. Huber, in some of your answers you seem to be questioning how she found the records, that she seemed to be confused. Again when we had her here testifying before the Committee, she was very crisp about her answers. So are you trying to, at best, say that she had poor recall or maybe insinuating somehow that she might have lied about how they got there?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I'm simply answering your questions with the facts. I was asked what did she say, and I told you what she said. I recognize that the fact of what she said on that night suggests confusion, where her testimony before this Committee didn't. I am not suggesting or reaching any conclusion about that. I am reporting to you the facts of what occurred that night.

Senator GRAMS. There was also discussion, though, about having her attorney question her even further about how she found this and some of the—what clouded issues or confusion that she seemed to have. Was this trying to counsel her on getting a story straight, or was this really trying to—

Ms. SHERBURNE. No, I think it was—you saw Ms. Huber, you know that she's an elderly woman. She was very flustered that night. She seemed very confused. And it didn't seem to me that it was constructive or appropriate at that time to try and press her on her recollections and determine what she knew for sure, what she didn't know, what she was guessing about, what she knew from her own personal experience. It was simply that I thought she clearly needed to calm down, settle down, and wait for an opportunity to discuss it with her lawyer before we proceeded any further.

Mr. KENDALL. If I could comment, Senator Grams, I think it was quite the opposite of an attempt to get her story straight. I think that both Ms. Sherburne and I felt that it would be improper for us to press or pressure her. She needed to be examined by her own lawyer, who had no responsibility except to her, and the most appropriate way to proceed would be to have Mr. Schuelke do it without having the White House lawyer and the personal lawyer kind of hovering over her.

Senator GRAMS. I have a question of why these documents made her so nervous, then; that's why I was concerned.

Ms. Sherburne, you have said that after this discovery of the documents, that you notified members of your staff, which I would assume you would do, but then you also notified Mr. Harold Ickes.

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Senator GRAMS. First, could I ask you, who is Mr. Harold Ickes?

Ms. SHERBURNE. He is the Deputy Chief of Staff at the White House.

Senator GRAMS. Why did you call him, not Mr. Panetta, not the Chief of Staff or others? Why did you call Mr. Ickes?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Mr. Ickes is the person in the Office of the Chief of Staff to whom I report. I also have a reporting relationship with Mr. Quinn, but Mr. Ickes is someone to whom I report, so I called him and reported this development.

Senator GRAMS. Who does Mr. Ickes report to?

Ms. SHERBURNE. The Chief of Staff, Leon Panetta.

Senator GRAMS. What was his reaction when you first told him about these documents being found?

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to ask, I think—that is a question we will pursue, but we have conceded in the interest of time where counsel—because again Ms. Sherburne is counsel, Mr. Kendall is counsel, without conceding the issue or even raising the issue of privilege, we will not go forward. So I would ask if the Senator—I'm not suggesting the question isn't appropriate, but at this time we have agreed not to go forward with that.

Senator GRAMS. Maybe I could just make a comment or maybe elicit an answer—

The CHAIRMAN. You can certainly make a comment.

Senator GRAMS. Mr. Ickes is the source of many of the quotes in the Gearan memos that we have received here as recently as just last night and has long-time involvement with the Whitewater Development Corporation affairs on behalf of the President and the First Lady.

The Gearan notes about the Whitewater meeting, in those notes Mr. Ickes seems to be formulating moves that needed to be made regarding the stories and interviews and other things. And I was just going to ask you if that's why you called him, if this was a reason, because he needed—is that—

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I'm going to leave it and I'm going to say that nothing should be inferred by the manner in which Ms. Sherburne responds if she feels comfortable or would rather we review that at another time.

Let me suggest this. I don't want to place her in a position—we may agree or disagree on different things, I mean, we're going to do that, but in terms of this, I would ask my colleague to suspend that line of examination, only because in good faith we have met and attempted to resolve some of these matters without testing them, and I think the question is appropriate, but not at this time.

Senator GRAMS. Can I make one other observation, then?

The CHAIRMAN. You certainly can make—I think it's obvious why you would want to pursue this, given the notes, given Mr. Ickes' involvement, et cetera, what if anything, but I think we'll pursue that at another time. We'll pursue it when Mr. Ickes is here.

Senator GRAMS. Just one other observation then, in going back to this not being a very important piece of documents, we're making a tempest in a teapot here. But this was an important enough piece of paper or documents that were found that it prompted a meeting the next morning with the President, Ms. Sherburne, and Mr. Ickes. So it seems to me that somebody was very interested in these documents and needed to go right to the top to find out what to do with them.

So without asking a question I just wanted to make it, that this seemed to be a very important discussion that was held the next day regarding these very documents that appear to have some people believing they're not that important.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think, Senator, that is consistent with the distinction I was drawing. I think the records themselves have a significance that one could describe as a tempest in a teapot. The discovery of the records and the recognition that the discovery would have reverberations was a different matter. It was something that, I think, I certainly felt compelled to notify the people to whom I reported and the people who would be directly affected by it.

Senator GRAMS. And to bring the spin doctor, Mr. Ickes, in on this was very important at the time as well?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I report to Mr. Ickes.

Senator GRAMS. A couple of quick questions. Going back to Ms. Huber and the fact that the follow-up memo of asking for information and further documents was issued, it is my understanding that Ms. Huber's office was not searched by your office or not asked for information dealing with the scope of the subpoena or the document requests?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Oh, no, she was asked.

Senator GRAMS. She was asked. I mean, there was information or you sought files or documents that you thought were pertinent or asked her to provide such files or information?

Ms. SHERBURNE. On October 23rd, we circulated a White House-wide request that I understand did go to Ms. Huber.

I have, since my deposition, learned that there was a telephone call placed specifically to Ms. Huber's office in which there was a specific request to search that office for material that was responsive to our October 23rd request that would have called for these records, if they had been in her office.

Senator GRAMS. So it's just my understanding that the formal memo had not gone to her office officially, and I just thought it was kind of weird that here is a lady that was very close—

Ms. SHERBURNE. Right, and I'm correcting your understanding.

Senator GRAMS. Finally, I would like to talk a little bit quickly before my time runs out about some of the thoughts expressed by the Chairman of the Committee and that the investigation has been criticized by the White House and by partisan supporters and even the Democratic Members of this panel who sit on the Committee, that somehow this is being dragged out for political reasons.

But I think if we look at the delays in getting some of the information, and I know some of the problems dealing with that and you talked about how broad some of the requests have been, but maybe we have now been faulted for maybe narrowing down the requests too much, because when we're dealing with the White-water issues, just an example of redacted information, 60 percent of the notes that Mr. Gearan took that clearly were labeled White-water have been redacted. So have we narrowed our request for information so much that this has all been eliminated?

So if there is Chinese water torture here with the drip drop of information, again it seems to be of the information that this Committee has been getting so slowly. And again, like I have said, we have asked for the needle and seem to have gotten the haystack out of this.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I don't know if Senator Grams was here when this redaction issue came up before, but I think it's extremely important, while he's still here, to make it very clear that it's been indicated to us by Ms. Sherburne that Counsel, as we have done in previous instances, because the Senator also made references to other redactions, that Counsel for the Committee, Majority and Minority, if they wish to do so, go down and examine the unredacted document to ascertain for themselves that the matters that have been redacted were not relevant and that what was redacted were matters not responsive to the Committee's requests.

Now, Ms. Sherburne indicated in her testimony here today—and I'm concerned because I think this particular line of questioning is very unfair to her—that she understood that since you had notes that at the top said Whitewater and then you started going through them and there was subject matter redacted, that one would say well, you know, did everything that were in these notes refer to this heading that was up at the top. And said if Counsel wished to comment, examine, as has been done in the past, they are in effect inviting them to do so. They will have a chance independently to ascertain for themselves that the matters redacted were matters that were not responsive. That's what we have done in previous instances where this issue has arisen and we've been able to get satisfaction, to everyone's satisfaction.

The CHAIRMAN. We will pursue that in that manner, and I must say that we have had some good success. I must also say, and now I would be intruding on the Minority side, but we will pursue that, and hopefully Monday or Tuesday we could set up an appointment to get Counsel to go over those materials.

Ms. SHERBURNE. We could do it this afternoon if you like.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be fine.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. To pick up on questions put to the witness, there had been observations about a tempest in the teapot, and the tempest has sort of spilled over into areas that I don't think Mr. Kendall intended them to be applied to. Your reference to a tempest in a teapot was with respect to what, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. The intrinsic importance, novelty or significance of the billing records, not their discovery but what it is they signify. My point was that much of what was in these billing records was already known, not mysterious. And insofar as there is additional detail provided in the billing records, it's by and large helpful to us in establishing precisely what Mrs. Clinton did and what the Rose Law Firm has done.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So it is fair to say that it is your position that you wished very much to make these documents public so that they could be reviewed by everybody, critically, to determine what their significance is and what their importance is in a relative sense to whatever is the subject of this investigation at the moment?

Mr. KENDALL. Amen.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. If you had given the only document, the original document without making a copy, to the Independent Counsel pursuant to its subpoena, then Rule (6)(E) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure would have prevented Independent Counsel from giving them to anyone else. Then you would be the subject of criticism, would you not, for keeping material of relevance to this Committee's interest from the Committee?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It would be the exact opposite of what has occurred, instead of the uncover-up, this would be a cover-up?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me go to the question of Mr. Gearan's notes. I trust, Ms. Sherburne, that you were not particularly happy to have to add to the things about which you would testify today, the substance of what's in Mr. Gearan's notes?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That would be right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And in that regard, nevertheless, the documents were turned over to us prior to your testimony rather than subsequent to your testimony?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that we could ask you questions about the circumstances of their discovery, which you have answered repeatedly today, and we could have that information?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now with respect to the notes themselves, rather than have them characterized somehow, with respect to Ms. Bassett and the question of the information that she would be in a position to supply, is it fair to say that it was recognized by the writer of these notes that Ms. Bassett was in possession of information that would be useful for the Administration to have repeated?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's what they appear to suggest to me, yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We, of course, have heard from Ms. Bassett for a full day under oath here about all of her contacts with all individuals associated with the Administration in this matter, I believe. With respect to that, Ms. Bassett has testified that she wasn't pressured to do anything improper, either at the time of the representation by the Rose Law Firm or during the 1992 campaign where she made statements about her earlier activity. Is that consistent with your understanding?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Yes, it is.

The CHAIRMAN. We're going to attempt, Ms. Sherburne and Mr. Kendall, to try to wrap this up as quickly as possible. Mr. Chertoff is going to ask some questions and then we'll have an opportunity to wrap up and then we can mercifully have some lunch maybe.

Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to first of all ask both Mr. Kendall and Ms. Sherburne, we're trying to go through the process of eliminating people who might have had the documents before January 4th, so I want to, for your sake as well as for ours, just absolutely confirm positively that the first time you saw the billing records we've been talking about which are before you was on January 4th. That's right, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's right, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. Except for the billing records which are included in this stack of 116 pages which I had previously seen.

Mr. CHERTOFF. There were some that you had seen, but the whole stack you had not seen before?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I would have to caveat my response with the same qualification.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We understand that there are some pages of that, of the bills, that were out previously but the backup detail on the printouts that show the time that was spent on things, that you did not see before January 4th; right, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you didn't see that before January 4th?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It follows from that, Ms. Sherburne, that you did not see these printouts in the Book Room at any time in the White House?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Kendall, that goes for you, too; right?

Mr. KENDALL. I certainly didn't see anything I recognized as this in the Book Room.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I want to just briefly touch on this issue about what these are and the significance of them, very quickly. Mr. Kendall, you're an excellent advocate for your client. I mean, you're going to make a terrific presentation of the point of view that you want to advocate. But just so we're clear, the printouts which actually show the time spent, not the bills that don't show time spent, but the printout that tells you what every attorney did for every part of the matter that we have these records for, that was not public before January 4, 1996?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, it was, because it was in large measure—if you look at the January 30th bills, for example, which were public in the House, that detail on those bills comes straight out of the time detail.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And does it show the time breakdown for each attorney?

Mr. KENDALL. It lists the attorneys. It does not show the time breakdown.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that you can't tell from that bill how much time each attorney spent on each of the matters listed in the bill?

Mr. KENDALL. You can't tell from that bill, but when you go to the fee recap, you can tell with some precision how much time the individual attorneys spent on the various matters.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me be more specific. Was there anything out there before January 4, 1996, that indicated that Mrs. Clinton had made more than a dozen calls or had had more than a dozen telephone conversations or conferences with Seth Ward?

Mr. KENDALL. Yeah, there was evidence that she had been dealing with Mr. Seth Ward on the wet/dry issue and on the sewer regulation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Please answer my question. Was there evidence that she had had, very specifically, at least 12 discussions, either on the telephone or in person, with Seth Ward? Was that out there before January 4th?

Mr. KENDALL. There was not that, but there was evidence from which you could infer discussions and conferences, so it was not a mystery when the billing records were examined.

Mr. CHERTOFF. For example, on February 28th, when there was a call of almost an hour with Seth Ward, concerning the matter listed under IDC, was that fact out there publicly? And I'm saying "publicly" because I don't want to know what you—discussions you had with your client. I want to know publicly and available to this Committee, was there evidence that there was a call of .8 of an hour, almost an hour, on February 28th between Seth Ward and Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. KENDALL. I think it was the March bill that does detail conferences with Seth Ward. It doesn't break it into times.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It doesn't tell you how long the call is, date of the call?

Mr. KENDALL. Tells you the period, the attorneys involved.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Within a month, it doesn't tell you the day; right?

Mr. KENDALL. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was a significant date, Mr. Kendall, because we know February 28th was a date that there was a lot of activity at the savings and loan concerning Mr. Ward and his loans.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chertoff, as you say, we may disagree with the significance of things, but I will accept that, I will accept our disagreement.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You will agree with me that if we wanted to know the days on which contacts were made, the amount of time of the contacts, some of the details of the contacts, these first became available when those records were discovered, the printouts were discovered, on January 4th of this year?

Mr. KENDALL. With the precision of that detail, yes. Generally though, they were. The devil is sometimes in the superstructure, Mr. Chertoff, as well as in the details.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me ask you this, Mr. Kendall. Would you agree with me that the issue of why these documents were not turned over is an important issue?

Mr. KENDALL. I don't think it is a particularly significant issue. It is a mystery. The documents were turned over when they were discovered.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, wait a second. Are you in a position, as you sit here now, to vouch for the fact that the first time that they were discovered by anyone in the White House is on January 4th or even in early August?

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chertoff, I have testified to what I can today about the discovery of the documents.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes. And you only can tell us that when you discovered them, or learned about them on January 4th, you took prompt steps to turn them over. But you will agree with me that if somebody knew about the subpoenas, if somebody knew that the subpoenas, any one of the subpoenas called for these billing records or included these billing records, and if that person had possession or control over the records and didn't turn them over, that that would be a pretty serious matter?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, I think that to posit that, you would have to posit some motive for that person acting in that way, purposefully not to turn over the records.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Kendall—

Mr. KENDALL. I scratch my head, Mr. Chertoff, to think of any reason why a rational person would not have turned over these records.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Kendall, let me attempt in 60 seconds to summarize it again.

Given the testimony of Maggie Williams that she did not take any documents out of there and that all of the documents that were taken out were—except those documents that were turned over to yourself, you didn't have these billing records, then how did they turn up in the residence?

That is why it is not some insignificant, trivial matter, given the history. And let's not try to go through that history. It relates to Ms. Thomases calling Bernie Nussbaum, to the methodology of the investigation being changed, to the Justice Department and the Deputy calling up and saying Bernie, are you hiding something, to finally the production of this. Reasonable people can put their inferences as it relates to what the documents do or don't say, the significance, et cetera, but to say that this is like a meaningless document or production or—it is not.

You just go into the body of fact that cries out and says how did they get there, why were they withheld. They obviously came from Mr. Foster's office, or he certainly had them. At what point in time did they move from his office and under whose direction, and who was the mover to bring them to the White House—

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. —the personal residence?

Mr. KENDALL. The point I made to Mr. Chertoff is that I simply cannot think of a plausible human reason for somebody to hide or secrete them.

The CHAIRMAN. Because let me tell you why. If people have testified with specificity that no documents were taken out of Vincent Foster's office and, indeed, we know that, at the very least, Mr. Foster had control and possession over these documents at some point in time, that goes directly to somebody not being candid and truthful, or the possibility that they were less than candid with this Committee, and with others, under sworn statement. That is obvious.

So when you say you cannot for the life of me, if somebody comes in here and does not want the Committee to know that they took documents out of that room, meaning Vincent Foster's office, that should answer for you why people would not want these to surface.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I don't know of any evidence that these were in Mr. Foster's White House office. As you know for yourself, from having interviewed Mr. Hubbell, there was great confusion at the time of the departure of the four Rose Law Firm partners for Washington, DC. And Mr. Hubbell wound up with documents—

Mr. CHERTOFF. I don't think the testimony is there was confusion, Mr. Kendall. I think the testimony was Mr. Hubbell went about removing certain files from the firm. But I want to ask you this, Ms. Sherburne, you had the insight—and I compliment you for it—on the evening of the 4th, that there was an issue to be considered about whether fingerprints might be of value to the Independent Counsel or someone else who wanted to see who had had possession of the documents; that's correct; right?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You, Mr. Kendall, and Mr. Schuelke discussed it?

Ms. SHERBURNE. That's right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you understood in the course of that discussion, I take it, that the Independent Counsel might want to pursue the question of who had control of the documents, who might have handled the documents, because the Independent Counsel might want to determine whether someone had knowingly failed to comply, had knowingly defied his subpoena?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well, I think what I understood was that the Independent Counsel, and this Committee as well, would want to know why the documents were not produced sooner.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who might have had them and handled them?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It depends on the explanation. I think that night—we still don't know, frankly, don't know the facts. We don't know that they were in Mr. Foster's office, we don't know whether they were stuck in Mr. Foster's office. We don't know a lot.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's right.

Ms. SHERBURNE. What we recognized that night was that there may be some significance attached to how they had been handled.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's exactly right. And even taking this Committee out of it, you will certainly agree with me that one of the people who had the right to make a decision about how to conduct this investigation was Mr. Starr? Mr. Starr would have the responsibility of finding out some of the answers to these questions you've just mentioned; right, about who had the documents, where were they held, who had control over them?

So you understood when you had the discussion with Mr. Kendall that the fingerprints were something that could be of value to Mr. Starr; right, that crossed your mind?

Ms. SHERBURNE. I think that's probably right, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Kendall, that crossed your mind, too; is that right?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now about what time did this discussion occur? Was it around 6 p.m.?

Ms. SHERBURNE. It would have been 6 or 7 p.m.

Mr. KENDALL. I would have said more like 6 p.m.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Between 6 and 7 p.m. did you pick up the phone and try to reach Mr. Starr's office? Recognizing your legitimate concern that you had obligations to produce to a number of places, did you pick up the phone and call Mr. Starr or this Committee or the RTC to ask them whether they had, whether Mr. Starr or anybody else had a desire about how to proceed in terms of preserving the possibility of taking fingerprints? Did you make that call, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you make the call?

Mr. KENDALL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you discuss whether you ought to pick up the phone and call Starr and say look, we've discovered these things, we have obligations to turn them over, we understand that may be an issue with fingerprints, how do you want us to proceed? Did you consider doing that, Ms. Sherburne?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Calling the Committee?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Calling Starr.

Ms. SHERBURNE. Calling Starr, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you consider it, Mr. Kendall?

Mr. KENDALL. We determined the appropriate way to proceed, and that's as we've testified.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you consider that maybe Mr. Starr might have a different view about the appropriate way to proceed?

Mr. KENDALL. I didn't—I considered that what we had to do was to copy the documents and get them out to the various agencies as quickly as possible.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you did this with the consciousness of the fact that that had the potential to contaminate or disturb or in some way alter the documents in terms of the ability to lift fingerprints off?

Mr. KENDALL. I don't think that's true. I think that I did not view this as a forensic question. What little information about fingerprints I have from prior experience suggests that documents are very different than solid objects, such as glasses or metal surfaces.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But I know if there's a print on a piece of paper and you put your hand on top of it and leave another print on top of the first print, it is going to obliterate or obscure the underlying print?

Mr. KENDALL. You don't smudge documentary prints. If they have a latent on it, you don't smudge that print.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you telling us you actually reached an expert conclusion at the time that there wasn't going to be a problem?

Mr. KENDALL. No, I'm not telling you at all. I'm not an expert in fingerprints, Mr. Chertoff. But I'll tell you that it was not, for reasons I've already stated, a forensic question to me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But the question is not whether it was up to you to make the final decision, because by not calling Starr what you did was, you took it out of his hands.

Mr. KENDALL. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. If Mr. Starr believed it was a forensic issue, by the time he learned about the documents the next day, there was nothing he could do about it; right?

Mr. KENDALL. Well, we would have been criticized, Mr. Chertoff, whatever we did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you think you would have been criticized for calling Starr?

Mr. KENDALL. Yeah. You would have criticized us if we had turned over the documents to the Committee or to the Independent Counsel without keeping a copy. You would have said that was an effort to hide the documents, trying to keep them from the public.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, did you call the Committee?

Mr. KENDALL. No, because we determined that we had to make a decision as lawyers, the three of us, on the most appropriate way to proceed under all the circumstances. It is always possible to second-guess those kinds of decisions. That goes with the territory. You do the best you can and you try and make the right decision. And I think that's what we did that night.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. In fairness to Mr. Ben-Veniste, because I'm going to give him the wrap-up and we are going to thank everybody, if you would yield for an observation, and if you want to answer, that is fine.

Again, you did say hindsight, but you see, I think Ms. Sherburne, she was absolutely right in being concerned and raising it. I commend her for also being as candid and truthful as she was both in her deposition and today, and saying look, there's going to be a question, should we do this as it relates to fingerprints. Did it strike you that you could have really met all of the objectives by calling the FBI, telling them to come over?

Ms. SHERBURNE. Well—

The CHAIRMAN. Let me finish and then you can tell us.

Ms. SHERBURNE. We've been criticized for doing that in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. No, no, no, no, only for this.

Ms. SHERBURNE. I'm sorry. It's a visceral reaction.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Calling the FBI or the Secret Service or those people who do have the ability to review the document for fingerprints, all right, make copies with the least impact in terms of the integrity of it, and thereafter turn it over to counsel, advising the Independent Counsel of what you had done. It seems to me that that is something, a course that could have been followed. It wasn't followed, but it could have been. Did you consider that?

Ms. SHERBURNE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean, see, that's where I think reasonable—well, I'm not going to say that. That is another perspective, maybe you did not consider. Ms. Sherburne, you at least considered the question of the fingerprints, but I just raise that, and I thank my colleagues for their indulgence.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. My pleasure, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

With respect to what was done that evening, first of all, did you have some reason to believe that photocopying the documents would remove fingerprints that were on the documents?

Mr. KENDALL. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you have some reason to believe that fingerprints which are already on a document will remain so even though you attempt to remove them?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And indeed, we have had the testimony of a fingerprint expert here before this Committee, Mr. Hupp, I believe, an analyst from the FBI who testified that with respect to porous substances such as paper, that other than actually obliterating the paper, the fingerprints stay.

So I suppose if this issue becomes more focused and it becomes important, we will hear again from the fingerprint expert, but let me go to the observation you made, Mr. Kendall, that the devil is sometimes in the superstructure in addition to the details.

When we look at the billing records themselves and the production of billing records, albeit at a point sometime subsequent to the first request for those records, and we hear the terms "obstruction of justice" bandied about, can you say how someone was obstructed by the production of evidence which we have now seen and analyzed, and reanalyzed, and rereanalyzed?

Mr. KENDALL. I cannot.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And indeed, the distinction which was made earlier between forensic care, if someone believes a crime has been committed, such as murder by knife in the O.J. case, and the O.J. missing knife had somehow turned up in the White House, to use an absurd example—which probably will be picked up by a number of people who write about the conspiracies of Whitewater and weave the O.J. case into it—but if such evidence of a crime is discovered, then one would appreciate that one ought not to touch the instrumentality of the commission of the crime; correct?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Here the underlying event was billing records, not murder, billing records; is that so?

Mr. KENDALL. Sometimes legal billing records are a form of murder, at least the clients think so. But I take your point and I agree with it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It would be a form of murder to have to pore over them as we have all done?

Mr. KENDALL. Very true.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Or to try to glean what significance the billing records of 11 years ago back in Arkansas in connection with the Rose Law Firm's representation of this subsequently failed S&L has to do with the price of eggs.

Anyway, at the point that you made the determination, you were sensitive to not being criticized for somehow shunting the material into a protected corner of the legal system, that is a subpoena which is protected by Grand Jury secrecy from which the recipient of the material, that is the Independent Counsel, would have no choice but to maintain the confidentiality of that material?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes. Part of the quandary was there were legitimate demands by more than one investigative agency for the same records.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So rather than using the biblical solution of dividing the baby in half, you used the modern technique of photocopying the baby?

Mr. KENDALL. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to thank—

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry of Counsel. I'm not clear—and I put it to both Mr. Ben-Veniste and Mr. Chertoff—if these materials had been given to the Independent Counsel who is proceeding with an inquiry with a Grand Jury, would he have then had to hold them?

Mr. CHERTOFF. No. What typically would have happened is this. If you are obliged to send over material to the Grand Jury, as, for example, was the case of the briefcase, which was something you couldn't make a copy of, we would direct the subpoena to the person who originally produced the document. And this is a common thing that's done. I mean, it was done hundreds of times during the years that I was prosecutor, and what would happen is the person would go to the Independent Counsel or authorize the Independent Counsel to release the item to us so that we could look at it or use it or get a copy.

What plainly could have been done without violating any rule of Grand Jury would be to have the person who had the documents notify the Independent Counsel, ask the Independent Counsel themselves either to authorize copying or to do copying so that a copy would be returned.

I will tell you that in cases all over the country where prosecutors pick up documents, either by subpoena or by search warrant even, the person who provides the documents is always entitled to get from the prosecutor a copy of what they produced. It could have been furnished to us, so that there was—the mere contact with the Independent Counsel about these documents and a request directed to the Independent Counsel to make sure there were copies made available to us, would not in any way have been blocked by the rule of Grand Jury secrecy.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, I may have a slightly different take on this, Senator Sarbanes, than my friend, Mr. Chertoff, has. The briefcase which was exhibited here and provided without any documentation or chain of custody was provided because the Independent Counsel said it had no evidentiary value. These records which were the subject of a subpoena presumably have evidentiary value. We think they do. We have no reason to believe the Independent Counsel would not.

Materials which are obtained under Rule (6)(e) privacy, indeed the Independent Counsel has taken the position with respect to requests that we have made jointly in our Committee that it will refuse to provide information to us.

A specific example of that are the notes of the interviews of the very Secret Service employee who has been referred to in connection with his observations on the night of Mr. Foster's suicide. The Independent Counsel has been very strict in guarding the prerogatives of his office and Rule (6)(e). We have made repeated efforts to obtain various information from the Independent Counsel's office, and the (6)(e) confidentiality requirement is the answer that we have received.

Now in hindsight, could there have been some big negotiation to achieve the same ends as were ultimately arrived at, that is that we get copies of the material, Independent Counsel gets them. If they want to perform tests on them, they can do so.

The only thing that I see having occurred is that fingerprints may have been added rather than subtracted from the documents. If the Independent Counsel—and we don't know this—goes through the forensic process of obtaining latent fingerprints from the documents, and people who handled them on the evening of the 4th left fingerprints, then those prints will be found and will be discounted presumably in terms of any evaluation of who had the document.

The point that I think was made is a question of material being turned over, albeit late, what effect has this had on anybody in terms of obstructing any investigation. As far as we can see, it has helped our investigation. We have received the material, we have reviewed it, we have analyzed it, and we will all come to our conclusions about its importance.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to thank Ms. Sherburne and Mr. Kendall for their patience and for their testimony today. I think it was very straightforward, I want to tell you. And again, Ms. Sherburne, we may have certain differences as it relates to the manner in which things are produced. Let me say this to you in order to be fair to you—and I do not expect you to reply, if you want, that's fine—and it is not meant to be challenging, it is meant to say that you represent a client, there are constraints that an attorney has reasonably placed upon him or her as a result of that representation by a client.

So again, I wish that we could have found a better way, better methodology of moving this forward. But I want to assure you of one thing, and I take your statement that you have attempted to comply, that you personally have made every effort to get us documents, to get us information, et cetera, you have made your own individual best effort, I accept it.

But I want you also to know that it has never been the intention of this Committee or anyone that I am aware of to slow this process down. That has just not been the case, so I want you to know that. And if we can help and work together to facilitate, whether it is the production of documents, or whether it is a resolve of disputes that we did—

And I want to commend the Ranking Member and Minority Counsel for working out a methodology that we could get as much done today as we did, instead of raising an issue, or possibly raising an issue that wouldn't serve getting us more facts. We may come down to that at a later time, but that would have just slowed the process down.

So I want to commend the Minority and I want to tell you that we look forward to working with you, really. And you know, just like you can't be held responsible for everything that Mr. X, Y, or Z says in the Administration, et cetera, we all have those kinds of constraints and those kinds of things that we have to deal with in the real world, and this is the real world.

So I share that with you, and thank you for your participation. We're going to adjourn until 2:45 p.m.

[Whereupon, at 2:03 p.m., the hearing was recessed, to be reconvened at 2:45 p.m. this same day.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to ask our witnesses, for purposes of the oath, if they would stand.

[Whereupon, Capricia P. Marshall, Special Assistant to the First Lady, Gary J. Walters, Chief Usher, The White House, and Dennis W. Freemyer, First Assistant Usher, The White House; were called as witnesses and, having first been duly sworn, were examined and testified as follows:]

I want to start by saying we thank the witnesses for coming in, and if there are any statements that you would like to make at this time, we would be very pleased to receive them.

Ms. Marshall.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF CAPRICIA P. MARSHALL SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE FIRST LADY

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I have no statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Walters.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF GARY J. WALTERS CHIEF USHER, THE WHITE HOUSE

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir. I have a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Wonderful. We'd be happy to receive it.

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Chairman, today is a very difficult and uncomfortable day for me personally as well as the current and former members of the Executive Residence/White House staff who serve the Presidency. As a Federal employee with 25 years of White House service, 20 years in the Usher's Office and the last 10 as the Chief Usher, I have as one of my primary duties the privacy of the First Family. They live in a fishbowl, as everyone knows, and our office attempts to preserve the small amount of privacy they still have remaining.

Therefore, it is very unusual and troublesome for me to be thrust forward to speak of the private area of the White House that is the home of our President and his family. The residence staff works in anonymity to serve the Presidency to the best of our ability while striving to maintain the confidentiality of the First Family and their guests.

That having been said, Mr. Chairman, I will to the best of my ability answer the questions of the Committee fully and completely. I would respectfully request that the Committee consider the right of privacy of the First Family in the personal area of the Executive Residence and not release publicly the contents of the logs that identify those guests invited by the First Family into the private areas that compromise their—excuse me, comprise their home. It is my personal belief that this would be an intrusion into the lives of our President, their spouses, and their children that will have enormous effects on past, current, and future first families.

Thank you, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Mr. Walters.

Mr. Freemyer.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF DENNIS W. FREEMYER FIRST ASSISTANT USHER, THE WHITE HOUSE

Mr. FREEMYER. No, sir, I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest that you pull up that microphone. Before I turn to Ms. Fisher, let us understand something. First, we are appreciative of your cooperation, not only in being here, but also in terms of the depositions and your total cooperation. Second, this is an attempt to get the facts. We're not going to ask you to make any assumptions. We're attempting to narrow down and ascertain who may have had access, who did have access, and how the documents came to be where they were found. So it's nothing more than that and certainly as a result of your various positions and duties, that's why you find yourself here, not because of any conduct that we suspect, or surmise, or don't surmise, that you may have been engaged in, certainly no activity that would reflect improperly upon you, your positions, or your work in the White House, so I want you to know that. This is not an adversarial situation, and I want you to feel comfortable with that.

We're going to try to do this as quickly as we possibly can. At any time you feel you need a break, don't hesitate, let us know and we'll break. I want to put you at ease.

Ms. Fisher.

Ms. FISHER. Good afternoon. Ms. Marshall, what is your current position at the White House?

Ms. MARSHALL. I work for Mrs. Clinton as her Personal Assistant.

Ms. FISHER. How long have you held that position?

Ms. MARSHALL. Since January 1993.

Ms. FISHER. Prior to that time, were you working on the 1992 Presidential Campaign?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, I was.

Ms. FISHER. Am I correct that you're an attorney as well?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, I graduated from law school, yes.

Ms. FISHER. What are your duties as Special Assistant to the First Lady?

Ms. MARSHALL. I have a variety of duties. I primarily follow Mrs. Clinton from morning until evening. I bring her to various meetings. I make sure that people attend certain meetings. In addition, I may substitute for certain staff members if we're going on a trip and a staff member is unable to accompany Mrs. Clinton on a trip. I will substitute for the Logistics Trip Director or possibly another person on that trip. On trips of long duration, I will accompany Mrs. Clinton and assist her with any sort of staff duties that she may need.

Ms. FISHER. I think you testified at your deposition that you are basically a shadow of the First Lady; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, I basically am. In addition to that, I also help with follow-up after trips—and certain gifts and correspondence and things like that.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, I believe you said that you've been the Chief Usher for the last 10 years?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. Could you give us a little idea of what your duties and responsibilities are as Chief Usher.

Mr. WALTERS. Chief Usher of the White House has a staff of 88 persons who take care of the Executive Residence in its three primary duties; first, as the home of the President and his family; second, as the office and a site for official and ceremonial events of the Presidency; and third, as a museum that's open to the public throughout the year.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Freemyer, what is your present position at the White House?

Mr. FREEMYER. I'm an Assistant Usher.

Ms. FISHER. How long have you held that position?

Mr. FREEMYER. Since January 1986.

Ms. FISHER. Can you give us an idea of what your duties and responsibilities are?

Mr. FREEMYER. I am the First Assistant to Mr. Walters. I am also responsible for the maintenance and upkeep of the residence and supervise those members of our staff that participate in that. I also have project management responsibilities for ongoing design efforts and construction projects, major construction projects.

Ms. FISHER. Do you have architecture in your background?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, I do. I have a degree in architecture.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, am I correct that the First Family's private quarters are located on the second and third floor of the White House residence?

Mr. WALTERS. Their private quarters, that's correct.

Ms. FISHER. I would like to ask for a blueprint of the third floor of the residence be put up on the Elmo. I believe you might have one in your packet there.

Mr. Freemyer, I would like to ask you, what are the possible ways in which one could gain access to the third floor of the White House residence?

Mr. FREEMYER. There is a stairwell that runs from the basement all the way up to the third floor. There is also two elevators that essentially run from the same place, from the basement to the third floor. The other possibility would be from outside; that would require accessing the roof.

Ms. FISHER. If someone is admitted to the second floor of the residence, then they could take either the elevator or the stairs up to the third floor?

Mr. FREEMYER. There would be a total of two stairs that would connect the second floor to the third floor as well as two elevators.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, the Secret Service keeps a log of entries into the second and third floor of the residence; correct?

Mr. WALTERS. To the best of my knowledge, yes, it does.

Ms. FISHER. Your office also keeps an informal log—

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. —of entries? And do I understand it correctly that there are basically three categories of individuals who have unrestricted access to the White House residence meaning they don't have to log in when they enter?

Mr. WALTERS. Well, they don't actually log in. They are logged in by the individuals who see them and interact with them.

Ms. FISHER. Who are those individuals?

Mr. WALTERS. Well, certainly the First Family, their guests and there are a limited number of staff to the President and the First Lady who have access to those areas.

Ms. FISHER. The overnight guests at the White House residence, they are put on the Secret Service log; is that correct?

Mr. WALTERS. To the best of my knowledge, yes, and they are also issued a pass.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Freemyer, I would like to direct your attention again to the blueprint that is on the Elmo and ask you to look at the southwest corner to the room that's marked 319A?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, ma'am.

Ms. FISHER. Am I correct that that is the room that is commonly referred to as the Book Room?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, it is.

Ms. FISHER. And could you describe the possible entrances into this room?

Mr. FREEMYER. There is an entrance from a hallway directly to the north. There is also an entrance from what is marked on this drawing as the corridor directly to the east.

Ms. FISHER. There's a door in between the Main Hallway and the Book Room. Is that an automatic closing door, or is that a door that generally stands open?

Mr. FREEMYER. Most of the time, that door is closed. I believe it does have a closer on it, but I'm not certain of that.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, do you know if there's an automatic closing on that door?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes. If I could, the diagram that I'm looking at has a partial coloration on half of the room 319A, not the entire room. There are actually two doors from that center corridor that open into that room. Both have automatic closers on them from the central corridor but one of those doors is commonly blocked by material, file cabinets. Various items have been in front of that door. It's the southernmost door of those two that is the accessible door but as you indicated, they both have automatic closers on them.

Senator SARBANES. Which is the front of the White House on this diagram?

Mr. WALTERS. Sir, the north side of the White House as I am looking at these is at the bottom of this floor plan. The room that is marked "Sun Room" is at the south of the building.

Senator SARBANES. All right. Thank you.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, the room that's marked 323, could you describe what that room is?

Mr. WALTERS. That room is currently Mrs. Clinton's office.

Ms. FISHER. Am I correct that prior to the time when Mrs. Clinton started using that as her office, Ms. Huber on occasion used that as her office?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. Ms. Marshall, I'd like to direct your attention to July and August 1995. Did you work in the Book Room at that time?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, I did.

Ms. FISHER. Did you consider yourself the primary user of that room?

Ms. MARSHALL. I was the person mainly in that room, yes.

Ms. FISHER. And that room is kitty-corner to what has just been described as the First Lady's office; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, it is.

Ms. FISHER. The entrances to those two rooms are about 8 feet apart; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. I'm not very good at—

Ms. FISHER. Approximately?

Ms. MARSHALL. I guess approximately.

Ms. FISHER. During the period of time, July and August of 1995, when you were the primary user of the Book Room, was that during the time that Mrs. Clinton was working on her book in the room that's been marked 323?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, I am the person who uses the room most often all the time. So it's not just during that specific time that I was a primary user. But when Mrs. Clinton was up there writing her book, there was—most of the occasions I was up there as well.

Ms. FISHER. Was she up there on a regular basis during July and August of 1995?

Ms. MARSHALL. I don't know what a regular basis really is, but she was up there on occasion during certain points and more often than others.

Ms. FISHER. Do you have a specific recollection during this period of time about how often she would be using the office?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I don't have a specific recollection as to how often.

Ms. FISHER. Could you describe for us generally the layout of the Book Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. What the room looks like?

Ms. FISHER. Yes.

Ms. MARSHALL. Do you want me to refer to the diagram that is part of this packet as well?

Ms. FISHER. There is a diagram. If I could ask that it be put on the Elmo, and it's a diagram that was prepared by staff from the depositions we have taken and the different drawings that people have made. If there's any corrections that you have—

Ms. MARSHALL. I have my diagram that I drew as well that is part of this packet.

Ms. FISHER. We tried to make a clearer composite of your diagram.

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, it is not the way that I would have drawn it because the table, for instance, doesn't sit in the middle of the room. It's closer to the bookshelves that are on the west wall.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that the table is not centered in the room, but it is a little closer to the bookshelves?

Ms. MARSHALL. It is actually just flush against the bookshelves. It is just against them.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, really? OK. We'll note that your observation is at the time that you have spent and obviously you spend a great deal of time there, that the table is closer—you say it's flush; right?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Which bookshelves are you talking about?

Ms. MARSHALL. The west wall.

The CHAIRMAN. It says "bookshelves" on the bottom?

Ms. MARSHALL. And there's a little telephone area there.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Ms. MARSHALL. If I could, can I refer off of mine because this one just seems kind of odd to me.

Ms. FISHER. Can we put her diagram up on the Elmo, please.

The CHAIRMAN. I tell you, it looks like something I would draw.

[Laughter.]

Ms. MARSHALL. I did not go to architecture or drawing school, so this is to the best of my ability.

Senator SARBANES. I am prepared to assume that you drew this diagram.

Ms. MARSHALL. I did draw this diagram.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Looks like a lawyer's diagram.

Ms. FISHER. Can you describe basically what's in the room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes. Basically what is in the room, if we start on the west wall, there are bookshelves. And this is during the time period of July, August 1995.

Ms. FISHER. Yes, that's correct.

Ms. MARSHALL. I put in the things that seemed to, in my recollection, be in the room at that time. There are bookshelves on the west wall and those are filled with various picture books, history books, and some larger books; and next to it, to the right of it, is a freestanding sort of connected table, and on top of that is a typewriter. A typewriter has been there most of the time. The telephone sits on there. There was sort of a Christmas candle that has been there for a long period of time.

And as we go around the room, there's an entranceway into the Linen Room where most of the linens are kept for both public and private functions, also some steaming and ironing goes on in that room. Then on the south side of the room are some more bookshelves and those again are stacked with various books, and the bottom part of the shelf there was some cassette tapes and a broken cassette holder, little black box cassette holder that was broken for some time, and underneath it there was a box filled with books and various other items.

Next to that was a cart, a rolling cart that has Chelsea's old computer on it, and on the bottom shelf there was that old printout computer paper with the holes on the side. Next to that is the entrance to the Exercise Room. You have to sort of go through two corridors to actually get to the actual exercise area.

Then on the east wall is another bookshelf and again, it has a variety of books, history books, and I think that there are psychology books on those shelves. And underneath there, there's some more boxes—not underneath, but against those shelves there's some more boxes. There was a box there and a lamp, one of those lamps where the light goes upward.

Ms. FISHER. OK.

Ms. MARSHALL. Then you reach the entrance into the Main Hallway. That's the one door that Gary was referring to.

Ms. FISHER. Is there an automatic closer on that door or does that door generally stand open?

Ms. MARSHALL. Sometimes we prop it open with one of those little wooden wedge things, but if you didn't, it would close.

Ms. FISHER. Besides yourself, during the period of July and August 1995, who else used the Book Room on a regular basis?

Ms. MARSHALL. Who used the Book Room on a regular basis?

Ms. FISHER. Yes.

Ms. MARSHALL. People just pass through. It is more like a passageway. People would walk through from the hallway that leads to the secondary elevator out to the Main Hallway or into the Exercise Room or into the Linen Room. It's more used as a passageway.

Ms. FISHER. So basically, for example, there would be construction workers that would pass through the room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Oh, yes.

Ms. FISHER. And the residence staff?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Ms. FISHER. And possibly house guests and the First Family?

Ms. MARSHALL. House guests, friends of house guests, family, friends of family.

Ms. FISHER. Other than passing through the Book Room, was anyone else working there on a regular basis or have a reason to be there on a regular basis?

Ms. MARSHALL. Not that I can recall, no.

Ms. FISHER. I'd like to ask you, Mr. Freemyer, a couple questions about the construction workers and the outside contractors that were there in the summer of 1995. There was some construction work going on in the residence at that period of time, wasn't there?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, there was.

Ms. FISHER. The construction workers or the outside contractors who were working in the residence, these individuals had to check in with your staff before entering the residence; correct?

Mr. FREEMYER. They would check with the National Park Service initially who administers the major construction projects. They, in turn, would check with us and request admission into certain areas to accomplish work.

Ms. FISHER. Those individuals would be escorted by Secret Service Officers—

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. —into the residence?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes.

Ms. FISHER. Your staff is responsible for ensuring that these outside contractors and construction workers do not touch or disturb materials in the residence; is that correct?

Mr. FREEMYER. Our staff aids in that. The Secret Service really provides the escorting service and they have a responsibility, certainly, to keep an eye on the construction workers. Our staff does very little of the actual escorting.

Ms. FISHER. Your staff would give these workers an orientation talk, I believe you described that in your deposition, and tell them things about such as confidentiality concerns for the First Family's privacy?

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. And that would include telling them not to remove documents or to pick-up documents or to move documents from one place to another?

Mr. FREEMYER. Every construction project we do an orientation speech, if you will, and the idea is to sensitize the worker to the historic aspect of where they're working, ask them to be sensitive to the First Family, that they live there, that it's their home, to ask them to use common sense in terms of the language they might use, the way they conduct themselves, and certainly to not look at anything beyond what they need to accomplish their work.

Ms. FISHER. And not to move any documents from one place to another?

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. They must get authorization to move anything?

Mr. FREEMYER. They're not allowed to move anything.

Ms. FISHER. Even a magazine, for example?

Mr. FREEMYER. Even a magazine.

Ms. FISHER. In addition, they couldn't bring anything like a pile of documents into the residence; is that correct?

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. In fact, I believe you testified at your deposition that violation of this would be cause for removal?

Mr. FREEMYER. If somebody did something that was that serious, yes, absolutely.

Ms. FISHER. Now, Mr. Walters, you oversee the White House residence staff; is that correct?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. And do you give the White House residence staff a similar orientation talk about confidentiality concerns and moving materials around in the White House residence?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct. I do that specifically before we hire anybody.

Ms. FISHER. Am I correct that moving documents around in the residence without specific direction would be cause for dismissal?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. That would include placing a document somewhere or moving it from one place to another.

Mr. WALTERS. Unless they were directed to do so, yes.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, I believe that you testified at your deposition that it would be highly unlikely that the residence staff would place records or documents into the Book Room without specific direction; is that correct?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Freemyer, would you also say it would be highly unlikely for the outside contractors or construction workers to place documents somewhere in the residence?

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Ms. FISHER. I would like to direct your attention to these Rose Law Firm billing records. And specifically, Ms. Marshall, do you recall seeing these records prior to January 1996, these records?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I do not.

Ms. FISHER. Did you put these records into the Book Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I did not.

Ms. FISHER. Did you move them around the Book Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. I haven't ever seen them before.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Walters, prior to January 1996, did you ever see these Rose Law Firm billing records in the White House residence?

Mr. WALTERS. No, I did not.

Ms. FISHER. Did you put these documents into the Book Room?

Mr. WALTERS. No, I did not.

Ms. FISHER. Mr. Freemyer, prior to January 1996, did you ever see these Rose Law Firm billing records?

Mr. FREEMYER. No, I did not, but I believe it was actually February.

Ms. FISHER. February 1996 when you saw them?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, just this week.

Ms. FISHER. But you did not put these documents into the Book Room, did you?

Mr. FREEMYER. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Marshall, the Exercise Room leads off the Book Room; right?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, it does.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who uses the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. A variety of people use the Exercise Room. House guests when they spend the night and sometimes when they have friends in, they'll use the Exercise Room—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me stop you. When you say when they have friends, you mean when the house guests have friends in?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Or when the Clintons have friends in?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, both. When the house guests' friends are over and when the Clintons' friends are in, they will use the Exercise Room. The Exercise Room is pretty much available to just about anyone who wants to use it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, no, you don't really want to say that. That's not available to tourists.

Ms. MARSHALL. House guests who are in the room, friends of house guests, family members, friends of family members.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you say "family members," you mean Clinton family members?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So these would be people who are in the area at the specific invitation of the Clintons?

Ms. MARSHALL. Who are on the third and second floor, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But in terms of the use of the Exercise Room, the people who would be using the Exercise Room are people who are guests or friends who are invited in by the Clintons?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's not something, for example, that people who are working on the staff go up and use the Exercise Room there?

Ms. MARSHALL. There have been staff members who have used the Exercise Room.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At the invitation of the Clintons or do they come and go as they please in the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. They have asked on occasion if they can use it, but not on the specific occasion that they do use it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's always whoever goes in and out is someone—I mean, this is the personal area in which the Clintons live; right?

Ms. MARSHALL. The second and third floor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, that is the personal residence of the First Family.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is the Exercise Room that is available to the Clintons if they want to use it?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, it is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is not the White House gym, which is a different type, in a different location, for the use of the general staff at the White House?

Ms. MARSHALL. It is not the White House gym, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I would like to ask Mr. Freemyer—I'm sorry, Mr. Walters, I would like to put up Deposition Exhibit 1 from Huber. Do you have that in front of you?

Mr. WALTERS. I do, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were shown this in your deposition. Do you remember that?

Mr. WALTERS. I don't believe I was, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm sorry, I've got the wrong one. I meant to show you the original sketch we put up, which was the one that the staff put together. I don't know if we have a number for it. OK, you have this one in front of you?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir. This document is one that's been changed from the one that I saw in the deposition.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What is the difference?

Mr. WALTERS. The dimensions of the room have been changed, and some of the changes that I made to that drawing are also made on here, giving a directional compass, if you will, north, east, south, and west.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you were shown an earlier draft of this chart and you made some suggestions about changes and this incorporates your suggestions about changes?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. To be quite clear, so we are going to eliminate again people who might have put or moved records there. Ms. Marshall, you did not take billing records and put them on the table in the Book Room, did you?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Walters, you didn't put billing records on the table in the Book Room, did you?

Mr. WALTERS. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Freemyer, you didn't put billing records on the table in the Book Room?

Mr. FREEMYER. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm going to direct this to Mr. Walters and Mr. Freemyer, the construction workers who were in the vicinity in the White House during the summer of 1995 would have been under specific instructions not to simply move documents or to take documents that were in the White House from one place or the other?

Mr. FREEMYER. That would have been their instructions.

Mr. WALTERS. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That would also be the standing instruction for all members of the executive staff such as the butlers or the people who perform maintenance services or other things in the White House; is that right?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Mr. FREEMYER. Right.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That instruction also extends to not taking documents in from outside and leaving them in the White House?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. To do that is to put yourself at risk of being fired; right?

Mr. FREEMYER. Absolutely.

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Chairman, I'm going to forbear, but I'm very tempted to ask each of these witnesses whether they put billing records on the table in the Book Room just in order to get it clear here. I don't know how many times we have to ask that question and get an answer to it.

Ms. Marshall, I wasn't clear on one answer you gave. Did you say that staff, on occasion, used the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir, I did.

Senator SARBANES. If I were a staff person there who used the Exercise Room, would I have to get permission every time I did it, or would I sort of ask once and then be able to use the Exercise Room thereafter?

Ms. MARSHALL. Ask once and then be able to use the Exercise Room when available when you have time.

Senator SARBANES. When it didn't conflict with anybody else?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. So there would be staff who could use the Exercise Room or who were using the Exercise Room, but may have asked some time ago for permission to do so; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Who would they ask permission of?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, they might come to me and ask me to ask the First Family or might ask them directly.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Ms. Marshall, I understand that there had been some degree of renovation and work done at the White House during the summer of 1995; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, it is.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Could you give us a summary of what that work entailed?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, there are two projects that I recall specifically while I was working in the Book Room: One was reconstruction—part of the HVAC system. They had to gain access through a cubbyhole in the Exercise Room, "they" being the construction workers. They had to move a TV console out of the way. They went down into this cubbyhole area, and I only recall that specifically because the wallpaper, I believe, was ripped a little bit so we had to replace the wallpaper. They were in there for a bit of time.

The other project that I recall is in the Book Room. I was sitting in the Book Room, and you would hear all the time this very loud noise above you while the construction workers were walking and drilling and doing their various duties. And this one time I heard a very loud noise above me, and all of a sudden paint chips and plaster chips started to fall on my head and I ran out of the room. I went downstairs and I told the Ushers that the ceiling was coming in, and I got very nervous because I thought one of the guys was going to fall in on me. And if you saw these guys, they are pretty big, they are big construction workers—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have seen construction workers, yes, and most of them are big.

Ms. MARSHALL. No one ever came through, thank goodness, but there was paint and plaster chips and they had to repair this hole that was in the ceiling.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When was that?

Ms. MARSHALL. Latter part of July.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We had that here, too, the sensation that the sky was falling from time to time. But yours was more literal, I take it?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Things were going bump there at the White House with the—when you say HVAC, the heating, ventilation, and the air conditioning system, as we understand from Ms. Huber's testimony, had to be replaced or renovated or something was going on with that; is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Walters, could you be more specific about what work was actually being done or should I ask Mr. Freemyer?

Mr. WALTERS. We are both very familiar with it. It has been going on now for 2½ years. It's a replacement of the Executive Residence heating, ventilating, and air conditioning system that dates back to the 1950's to the renovation of the house. It's that entire system that's being replaced, which entails some type of activity in almost every area of the White House.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So during the summer months of 1995, there was some dislocation concerning these renovations that were being made?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The considerable amount of noise and the incident Ms. Marshall has described, I take it you're familiar with?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir. I think it is a little bit larger in Ms. Marshall's mind—

Ms. MARSHALL. He wasn't there. I was. It certainly seemed as though someone was coming through.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I guess the sensation of having the ceiling fall on you is more real when you experience it than if it's described to you. But in any event, there were things being moved around. There was dislocation. I think Ms. Huber said that a closet which had been previously accessible had to be walled off and taken for purposes of locating a duct there?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Where was that vis-à-vis Carolyn Huber's work space?

Mr. WALTERS. The closet was what was referred to earlier as Mrs. Clinton's office. It's in the northeast corner of that room.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is that the same closet—have you been following these proceedings that have been going on for some while, is that the same closet where Ms. Huber had directed that certain documents be stored?

Mr. WALTERS. I do not know that, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you know, Ms. Marshall?

Ms. MARSHALL. That Ms. Huber directed certain documents—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That the documents which Ms. Huber directed be stored in a closet, was it the same closet that was taken by this HVAC—

Ms. MARSHALL. I know Ms. Huber at some point had filed boxes in that closet.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that closet, OK.

Can you tell us your observations of Ms. Huber's use of the Book Room during the summer of 1995?

Ms. MARSHALL. Me?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yes.

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, I can't say with any exact recollection if she was ever in the room. She may have passed through the room, but while I was working in there, I don't recall her doing any specific work at all.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What was that table used for?

Ms. MARSHALL. The table—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In the Book Room.

Ms. MARSHALL. There are two actually. There's a cart generally that's rolled in and it could be a flatbed cart or it could be a two-tiered cart, and that generally has follow-up things on it, things from trips, and I mostly use that cart. The table that's against the bookshelves has books stacked on it, newspaper clippings, magazines, things of that sort. Most of the items on there are more Carolyn's library project. She was trying to put together a library system in the Book Room and throughout the house; and from what I understand, it's not completed yet.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that Ms. Huber had occasion in the summer of 1995 to use that table sort of as a staging area or collection area for her projects?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Can you tell us the general condition of that table and the area around it?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, my scratch marks on my diagram sort of show, I think, to a certain degree that it was a messy table. It had things piled. There weren't exactly stacked—if you can make it out, that's a table against that wall. And those are books and magazines and newspaper things—newspaper items, and there were boxes that were underneath. Those as well were filled with books and newspaper items and clips and things of that sort. And around it, generally when gifts or follow-up items would come off the road or be sent over from the West Wing or from the gift unit, those are put in bags and sort of set around the room.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the general condition of the room, would you say that this was a neat and tidy room, or was it one which was often found in disarray?

Ms. MARSHALL. I would say it is one that is often found in disarray. You can compare it to your mud room. It's the place where you put things down while you're passing on through and you say I am going to get back to that stuff in a few minutes or hopefully a few days and, you know, fix it up and tidy it up, but to sort of place stuff down there for a while.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So was it a place of sort of transition, materials would come and go?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, but they would come and go for a variety of reasons. Whenever there was a project going on in another room, if there was something that was taking place in the room that is referred to now as Mrs. Clinton's office, all the items, boxes were being moved into the Book Room so that construction and things of that sort could go on in that room. If something was happening in the Book Room, all the items might be moved out and moved into another room. That was sort of how boxes and items were handled around there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I guess anyone who has lived through a renovation would know the process of moving from one place to another and another as the work was being completed. And this, Mr. Walters, was going on for some considerable period of time, right?

Mr. WALTERS. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was there ever a period of time that you recall in 1995 where this table was sort of cleared off, that there was a period of orderliness?

Ms. MARSHALL. In all of 1995 or July and August 1995?

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, July and August.

Ms. MARSHALL. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. How about earlier in the year?

Ms. MARSHALL. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We are told that the Book Room was then appropriated for use in connection with the actual writing of a book?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is that correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, two different meanings.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The Book Room then had a double meaning?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And at that point, a new cast of characters was introduced into that room and we probably don't need to deal with that further, but I take it the character of what was going on in there changed at that point as it was assigned to the use of additional people?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a couple of quick ones. Do you know when the book writer started to use that room, Mr. Freemyer?

Mr. FREEMYER. I'm sorry, could you repeat that, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know when the book writers, the people who were helping prepare Mrs. Clinton's book, when they started to use that room?

Mr. FREEMYER. I don't recall specifically. I think probably June, July, somewhere in that area, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose I said early August.

Mr. FREEMYER. Pardon me?

The CHAIRMAN. Were they using that room in early August?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And I think we'll find that that is the case, but we can try to establish that later. I don't think it is a great point here, but we'll get to that.

Mr. Walters, have you ever seen any other staff members, other than Ms. Marshall, use the Exercise Room?

Mr. WALTERS. No, I've never seen any other members use that.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Freemyer, have you ever seen any other staff members other than Ms. Marshall use the Exercise Room?

Mr. FREEMYER. No, sir, I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Marshall, you indicated that other staffers use the Exercise Room. You are not suggesting on a regular basis, are you?

Ms. MARSHALL. Again, I don't know what a regular basis is—

The CHAIRMAN. Once a week, twice a week?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, what I suggested is that it is open and available if they request to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. No, you didn't say that. You said that staffers use the Exercise Room.

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm going to get a little more specific now. What other staffers and how often do they use them? Do you know a staffer or staffers who use the Exercise Room on a regular basis, twice a week, three times a week? Do you know of any?

Ms. MARSHALL. I did, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who did you know who used it on a regular basis?

Ms. MARSHALL. There was a staff person who—

The CHAIRMAN. Who?

Ms. MARSHALL. A staff person by the name of Helen Dickey.

The CHAIRMAN. When did Ms. Dickey use the Exercise Room? Is this regular that she used the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes. She regularly used the Exercise Room.

The CHAIRMAN. How often?

Ms. MARSHALL. I don't know how often but certain evenings when I was up in that area, she would be up there on the treadmill or on the bike.

The CHAIRMAN. Did she use it in August 1995?

Ms. MARSHALL. I don't recall—no, I don't recall.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not customary for the staff to use the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Is it customary for all staff?

The CHAIRMAN. For staff. I want to ascertain, you are one of the staff and you have used the Exercise Room; correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. On a regular basis; correct?

Ms. MARSHALL. When I get the opportunity, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So we've established that you're one of those, but we've also established through your testimony that you did not see the papers so you couldn't have put the papers there; right?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, who else, what other staffers used the Exercise Room that you know of, and do you know of any who used it during August?

Ms. MARSHALL. I can't state with any specificity any staff that used it during August.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. See, Ms. Dickey, I think it's important—

Ms. MARSHALL. I'm Ms. Marshall.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Marshall, excuse me. I think it's important that we be careful because what we're attempting to do is to find out who actually did have access, but who did come into the room. We know that construction workers came in, but they were under strict supervision and there were orders as to what they could and couldn't move with the threat or with the proviso of dismissal, and we know who worked for the Ushers, et cetera, similarly were instructed.

But you see, if we leave it open, that all staff has access, then we create something that if indeed you had one person, Helen

Dickey, who's used—and she may or may not have used it. You're not sure whether she used it in August. We'll ascertain from her. But you saw her use it, but you're not aware of any other staff during August——

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. During a 2-week period of time from the beginning to the second week in August, are you aware of any guest who may have used the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. I can't state names with specificity, but there were guests, house guests going in and out.

The CHAIRMAN. There were house guests, but you're not certain which, if any, of them used the Exercise Room?

Ms. MARSHALL. Well, I know there were house guests going back and forth, and I can hear the whirring of the various machines, but I didn't go back there to see exactly who was on the treadmill or who exactly was on——

The CHAIRMAN. Would that hold true—you knew there were guests and you could hear—and I am trying to be a little specific here——

Ms. MARSHALL. Sure.

The CHAIRMAN. —and you heard the exercise machine going, the treadmill. Did you know they were a guest, or could it have been Mr. Clinton or Mrs. Clinton?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I don't know with any certainty, but it was generally during the middle of the day when I was doing my work and Mrs. Clinton—if I was up there, Mrs. Clinton would be in her office, so it wouldn't seem as though Mrs. Clinton would be back there exercising.

The CHAIRMAN. We'll get the log and with some specificity as it relates to guests in July and August and we'll then begin to examine those who may have used the Exercise Room. But again, I think the universe of people we're talking about who may have had opportunity to use this was bigger than those who actually did, and even that universe is quite small.

What is the distance between the main door to the Book Room and the door to the Exercise Room, if you were to approximate?

Ms. MARSHALL. Again, I'm not very good at distances.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask our architect, Mr. Freemyer. Would you give us——

Mr. FREEMYER. I would say it's about 6 feet, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Six feet. All right. Well, I think you've answered all our questions. But let me ask you one other question. You don't have any idea or any knowledge as to who put the documents on the table, do you, Ms. Marshall?

Ms. MARSHALL. No, I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Walters, the same thing.

Mr. WALTERS. No, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. I know we asked you directly, but I am going to ask you, Mr. Freemyer.

Mr. FREEMYER. No, sir, I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not going to pursue this. I think we have eliminated certainly the three of you. We have eliminated people that you may have knowledge of who were in the vicinity who may have indicated to you somehow or some knowledge to you—how it must have gone in there. I think the construction workers we can fairly, safely assume that it was highly unlikely that they would have put a document there. The executive staff at the residence, I think, is rather unlikely given the incredible restrictions. I mean, they are told if you move papers, is that right, without order, Mr. Freemyer, that's a subject you can be dismissed for?

Mr. FREEMYER. Yes, sir, they know not to move things.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Walters, the same with people under your charge?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That's embodied in them, that's part and parcel of their creed?

Mr. WALTERS. Unless they're instructed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to thank you.

Senator SARBANES. I have one question. Mr. Freemyer, when the Chairman said the construction workers are under strict supervision or strict scrutiny, what do we mean by that?

Mr. FREEMYER. I believe what he means and what I would mean by that is that the construction workers are escorted by the Secret Service at all times when they're performing work in the residence, so there is actually a person there observing the workers while they are working.

Senator SARBANES. Suppose you have three or four workers working in two or three rooms. You have a Secret Service person with each worker?

Mr. FREEMYER. It would really depend on the nature of the work. Sometimes there would be multiple escorts. Sometimes there might be a single escort and he would position himself between the two areas of work where he could observe them simultaneously.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That would be a function of what resources were available and what jobs were being done?

Mr. FREEMYER. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now, Ms. Marshall, did you ever notice that despite the creed of the construction workers at the White House, that things got moved from time to time during this construction process?

Ms. MARSHALL. Yes, I think it's sort of the necessity of what was going on.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the issue is not whether things were moved around. It's a question of whether people were observed, whether there was discussion with other supervisory personnel about moving the objects and then moving them back, but there is no question that things got moved around during this period of time?

Mr. WALTERS. If I can, Mr. Ben-Veniste, the thing that needs to be made clear, I think, is the things that were removed were being moved by the appropriate people, by either our staff who are charged with moving the historic furniture or pieces of personal belongings or whatever is in that area. A construction worker would not just come up and move something.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did Ms. Huber from time to time direct people to move things around as far as you recall, Mr. Walters?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes. She requested us to move things for her at times.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further.

The CHAIRMAN. All residence staff do have security clearances?

Mr. WALTERS. Yes, sir, that's my understanding from the Secret Service and the White House Security Office.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Grams, did you have any questions?
Senator GRAMS. No, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to thank the witnesses for their cooperation and for their testimony. It is important, because again, we are attempting to ascertain how did the papers come there and by eliminating, and I think it's absolutely safe with respect to all three of you, we eliminate the three of you and I think it is safe to conclude that staff would not accidentally place these documents. They are given the strict prohibitions and limitations and directions and constraints that they have operated on over the years, so we have to try to do the best we can to narrow the universe down. But I want to thank you for your cooperation, and I also make note of the fact that we get out of here with some degree of humanity. We have a little bit left in the day, and I want to——

Senator SARBANES. Bring on the next panel, Mr. Chairman.
[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. I want to commend my colleague because I believe were it not for his insightfulness earlier in the day, we would have been here much later, still with the first panel, and not gotten nearly the cooperation or the information that we have, and would have been bogged down. So I thank Senator Sarbanes and Mr. Ben-Veniste for your very helpful suggestions in how to deal with our first panel.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. We stand in recess until Tuesday at 10:30 a.m. [Whereupon, at 3:50 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10:30 a.m., on Tuesday, February 13, 1996.]

(117) things that she was collecting in that room to bring
(118) back over to her East Wing office to sort through,
(119) and determine what to do with.
(120) And then she said, and she said she hadn't
(121) looked at them. Then at some point she said she knew
(122) they were Madison records or she knew they were Rose

Page 16

(11) Law Firm records.
(12) And so we asked her, and I don't remember
(13) who exactly was doing the questions, we were all
(14) talking to her.

(15) Q Did she indicate when she knew they were
(16) Rose Law Firm records?

(17) A Well, I'm about to get to that.
(18) First she said she didn't look at them.
(19) she just threw them in the box.
(20) Then she said something about them knowing
(21) at the time that they were Rose Law Firm records.
(22) So we asked her, wait a minute. I thought
(23) you didn't look at them. You know, did you look at
(24) them then?

(25) And she said, well, having been the office
(26) manager of the Rose Law Firm. I know what Rose Law

(27) Firm records look like, so I looked at them long
(28) enough to identify them as Rose Law Firm records.
(29) And I threw them in the box. But she said I didn't
(30) look at them long enough to realize that they were
(31) Madison billing records from '85 and '86.
(32) So this conversation is occurring, you

Page 17

(11) know, between the time we got there and the time we
(12) moved into the next room. And had started going
(13) through the records.

(14) She's going through them page by page.

(15) Q Did she say anything about the records as
(16) she was going through them page by page?

(17) A She pointed out the red handwriting and
(18) identified that as Foster's handwriting. She
(19) identified, she observed that everything about the
(20) records was a copy except the original handwriting of
(21) Vince Foster.

(22) And she observed that some of the
(23) handwriting was Mrs. Clinton's that appeared to have

(24) been placed there at the time the bills were prepared
(25) in '85 or '86.

(26) She may have identified other handwriting
(27) on the bills but I don't remember. There may have
(28) been a bookkeeper or somebody like that whose
(29) handwriting she recognized that again looked like it
(30) would have been placed on there in '85 or '86.
(31) We looked at the materials for awhile.

(32) Then I suggested to Kendall and Schuelke that we step

Page 18

(11) out in the hallway for a minute and talk about what
(12) to do.

(13) I talked about whether we should copy the
(14) records, or whether there may be some interest in the
(15) records that should require us to do something with
(16) them before we copied them.

(17) We discussed that for awhile, and then
(18) concluded that because the records were under
(19) subpoena by two different entities, maybe three, I
(20) think the RTC had an outstanding subpoena as well,
(21) and because they contained new information that
(22) needed to be examined, that it was important to get
(23) the copies made.

(24) We talked about who should produce the
(25) records. Whether Schuelke should, whether the White

(26) House should, or whether Kendall should. We talked
(27) about that for, you know, ten minutes or so, and
(28) concluded that Kendall would produce the records.

(29) Q You mentioned there was discussion of
(30) doing something prior to copying the records. Do you
(31) recall precisely what that something would be?

(32) A Well, I asked the question whether these

Page 19

(11) records were records that there may be some interest
(12) in fingerprinting at some point, and should we, you
(13) know, reserve on copying or handling them. And that
(14) was the question that we discussed and then decided
(15) that the competing demands for these documents, as
(16) well as the obligation to the clients to analyze
(17) them, were compelling and we ought to get them copied

(18) promptly and turn them over as quickly as possible to
(19) the Independent Counsel.

(20) Q Was there any discussion of notifying the
(21) Independent Counsel and asking the Independent
(22) Counsel whether steps should be taken to preserve the
(23) records with a minimum of fingerprints on them,
(24) smudging and fingerprints?

(25) A No.

(26) Q Okay, go ahead with the narrative.

(27) A I can't remember where I left off.

(28) Q You were discussing the copying of the
(29) records, and you decided that the countervailing
(30) considerations required -

(31) MR. WITTEN: That's not where she left
(32) off. That's what she answered in response to your

Page 20

(11) question.

(12) THE WITNESS: I think I was trying to
(13) remember what else we discussed.

(14) Oh, we discussed whether we could get them
(15) copied fast enough that night to turn them over to at
(16) least the Independent Counsel that night.

(17) I believe you got a full-sized set of
(18) those documents as we began the copying process,
(19) which you know happened in a different segment of
(20) this evening. It became clear that we couldn't get
(21) that whole process completed that night, but when we

Jane C. Sherburne, Esq.
 Special Counsel to the President
 The White House
 Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Jane:

This follows up on our meeting of yesterday regarding the status of the White House's efforts to respond to the Special Committee's August 25, 1995 document request:

1. You have advised us that the White House will not be able to produce documents by the September 7, 1995 return date specified in the Committee's August 25th request. As we discussed, any delay by the White House in producing documents will impact negatively on the Special Committee's ability to conclude its investigation by February 1996. You have agreed to provide an estimate to the Special Committee of when the White House will be able to produce all documents responsive to the Committee's August 25th request. The Committee had hoped to begin depositions by mid-September.

2. The scope of the next round of hearings will almost certainly include matters specified in both Sections 1(b)(2) and (b) (3) of Senate Resolution 120. The Special Committee will not be in a position to determine which (b)(3) matters will be covered until after we have begun to review documents and to take depositions. It is therefore essential that the White House begin to produce documents responsive to both (b)(2) and (b)(3) matters as promptly as possible. As we discussed, requests (a) through (e) in the Committee's August 25th request correspond roughly to the matters specified in Section (b)(2) of Senate Resolution 120, and requests (f) through (l) correspond to (b)(3) matters.

3. You asked for further clarification of requests (a), (b), (e) and (h) of the Special Committee's August 25th document request. Documents responsive to requests (a) and (b) would include, inter alia, any and all records, within the possession, custody or control of the White House, regardless of format, including, but not limited to, e-mail, electronic "dump files," memoranda, correspondence, notes, and records in any other medium, including drafts of any of the foregoing, that reflect, refer or relate to:

(a) any information gathered, prepared or developed by any employee, consultant or agent of the Resolution Trust Corporation ("RTC") relating to Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association ("Madison") or Whitewater Development Corporation ("Whitewater");

(b) any actual or potential RTC criminal referral relating to Madison or Whitewater, including, but not limited to, any communication, contact or meeting relating to any actual or potential RTC criminal referral relating to Madison or Whitewater;

(c) any actual or potential RTC civil action relating to Madison or Whitewater, including, but not limited to, any communication, contact or meeting relating to any actual or potential RTC civil action relating to Madison or Whitewater; or

(d) any communication, contact or meeting between January 20, 1993 and August 5, 1994, including, but not limited to, all records of telephone conversations or wire communications, relating to any subject, between:

(i) President William Jefferson Clinton, Hillary Rodham Clinton, or any present or former member of the White House staff, and

(ii) any present or former employee of the RTC, Lisa Aunspaugh, Dennie Beard, George Betts, Tom Butler, Paula Casey, Andrew Clark, Don Denton, John Flake, any present or former employee of Frost & Co., J.W. Fulbright, Eugene Harris, Bill Henley, David Henley, Jim Henley, Webster Hubbell, Marlin Jackson, Charles James, Jerry Jones, Dan Lasater, John Latham, any present or former employee of Maple Creek Farms, James McDougal, Lorene McDougal, Susan McDougal, Wali Muhammed, Sheffield Nelson, Robert Palmer, Judy Peacock, Charles J. Peacock III, R.D. Randolph, Beverly Bassett Schaffer, Mike Smith, Jim Guy Tucker, Chris Wade, Larry Wallace, Seth Ward, Betsey Wright, and Greg Young.

4. Documents responsive to request (e) would include, inter alia, any and all records, within the possession, custody or control of the White House, regardless of format, including, but not limited to, e-mail, electronic "dump files," memoranda, correspondence, notes, and records in any other medium, including drafts of any of the foregoing, that reflect, refer or relate to:

(a) any communication, contact or meeting, including, but not limited to, all records of telephone conversations or wire communications, between any present or former employee of the White House and any other person, including, but not limited to, the Department of the Treasury, the Office of Government Ethics ("OGE") or the RTC, relating to the report of the OGE to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 31, 1994 (the "OGE Report"), regarding White House-Treasury contacts concerning the RTC's resolution of Madison, and related transcripts of depositions conducted by the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury; or

(b) all records of telephone or wire communications, including, but not limited to, phone logs, copies of message pads, and electronic or written records, relating to communications between June 1, 1994, and August 5, 1994, between members of the Office of the White House Counsel and any employee of the Department of Treasury (including, but not limited to, the Department's Inspector General) or the Office of Government Ethics.

5. Documents responsive to request (h) would include, inter alia, any and all records, within the possession, custody or control of the White House, regardless of format, including, but not limited to, e-mail, electronic "dump files," memoranda, correspondence, notes, and records in any other medium, including drafts of any of the foregoing, that reflect, refer or relate to:

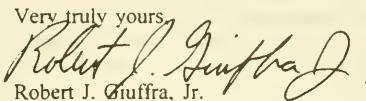

(a) the Rose Law Firm's representation of Madison; or

(b) the Rose Law Firm's representation of the RTC with regard to Madison.

To the extent that you require further clarification of any of the Special Committee's other requests, please let me know.

Very truly yours,

Robert Giuffra, Chief Counsel
United States Senate
Special Committee to Investigate Whitewater
Development Corporation and Related Matters
534 Dirksen Building
Washington, D.C. 20510-6075

Dear Bob:

Let's review the bidding: as far as we are aware, the White House has nearly completed its response to the Chairman's August 25, 1995 document request, and your subsequent expansions of his original request. Our compliance does not include certain material about which there had been outstanding cut-off date issues that were only resolved in your letter of October 17, 1995 or the new requests made in your October 17 letter. Although your October 17 letter raises new issues that require further discussion, we anticipate we will have essentially completed our response to it by October 30. To date, we have produced nearly 8,500 pages of White House records to the Committee.

You have made it extraordinarily difficult to accomplish this result. From the Chairman's original request made three months after the Senate adopted Sen. Res 120, you have led us through a thoroughly confusing labyrinth of embellishments, qualifications, and elaborations. Keeping pace with your shifting and expanding requests has consumed hundreds, if not thousands, of hours of work on the part of White House staff.

The cut-off date stated in your October 17 letter enables us to finish our response to the Chairman's original request. Your October 17 letter provides an answer to our longstanding request for a workable cut-off date with respect to documents related to (b)(3) of the Resolution, the so-called "Arkansas Issues." In fact, your cut-off date was precisely what we proposed to you during our meeting on September 21, 1995. Needless to say, had you agreed to the cut-off date then instead of nearly a month later, we would be that much farther along in getting you what you want.

Robert Giuffra, Chief Counsel
 October 23, 1995

Nonetheless, while waiting for your response to this question, we went ahead and provided the Committee more than 2,000 pages of primary source material that we had located in the White House (in addition to the material made public by the House Banking Committee this summer) related to the Arkansas Issues. With the benefit of the cut-off date, we will now begin production of materials prepared by White House staff related to the Arkansas Issues. If there are such materials that we would prefer to discuss with you before production, we will identify them on a log. As stated above, we are aiming to provide this material to you by Monday, October 30, 1995 -- which would be less than two weeks from the date you identified the cut-off date.

Your October 17 letter also responded to our longstanding request for guidance on an appropriate cut-off date with respect to documents related to (b)(2) of the Resolution, the so-called "Washington Issues." Again, while awaiting your response, we have been providing (to the extent the Committee did not already have it from White House document productions made in the summer of 1994) material created before March 4, 1994 that is responsive to Paragraphs (a) through (d) of the Chairman's August 25, 1995 request. We have asserted no privilege with respect to any of this material.

The August 5, 1994 cut-off date proposed in your recent letter, captures material created from March 4, 1994 (the date the Independent Counsel issued subpoenas to the White House for White House-Treasury "contacts" records) to the last day of the Committee's hearings on White House-Treasury contacts (also the date that Judge Starr was appointed to replace Robert Fiske as Independent Counsel). During this time period, the White House conducted an internal review of White House-Treasury contacts, prepared for Congressional hearings on that subject and responded to requests from the Independent Counsel. Given the sensitive and privileged nature of the material created in connection with each of these activities, we believe it appropriate to discuss whether the request can be narrowed in a manner that provides the Committee an opportunity to review the material necessary for its inquiry without compromising Executive functions.

Your October 17 request for all responsive documents, up to the present moment, found in the files of the President, Mrs. Clinton, Lloyd Cutler (presumably while he was White House Counsel), Bruce Lindsey, and Margaret Williams is puzzling. Any material created after August 5, 1994 (to the extent such material even exists) would necessarily be a retrospective on the conduct that is the subject of the Committee's inquiry -- all of which occurred prior to August 5, 1994 -- and have no probative value.

October 23, 1995

As you know, I have requested a meeting for Tuesday, October 24 with Mr. Chertoff and Mr. Ben-Veniste to discuss these requests and other issues raised by your October 17 letter. I am confident that good faith discussions about this material will produce an acceptable accommodation that satisfies the Committee's legitimate needs.

Sincerely yours,

INVESTIGATION OF WHITEWATER DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS

---

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1996

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE WHITEWATER
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RELATED MATTERS,
Washington, DC.

The Committee met at 10:39 a.m., in room 216 of the Hart Senate Office Building, Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (Chairman of the Committee) presiding.

OPENING COMMENTS OF CHAIRMAN ALFONSE M. D'AMATO

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will come to order.

Do we have our witnesses?

The CLERK. They're on the way up.

The CHAIRMAN. While we are waiting for the witnesses, I will ask Senator Sarbanes if he has any opening remarks or comments that he would like to make at this time.

Senator SARBANES. No, thanks.

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Hernreich, Mr. Bratton, would you stand for the purposes of taking the oath, please.

[Whereupon, Nancy Hernreich, Deputy Assistant to the President & Director of Oval Office Operations; and Sam I. Bratton, Chairman, Arkansas Public Service Commission; were called as witnesses and, having first been duly sworn, were examined and testified as follows:]

The CHAIRMAN. Ms. Hernreich and Mr. Bratton, if you have any statement that you would like to give to the Committee before we start, we would be very pleased to receive it.

Ms. Hernreich.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF NANCY HERNREICH DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT & DIRECTOR OF OVAL OFFICE OPERATIONS FORMER SCHEDULING SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't, Mr. Chairman.

SWORN TESTIMONY OF SAM I. BRATTON, JR. CHAIRMAN, ARKANSAS PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION FORMER COUNSEL TO THE GOVERNOR

Mr. BRATTON. I don't, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will turn to Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRATTON, what's your current position?

Mr. BRATTON. I am Chairman of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Hernreich, what's your current position?

Ms. HERNREICH. I am Deputy Assistant to the President and Director of Oval Office Operations.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I want to direct your attention to the mid-1980's, in particular, the period from 1984 to 1987. Mr. Bratton, what was your job then?

Mr. BRATTON. I was Counsel for Legal and Financial Policy in Governor Clinton's staff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Hernreich, what was your position during that period of time?

Ms. HERNREICH. Starting in 1985, I was the Scheduling Secretary for Governor Bill Clinton.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, Mr. Bratton, I want to direct your attention to 1985. Did you know a person by the name of Beverly Bassett?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. She was the Arkansas Securities Commissioner starting in 1985?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, she was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did she report to you?

Mr. BRATTON. I was the liaison in the Governor's office with the Securities Department, among other agencies.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Her responsibilities included regulating savings and loans?

Mr. BRATTON. She had the responsibility to enforce the Arkansas savings and loan statutes, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And she reported to you from time to time on her activities; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In 1985, did she make you aware of the fact that there had been a proposal on behalf of Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan to issue preferred stock?

Mr. BRATTON. At this point, I don't have a specific recollection that she did so. I think she probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you familiar in 1985 with Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. BRATTON. Generally.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew it was a savings and loan operated by Jim McDougal?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know who Jim McDougal was?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Had you known Mr. McDougal personally?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. McDougal had been on Governor Clinton's staff for a brief period of time in 1979. I was also on the staff at that time. I knew him then.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you overlapped with him in terms of serving with Governor Clinton?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you also learn during 1985 and 1986 that Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan had trouble in terms of its capital?

Mr. BRATTON. I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And needed to get more money?

Mr. BRATTON. I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you discuss that with the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. I am sure I probably made him aware that the Securities Department through Ms. Bassett had passed that information on to me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was his reaction?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall specifically.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember how many times you talked to Mr. Clinton about Madison during the period 1985 to 1986?

Mr. BRATTON. Probably several times, but I don't have any idea how many.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now in the summer of 1986, you got word from Beverly Bassett that the Federal regulators were taking a serious look at throwing Mr. McDougal out of the savings and loan; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, she sent you a handwritten memo to that effect?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Have you seen that memo recently?

Mr. BRATTON. That memo was shown to me during a deposition on the 5th of January.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm going to ask that we put it up briefly on the Elmo and we're putting a copy before you. This is dated July 2, 1986. We've seen this before in the hearings. Do you recognize this to be a note that Beverly Bassett sent you on July 2 relating to Madison Guaranty?

Mr. BRATTON. At this point, I do not specifically recall having received it, but I'm sure I probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you talk to Ms. Bassett about this?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe that she and I had a phone conversation either prior to her sending me the memo or probably after she sent the memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you talk to the Governor about this?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably either had a conversation with him or sent him a short memo that would have summarized the information that had been passed on to me by Beverly Bassett Schaffer.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you understand that the Governor had a relationship with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. BRATTON. I knew that he knew Mr. McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you received this memo, what was your impression or your understanding of the significance of the phrase, "Because of Bill's relationship with McDougal, we probably ought to talk about it"?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that I had any particular reaction to that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it customary in your position as one of the counsels to the Governor to get notice from regulators about possible regulatory action that might affect somebody because of their relationship with the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. It was common practice for agency directors that I had liaison responsibilities with to notify me if they were taking action that they thought would be of interest or of concern to the Governor, without regard to whether it was limited to someone he might know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, this is not, of course, a reference to something that has a public policy impact. The memo specifically put in terms of Bill's relationship with McDougal, which you understood to be a personal relationship; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I understood that Governor Clinton knew Mr. McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you also know that the Rose Law Firm was doing work for Madison?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe I had a general impression that Rose had done some work for the savings and loan.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that Mrs. Clinton was a partner at the Rose Law Firm?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you learn in the summer of 1986 that the Federal Home Loan Bank Board had insisted that McDougal be relieved of his position at the savings and loan?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you report that to the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm sure I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember his reaction?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I would like to direct your attention to early 1987. I want you to bear in mind that as of that point in time, you had learned about, as you have described to us, some of the issues with Madison involving the capitalization, that you learned that Madison and McDougal had been in trouble with regulators and you had learned that McDougal had been essentially kicked out of the savings and loan. Do you remember early in 1987, that there was the veto of a water and sewer regulatory bill known as Bill Number 1780?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I'm aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was a bill that would have essentially created an exception that would allow a particular utility in the Little Rock area, specifically in the one called Castle Sewer and Water, to hook up to certain customers without having to be regulated by the Public Service Commission; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. It would have deregulated from PSC jurisdiction a very narrowly defined class of water companies. Whether there was more than one, I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you recommend the veto on the original bill?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you did it because you thought it was too narrowly tailored to a particular company?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, I recommended that it be vetoed because it was unconstitutional, in violation of a provision in the State Constitution that prohibited what is referred to as special and local legislation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Meaning that it's tailored to too specific a locality as opposed to generally applicable?

Mr. BRATTON. Generally.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At the time you recommended the veto, were you aware the legislation had been designed specifically to assist Castle Sewer and Water Corporation?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I was aware what entity was described in the bill.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I would like to put up a memo dated February 24, 1987, to a Mike Wilson from Jim Guy Tucker, and it is entitled "Proposed Legislation for Castle Sewer and Water Corporation." The first paragraph says, "Attached is a proposed bill designed to take care of a problem of both Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Castle Sewer and Water Corporation." Have you seen this memorandum before?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I know of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was Mike Wilson?

Mr. BRATTON. Mike Wilson is a State Representative, and I believe he was ultimately the sponsor of the legislation that we are discussing.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It is this legislation, this initial effort, that you recommended the Governor veto and that the Governor did veto; is that correct? You can take a look at the bill.

[Witness reviewed the document.]

Mr. BRATTON. Without comparing them word for word, I cannot say it is exactly what was the legislation we vetoed. It seems to be very similar.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And again, at the time that you recommended the veto, you didn't know that this had any particular connection with Castle Sewer and Water; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I do not have any recollection of knowing that—what entity it might have been connected to.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you learned sometime after the veto that Mr. R. D. Randolph was upset about the veto; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is R. D. Randolph?

Mr. BRATTON. He apparently owned Castle Sewer and Water at that time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know whether Mr. Tucker also had an interest in Castle Sewer and Water?

Mr. BRATTON. I did not know at that time whether Mr. Tucker had an interest in it or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Had you heard at the time that a man by the name of David Hale had an interest in Castle Sewer and Water?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you did know Mr. Randolph had an interest in it?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did you learn that Mr. Randolph was upset about the veto?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe I had a conversation with Mr. Randolph in which he expressed his concern about the veto of the legislation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did he tell you?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall specifically, and I'm not sure that I had a conversation with Randolph. I have a general impression that I did. I may have learned about his being upset about it from some other way, but I think that Mr. Randolph probably called the Governor's office to inquire about the veto of the legislation and that I probably talked to him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you understood that the nature of Mr. Randolph's concern wasn't a disinterested issue about policy; it had to do with his particular interest in Castle Sewer and Water?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to put up a memo that is dated April 14th, to BC from NH with a cc to SB 4/15. Have you seen this before, Mr. Bratton?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume that I probably saw it in the time frame contemporaneous to what we're talking about. I don't specifically recall it. I was shown this memorandum during my deposition on January 5th.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Hernreich, the initials "NH," do you recognize those to be your initials?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And do you specifically remember preparing this memo?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I do not remember preparing this memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Having looked at the memo and having seen your initials, do you believe it was you who typed the memo?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember the conversation with Mr. Randolph?

Ms. HERNREICH. Vaguely. Since I've seen this memo, then I have a vague recollection of a conversation, but that is extremely fuzzy after all these years.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember him being angry?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Am I correct that it was your practice when you typed a memo like this to make an accurate record of what was said to you?

Ms. HERNREICH. I tried to, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was your job?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, Mr. Bratton, I want to direct your attention first of all to the date of the memo. Do you remember whether you talked to Mr. Randolph before or after this memo was written?

Mr. BRATTON. If I talked to Mr. Randolph, it was probably before this memorandum. As I say, I'm not sure that I did talk to him. I think it is quite likely that he called the office and talked to me about the veto, was not satisfied with our conversation and then came by in an effort to see the Governor directly. That is my general recollection of what I think is likely to have happened, although I do not have a specific recollection that that did happen.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to direct your attention to the text of the memo. I take it that you will acknowledge that you are—it's essentially virtually certain you saw this memo; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The memo reads, "Mr. Randolph dropped by to see you this morning to talk to you about the Water Bill you vetoed. He said that he talked to you on Sunday morning." I guess, the "you" there would be Mr. Clinton?

Ms. HERNREICH. I'm sorry?

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is addressed to Bill Clinton?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You write, "Mr. Randolph dropped by to see you this morning to talk to you about the Water Bill you vetoed. He said that he talked to you" and the "you" there would be Governor Clinton?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. "On Sunday morning. He wants to know if the veto is going to stand. He would like you to call Jim Guy Tucker about this. He said that he has a difficult time getting an answer from you. He mentioned a meeting between you, Tucker, and Jim McDougal a couple of years ago which involved $33,000. This was pretty cryptic." Do you remember that portion of the discussion?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I do not remember that portion of the discussion.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton, when you got the memo and you saw that, what was your reaction to the fact that Mr. Randolph had in the middle of this discussion about the veto brought up a meeting between himself, Tucker, and McDougal that involved the Governor and $33,000?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any specific recollection of having received the memo, so I don't have any recollection of what reaction, if any, I would have had to any part of it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Does it look to you, looking at this memo, as if Mr. Randolph was pretty crudely communicating the idea that there was some issue in which he had provided $33,000 that he wanted to remind the Governor about in connection with this veto?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no idea what Mr. Randolph was trying to communicate.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was part of your job, Mr. Bratton, to protect the Governor against people who might come in and essentially say things to the effect of "I've given you money, now you owe me this"? Was that part of your job?

Mr. BRATTON. I would assume that was probably part of the responsibility of everybody on the Governor's staff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you don't have a recollection of reacting to this statement about the $33,000?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I do not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that in April 1985, there had been a fundraiser where approximately $33,000 had been raised to retire Governor Clinton's debt from a 1984 campaign?

Mr. BRATTON. I know that now. I don't recall whether I was aware of it at the time the fundraiser occurred or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would it refresh your memory if I told you that in the course of that fundraiser, thousands of dollars were raised for Mr. Clinton to retire this personal debt, including checks from Mr. Randolph and Mr. Tucker?

Mr. BRATTON. No, it would not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would it refresh your memory if I told you that Mr. McDougal held the fundraiser at Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan?

Mr. BRATTON. As I indicated, I am aware now that that occurred. I don't believe that I made any connection between that fundraiser and any reference in this memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Governor wound up speaking to Mr. Randolph, didn't he, Mr. Bratton? After you spoke to Mr. Randolph, didn't the Governor wind up speaking to Mr. Randolph?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know whether he did or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Isn't it your impression that he wasn't, Mr. Randolph wasn't satisfied with his discussion with you and he went on to talk to the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. It is my general recollection that that is probably what he wanted to do. I don't know whether he actually had a conversation with the Governor or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the Governor tell you to find out more facts about this transaction?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, I want to show you a document marked DKSX 18009 which we're going to put right in front of you. It's undated, looks like it's on a Post-it, and it says, "Ask Sam again. Be sure Walker has been called." Do you recognize the handwriting?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know, was there a Representative Walker who was involved in this legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. He had—there was a member of the Arkansas General Assembly named Bill Walker who had some interest in this legislation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. After you talked to Mr. Randolph, did you come to learn that Madison Guaranty was involved, had a specific interest in this whole issue about the veto and the water bill?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was the first time you learned it; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That is my recollection.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood from your previous dealings with Beverly Bassett that Madison was an institution which had had a troubled history; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You understood that McDougal had been kicked out of the institution?

Mr. BRATTON. I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that the Rose Law Firm had done work for Madison?

Mr. BRATTON. It was my impression that they had done some work for Madison.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you understood in connection with the veto that this was a transaction of great interest to Mr. Randolph, to Mr. Tucker, and to Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. I was aware that it was of great interest to Mr. Randolph and to Madison. I believe it was my impression at the time that Mr. Tucker was serving as counsel for one or more of the parties who were interested in the transaction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to show you a letter dated April 24, 1987, from Mr. Tucker directed to Governor Clinton. Was it your typical practice, when you were counsel working on a matter, to get copies from the Governor of correspondence relating to the matter?

Mr. BRATTON. That would normally be the situation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. After your conversation with Mr. Randolph, you were essentially assigned by the Governor to, as you testified earlier, develop more facts relating to the transaction; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct, but again, I am not positive that I did have a conversation with Mr. Randolph. I may have learned that he was upset about it in some other manner. I think I probably talked to him, but I'm not positive I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Can I ask you something? Prior to this line of questioning, Mr. Chertoff asked you about this memo to Bill Clinton from NH, NH is Ms. Hernreich; is that right?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. "Re: R. D. Randolph's Visit" on the bottom left, what does that say? Did you prepare that, Ms. Hernreich?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that your handwriting or Governor Clinton's there, cc?

Ms. HERNREICH. That's my handwriting.

The CHAIRMAN. So that meant that you sent Mr. Bratton a copy of this; right?

Ms. HERNREICH. I assume so. That's what it indicates, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You sent him a carbon copy?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. He's Governor's counsel?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You would typically in some kind of a manner of this type, some dispute, some irate constituent, whatnot, who had the ability to walk into the Governor's office, you would send to his counsel this kind of thing, wouldn't you?

Ms. HERNREICH. Well, in this case, it appears that I sent it to him after I had prepared the memo and sent it through to the Governor.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you sent it to the Governor, the Governor then sends it back to you; right?

Ms. HERNREICH. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. What does he write there? Is that his handwriting?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, it is. It says, "ugh."

The CHAIRMAN. That's a little arrow; right?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That refers to "needs to call Tucker," and that's why he goes "ugh," huh?

Ms. HERNREICH. I assume so. I don't really know if that's specifically what he was saying "ugh" about.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it's "ugh." OK. And then what does he say after that?

Ms. HERNREICH. He doesn't say anything after that.

The CHAIRMAN. What's that handwriting underneath? What does that say?

Ms. HERNREICH. It says, "See if Sam will call him."

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Sam?

Ms. HERNREICH. Sam Bratton.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do, Mr. Bratton?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe I called Mr. Tucker.

The CHAIRMAN. You remember this? This is not an uneventful, usual kind of thing that you get. Do you usually get this on a weekly basis?

Mr. BRATTON. During a legislative session, we would have people upset about something on an hourly basis, and I had the responsibility of calling an awful lot of them, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, really. This kind of thing? This kind of memo? Referring to $33,000?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know what the reference to $33,000 was at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you blind, deaf and dumb? Take a look at that. Now take a look at it.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir, I have looked at it.

The CHAIRMAN. Read what it says. Look, when you tell me that you don't remember, I mean, are you really saying that you don't remember?

Mr. BRATTON. Do I specifically remember, independent of having seen this memorandum, what happened on a daily basis about this legislation 8 years ago? No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I'm not asking you about a daily basis. I'm asking you about something which would appear to have—this has ramifications. "See if Sam will call him." Did you call him?

Mr. BRATTON. Did I call who, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Who is it talking about?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe it is talking about Mr. Tucker, and I apparently did call Mr. Tucker because I subsequently prepared a memorandum to the Governor that contained information that I got from a telephone call with Mr. Tucker, perhaps two telephone calls with Mr. Tucker.

The CHAIRMAN. So you did follow up and you did call him?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton, I would like to go to this letter of April 24th to Governor Clinton from Mr. Tucker. The fourth paragraph there at the bottom begins, "R. D. Randolph, Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, and I were all very disappointed that this non-controversial bill was vetoed." You have a copy of this letter?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did it strike you as interesting that the writer of the letter should make a point of saying that both Mr. Randolph and Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan were very disappointed by the veto?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you go in to the Governor at this point and say, "Governor, there might be a problem here, because your wife's firm has done work for Madison Guaranty, McDougal had a relationship with you in the past, he was tossed out of the bank, there are all kinds of problems with the savings and loan."? Did you give him any kind of a warning or suggest to him he might want to walk softly on this issue?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall what conversations that I may have had specifically with the Governor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have no recollection?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you didn't see anything about this Madison Guaranty and Randolph's mention of $33,000 that raised a warning flag for you?

Mr. BRATTON. I had no idea what the reference to $33,000 was at the time, to the best of my recollection, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask Mr. Tucker?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask Mr. Randolph?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ask Governor Clinton?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Governor Clinton say to you, "Sam, there's a reference to $33,000, I have no idea what this is about."?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you assume the Governor knew what the reference was about?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume that he probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you didn't want to push it anymore?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall that I asked him and I don't believe he told me.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you saw Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan on this letter, that didn't ring a bell or raise a warning flag, either; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall specifically having seen this letter, although I'm sure I probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Three days later, on April 27, 1987, there's a letter written to the new lawyers who were representing the Federal regulators who were now supervising or taking a more intensive role in supervising the savings and loan. It is a letter from Jim Guy Tucker that reads, "Dear Jeff, Governor Clinton vetoed H.B. 1780. He has told R. D. Randolph and the sponsors that the veto was an error he will correct if there is a special legislative session." Was the veto an error, Mr. Bratton?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure what is meant by the reference to the veto being an error. I have no reason to think that the veto was an error.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the Governor tell you before April 27th that he considered the veto an error?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you part of the discussion that the Governor had with Mr. Randolph and the sponsors in which he indicated the veto was an error?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall being present with any conversation that the Governor had with Mr. Randolph.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you get a copy of this letter?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the Governor tell you he had spoken to Mr. Randolph and said the veto was an error?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe he ever told me that he had told Mr. Randolph that the veto was an error.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, you indicated that you were asked to do some research and get more of the facts together on this; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You prepared a memo for Governor Clinton in May on this; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I would like to put up your memo dated May 19, 1987, "To: Governor, From: Sam, Subject: Sewer District Regulation Legislation." At the time that you pulled together your research on this legislation, were you aware that the Rose Law Firm had been specifically asked in 1986 to do legal research on this very issue, whether there could be an extension of the utility to certain individuals who were not within the particular development that the utility serviced?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that Mrs. Clinton herself had reviewed a memo of legal advice, indicating to Madison that they had a certain ability to extend their utility operations?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the Governor ever mention that to you?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's get into your memo here. This is something you wrote yourself; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was based on your conversations with Tucker; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tucker told you that the company had been sold to a company organized by R. D. Randolph to acquire the water and sewer utility?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what the memo says.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know at the time that this transaction was part of a larger series of transactions involving IDC that have been subsequently characterized by regulators as—actually had already been characterized by regulators as fictitious transactions?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I was aware of any of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It goes on to say at the end of the first paragraph, "Madison Guaranty is the mortgage holder. Therefore, in Tucker's opinion, the mortgage is invalid as the utility had not filed for regulation and obtained approval of the mortgage." Is that what Tucker told you?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume it is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that a lawyer at the Rose Law Firm by the name of R. Davis Thomas had in October 1985, at the time of the original transaction, done research on what approvals, permits, et cetera, are necessary to operate sewer and water facilities?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that another lawyer at the firm by the name of Rick Donovan had written a memo on February 17, 1986, to Hillary Clinton, indicating that there could be potential problems if the water and sewer utility in this location didn't submit to regulation by the Public Services Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think I was aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Tucker then went on in the third paragraph on the first page to indicate to you what the implications were of this problem he was having. He says:

If the legislation exempting certain water and sewer companies from PSC regulation is not enacted in the Special Session, litigation will probably be initiated between Madison Guaranty and the company owning the utility and that the initiation of litigation between those two parties would likely negate the possibility of the utility expanding its operation through any sort of arrangements with the City of Wrightsville. I assume the litigation would result because of the question of the validity of the mortgage.

So you understood from Mr. Tucker that if this legislation fix were not passed, the whole mortgage that underlay the transaction would suddenly be opened up to litigation; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what the memorandum says.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And was that an issue that was of concern to the State in an official capacity, whether there would be litigation between two private parties on a mortgage?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you put it in there?

Mr. BRATTON. Because it was part of the information about the background of the legislation, why it had been introduced in the first place, which was what I had been asked to provide the Governor was in essence a history of the legislation and what the parties' interests in it were and what the concerns were, which is what I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But this litigation between private parties over this mortgage would not be a public policy issue; right?

Mr. BRATTON. No, it would not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But it might be of interest to the lawyers or the people who were involved in the original transaction; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume it would be of great interest to the parties to the transaction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me finish this sentence. "And the fact that the S&L is now being operated under the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal, et al." Why did you put that phrase in? Why was that significant?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't specifically recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it to communicate the fact that because Mr. McDougal was no longer in control of the institution, he could no longer be counted on in terms of whether he would take certain steps in the litigation?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall specifically what information I was provided that led me to include that sentence.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, I mean, looking at it logically, you're preparing a memo for the Governor in terms of deciding what position he wants to take on letting the legislation be resubmitted in an upcoming Special Session. And I take it it was the Governor who had to designate the items on the agenda for the Special Session; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So if the Governor didn't say yes to putting this on the list for the Special Session, it wasn't going anywhere in the Special Session?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And Tucker told you that he had a whole set of arrangements, business arrangements, in terms of refinancing his utility, that depended upon the passage of this legislation; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that he told me he had a whole set of refinancing—I don't recall being told anything beyond what's set out in the memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What he told you and what you made note of was that there would be litigation about the validity of the mortgage and that the S&L was no longer being operated and controlled by McDougal, but it was now under the close scrutiny of the regulators. You put that in the memo; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was your decision to put it in?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why did you put it in?

Mr. BRATTON. It is possible that what I was suggesting there is that since the utility had originally been owned by the S&L and had been sold by the S&L, that while it was under McDougal's control, that McDougal might have been less likely to initiate litigation involving the mortgage than the regulators might have been.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you couldn't count on McDougal anymore because McDougal was out of the savings and loan; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not sure what you mean by "Count on McDougal."

Mr. CHERTOFF. In other words, McDougal would no longer be at the savings and loan to control whether there was litigation; right?

Mr. BRATTON. McDougal was no longer at the S&L.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew when you wrote this that the Rose Firm had done work for the savings and loan; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I knew that the Rose Firm had done some work for the S&L. I had no idea whether the Rose Firm had done any work that had to do with any of these transactions.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that there was, as Ms. Bassett said, a special relationship between McDougal and the Governor; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I knew that the Governor and Jim McDougal knew each other and had known each other for a good while.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me ask one last question. My time is up. We will come back to this. On the next page, you say in the memo, you talked to Robert Johnston, who was the head of the PSC, right, Public Service Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He would have to review the proposal?

Mr. BRATTON. He wouldn't have had to review the proposal, but it would have been my practice to talk with Johnston or someone at the PSC, if there was legislation that involved PSC jurisdiction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You said in the memo, "I did tell Robert" that's Johnston, "that I thought you" and "you" is the Governor here; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You said, "Would be inclined to try to be of some help in resolving this problem." Is that true? Did you tell Mr. Johnston that?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume I told Mr. Johnston that if I reported that in the memo. I don't recall the specifics of my conversation with Mr. Johnston, but I assume that's what I told him if that's what I wrote at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I yield to Mr. Ben-Veniste.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Senator SIMON. Senator Sarbanes, I'm going to have to leave. If I could just have 1 minute, first of all.

Senator SARBANES. Certainly.

OPENING COMMENT OF SENATOR PAUL SIMON

Senator SIMON. I think it is significant that Governor Clinton vetoed a bill that Madison Savings & Loan wanted. That, in itself, is significant. I would just like to ask Mr. Bratton this question: At any point, did Governor Clinton, in relation to this legislation, do anything that you would consider either illegal or unethical?

Mr. BRATTON. No, Senator.

Senator SIMON. I thank you.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Bratton, let me pick up on the theme of Senator Simon's question. To go back to the issue of the memorandum you received from Beverly Bassett Schaffer, you indicated that part of your job and part of the job of all people who worked for the Governor was to make sure that the Governor was insulated to the best of your ability from people who might make improper or inappropriate requests of him; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that regard, Ms. Bassett Schaffer has testified that she thought it appropriate that the Governor know, first of all, what the impending action was going to be with respect to a State-chartered S&L. Was that appropriate, in your view?

Mr. BRATTON. Absolutely.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Second, since it was well known that Mr. McDougal and Mr. Clinton had a relationship that went back a number of years, that she was putting the Governor on notice through you that there might possibly be some ramification in terms of a request from Mr. McDougal to do something, that the Governor should be forewarned and prepared about that. Did you regard that as appropriate?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now let's go to the question—and with respect to anything that was done, in your view, with respect to the approval of the concept of issuing preferred stock by Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, as well as the prerequisite for Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan increasing its net capital prior to being able to issue preferred stock, did you feel that there was anything irregular or inappropriate with Ms. Bassett Schaffer's decisions substantively on that issue?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe that she and I had a substantive discussion of the merits. I think she probably just mentioned to me in a conversation that she had received or the department had received an application from Madison to issue preferred stock. I don't think she called up and told me that. If we talked about it, I think she probably mentioned it in a conversation that we would periodically have about various matters that were pending before the department.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Fair enough. On the basis of what you have learned subsequently, indeed the basis of what you have learned as you sit here today, do you have any reason to believe that Beverly Bassett Schaffer acted inappropriately in any regard with respect to the Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan securities matter?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I do not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now let's move to the question of the bill for Castle Sewer. According to the information that we have, the initial bill, which was vetoed by Governor Clinton, was a bill which in hindsight seems to cover pretty much the Castle situation; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That bill passed, did it not, in the Arkansas State House unanimously; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall whether it passed unanimously. It's my recollection that it passed with few, if any, dissenting votes in both bodies.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, let's turn to the recap, perhaps in the letter that Mr. Tucker wrote regarding the prior history of the bill. Are you with me? The first paragraph says, "H.B. 1780 by Representatives Mike Wilson and William Walker was vetoed after having passed both Houses with no dissenting vote." Does that refresh your recollection?

Mr. BRATTON. I assume that's probably accurate.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the bill was sponsored by Representative Wilson. Was William Walker a Representative in the House or was he on the Senate side?

Mr. BRATTON. House. He was a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So the bill was sponsored by two House members and passed the House without dissent. It was also passed in the Senate without dissent prior to the time it reached Governor Clinton's desk; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. Apparently so.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now if, in fact, there was some motive to make sure that Governor Clinton made good on any arrangement that he had made before was in any way trying to help Mr. Tucker in this regard or Mr. Randolph in this regard, wouldn't it have been logical for someone to call your office or call the Governor's office and say, "Governor, this bill is coming, we're favoring it, this is our bill."?

Mr. BRATTON. It would certainly seem that way.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yet there was no contact whatsoever, is that correct, as far as you know?

Mr. BRATTON. As far as I know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now was there a pocket veto in Arkansas back 10 or 11 years ago, whenever this happened?

Mr. BRATTON. No, there was not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So that if the Governor hadn't vetoed the bill, it had passed unanimously in both Houses, if he had just let it alone, it would have become law?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Yet because it had a constitutional infirmity, you brought it to the Governor's attention and the bill was vetoed?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. New legislation was proposed and can you tell us what the role of the Public Service Commission was in this, and who the Public Service Commission is?

Mr. BRATTON. The Public Service Commission is the State agency that regulates utility rates, quality of service, and other related issues.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did they have a position with respect to this legislation? When I say "this legislation," I mean, in general.

Mr. BRATTON. At that point, the Commission had some concern about the overall regulation of small water companies. It was difficult to identify how many were out there. Oftentimes the cost of regulation which the company could then pass on to its customers arguably would exceed any benefit the customers might get from regulation, so there were some concerns about how much benefit, if any, customers of small water companies got from being regulated by the PSC.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Well, I don't know a thing about water and sewer regulation, I am the first to admit that. It seems like it may be a very specialized area of interest. I know nothing about Arkansas law, and these events occurred 10 or 11 years ago. But let me ask you, based on the position that the Public Service Commission took in general about small water and sewer companies, did they recommend any legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe that there had been some discussion within the Public Service Commission staff to suggest, if not deregulating small water and sewer companies, to create some alternative government structure that would not have involved Public Service Commission jurisdiction.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let's get the time frames back in focus. The first bill was vetoed approximately when?

Mr. BRATTON. Well, I assume sometime shortly before the Nancy Hernreich memo.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We have April 8, 1987, as the date. Does that sound appropriate to you?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly in the general time frame.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Then a series of communications took place with respect to Mr. Tucker contacting the Governor's office and you and so forth and so on, as we've seen. But let me ask you to take a look at a memo which I believe is in front of you to Jerrell Clark from Doug Strock regarding H.B. 1780—PSC Position. Do you see that?

Mr. BRATTON. I have a copy of a memo from Doug Strock to Butch Sullins, Larry Jegley, and Tony Creston copied to Jerrell Clark.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have one dated April 6, 1987?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I have a copy of that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me ask you, sir, whether the Arkansas Public Service Commission, the PSC, had a position with respect to the bill that was vetoed by Governor Clinton. And I direct your attention to the second paragraph. Could we adjust the Elmo so people could read the memo? Thank you. Could we focus in on that second paragraph? Can you tell whether the PSC had a position?

Mr. BRATTON. In paragraph 4—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. No, paragraph 2—I'm sorry. It should be paragraph 3 of this 1-page memo where it says, "It may possibly be vulnerable to a constitutional challenge as special legislation."

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now with respect to the concept of legislation covering small water and sewer utilities, does the memo illuminate a position by the PSC with respect to that concept?

Mr. BRATTON. The first sentence of the fourth paragraph certainly sets forth Mr. Strock's opinion, in which he says, "I believe the concept of the bill is fine, however, and should probably be extended to cover all water and sewer utilities that are Class B or lower under the Uniform System of Accounts adopted by the PSC."

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So now the Public Service Commission, which is in charge of regulating water and sewer districts, I presume, is weighing in with a position on this legislation and saying that while the specific legislation which has passed both Houses is subject to constitutional challenge, the PSC favors some legislation of a broader nature covering small sewer and water companies.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. Strock at that time was General Counsel for the staff of the Commission, so at least that was apparently the position of the staff, which would not necessarily be the same as the Commissioner's opinion, but it is my impression from conversations with Chairman Johnston at that time that his opinion and staff's opinion were generally consistent.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I was just getting to that. So this memo is written before Mr. Tucker or anybody else contacts the Governor's office, obviously, because the memo is written before the Governor even vetoed the legislation; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And so subsequently, do you have any reason to believe that the Public Service Commission or its counsel had changed its view about the general desirability of this legislation covering small water and sewer companies?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I do not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So it would be fair to say, then, that consistently the Public Service Commission favored the passage of legislation which was ultimately adopted?

Mr. BRATTON. Or something similar thereto, yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In concept. Who drafted the subsequent bill, do you know?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you know who sponsored it?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall. I assume Representative Wilson probably sponsored it the second time.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So again, we have the situation where legislation was proposed and then passed by both Houses of the Arkansas legislature?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And did Governor Clinton, to your knowledge, have anything to do with proposing the second piece of legislation, or shepherding it through the legislation process?

Mr. BRATTON. My recollection is that the extent of the administration's involvement was the inclusion of the item in a call for a Special Session.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now do you recall why that Special Session was called?

Mr. BRATTON. During the 19—and this is a correction from my deposition. I had two events out of sync in my deposition. I believe I said in my deposition that we had called that session to deal with an income tax credit issue involving higher education.

On further checking after my deposition, the tax issue was involved in 1985. The Special Session that was convened in the spring of 1987 was convened primarily to deal with revenue issues. Governor Clinton had proposed a very extensive revenue program in the 1987 session. We were unable to pass any substantial part of those revenue proposals, and the Special Session in June, I believe it was June 1987, largely dealt with an issue to enact some revisions of a portion of that revenue program from the 1987 regular session.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. How many bills were proposed as part of the additional session?

Mr. BRATTON. I think there were some 40-plus items considered.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Forty, of which this regulation of small water and sewer companies was one?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now is it correct that the second attempt at legislation, the second bill, was passed without dissent again by both Houses of the Arkansas legislature?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall the vote by which it passed, but my general impression was that there was little, if any, opposition.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We are informed and I will stand corrected if someone has some other material, that again the legislation passed without any negative votes, unanimously in both Houses.

Mr. BRATTON. It is not uncommon for noncontroversial bills to pass without any dissenting votes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. That goes to the next question. What was the conceivable controversy, what might someone say about whether the public was being in some way ill served by this? Were there two sides to a debate about whether this legislation was appropriate?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall there being any particular debate about the legislation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Will you tell us in your view why the second bill was appropriate and why the State regulatory agency, the Public Service Commission, favored it, as well as both Houses of the legislature?

Mr. BRATTON. Well, the first piece of legislation was vetoed because it did run afoul of the special and local provision, the State Constitution. The second piece of legislation was of general applicability and exempted all Class C water companies from PSC jurisdiction and is set out to some extent in Mr. Strock's memorandum to which you made reference earlier. The Commission did have strong concerns that the cost of regulation for small water companies outweighed any benefits of regulation.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Were there any newspaper editorial saying that this was some kind of a giveaway or was inappropriate or that these small water and sewer companies might run amok under these circumstances?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no recollection of there being any debate of any kind about it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So when you say that it was noncontroversial, that means nobody had a position that you heard of against this legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall having been aware of any opposition to it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Absolutely white bread, noncontroversial?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my recollection.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now with respect to this $33,000 in the memo, Ms. HERNREICH, which is dated April 14, Mr. Chertoff pointed out that there had been a fundraiser and that fundraiser occurred in 1985; is that correct?

Ms. HERNREICH. Well, that's what I've heard. I came—from what I have read or heard subsequent to this event is that there was a fundraiser in 1985. I came to work for Governor Clinton in September 1985, and I believe that this fundraiser occurred prior to that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And the water and sewer company, the utility on the property which was purchased by Tucker, the Castle Sewer and Water Company, was purchased in 1986?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know that.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Therefore, the notion that somebody made a contribution of $33,000 in 1985 in order to get favorable treatment on a property they had not even bought seems rather farfetched, doesn't it?

Ms. HERNREICH. It does.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Is it correct that people who—and I suppose this is true in every State of the Union, but that people who are in business and who have made a contribution to a candidate may feel that they're entitled to access or the successful office seeker's ear in some respect. And the job of the staff is to protect against that, so that the Governor is not compromised or put in a compromising position and so forth.

Mr. Bratton, you have indicated that during the legislative session, you were receiving communications on an hourly basis with respect to people who were in some way unhappy or in some other respect wanted a communication to go to the Governor; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. What did you perceive your job to be as the Governor's counsel?

Mr. BRATTON. Well—

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. In that regard.

Mr. BRATTON. In that regard, it was my responsibility to, where appropriate, indicate to individuals who had concerns about positions that the Governor might have on their legislation, explain what those positions were. If that was inadequate, to convey those concerns expressed by constituents to the Governor to see what accommodations we could make with constituent groups, with members of the General Assembly.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now let me ask you the bottom line question with respect to the utility legislation that we have been discussing. Did the Governor in any way, shape or form do anything improper in connection with his position regarding this legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. Absolutely not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you have any doubt or any reservation about that?

Mr. BRATTON. None whatsoever.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. We would cede back our time on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want to just make sure we have the sequence clear, Mr. Bratton. Early in 1987, there was a bill passed unanimously to allow this exemption from regulation for Castle Sewer and Water, although they don't use the name Castle Sewer and Water; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's not a debated bill?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not aware that there was any particular debate, and certainly some of the documentation here suggests that it was passed without any negative votes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So was it the practice sometimes in the legislature to tie up a whole bunch of bills that were not of great public concern and move them through on a very expedited basis?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you don't remember any debate about this, initially?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You recommend the Governor veto it; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And then the Governor hears from Mr. Randolph; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Randolph is upset; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Apparently.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because this impairs the business interests of Castle Sewer and Water; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Apparently he was upset about the veto of the legislation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know, by the way, whether the people who are now serviced by that utility, such as Castle Sewer and Water, whether it's, in fact, the case that their rates are about three time the rates of the people in Little Rock who have their utilities regulated by the PSC?

Mr. BRATTON. I have some impression from reading articles in the newspaper that the rates for customers served by Castle Sewer and Water are higher than the City of Little Rock rates, but that there are many reasons for that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. One of those reasons is that the Public Service Commission doesn't control the rates for Castle Sewer and Water; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. Not necessarily.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that the Public Service Commission doesn't control the rates of Castle Sewer and Water?

Mr. BRATTON. I would agree that the Public Service Commission does not have jurisdiction over their rates. I would not agree that the fact that those rates are regulated necessarily means they are higher than they otherwise would be.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, would you agree they are about three times higher than elsewhere in Little Rock?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know what the precise rates are.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Governor Clinton ask you to solicit the views of the ratepayers when he told you in April and May to go out and get information about this change in the bill that Mr. Tucker and Mr. Randolph wanted?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I have any recollection of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now when you reported back to the Governor, the Governor agreed to put this, and you were asked by Mr. Ben-Veniste, what did the Governor do for Messrs. Randolph and Tucker in terms of what they wanted. Who put the item on the agenda for the Special Session?

Mr. BRATTON. Items on call for a Special Session are placed on that call by the Governor as he is the only one who can convene a Special Session and set an agenda for it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the Governor gave the green light to put it on the Special Session agenda; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Governor signed it when it passed again; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Didn't the Governor's office draft the revised bill?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of having drafted the revised bill. If it was drafted in the Governor's office, I probably would have drafted it. I don't believe I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me refresh your memory. The letter of June 2, from the Secretary to Mr. Tucker, we're going to get it for you in a second, to Mr. Jeffrey Stern, who represents I guess the regulators and the bank here in 1987. "Dear Mr. Stern: At the request of Mr. Tucker, please find enclosed a copy of a proposed bill which we received from the Governor's office. Mr. Tucker needs advice as quickly as possible on the effect of this proposed bill." Does this refresh your memory that the Governor's office—let me make sure. It's June 2, 1987. It's on Mitchell, Williams, Selig & Tucker stationery. I'll give you my copy. You can read us the letter. It's only two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. Why don't we suspend for just a moment and get some copies made both for the Majority and Minority, and this way we can give Mr. Bratton a copy. While we are having this letter copied, would either one of the witnesses like to take a short break for any reason?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Ms. HERNREICH. I'm fine.

The CHAIRMAN. OK.

[Recess.]

The CHAIRMAN. Modern technology. The copier in the back broke down. That explains the delay. Do you have a copy down there, Mr. Bratton?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. They took my copy for copying.

The CHAIRMAN. We'll give you the one copy. We'll have you read it and make copies later on for anyone who is interested.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Why don't you read the letter, Mr. Bratton?

Mr. BRATTON. The letter is on letterhead, Mitchell, Williams, Selig & Tucker, dated June 2, 1987. "Mr. Jeffrey B. Stern, Ingersoll & Block, 1401 16th Street, NW, Washington, DC 20036. Re: Castle Sewer and Water Corporation. Dear Mr. Stern, at the request of Mr. Tucker, please find enclosed a copy of a proposed bill which we received from the Governor's office. Mr. Tucker needs advice as quickly as possible on the effect of this proposed bill."

Mr. CHERTOFF. Does that refresh your memory that the Governor's office drafted the proposed bill?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, that does not necessarily suggest to me that the Governor's office actually prepared the bill.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You have reason to believe that the letter from Mr. Tucker's office contained a falsehood?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you agree with me that the letter indicates that they got the proposed bill from the Governor's office?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir. That does not necessarily indicate that the Governor's office drafted the bill. I did most of the drafting that was done in the office, and I tried to farm out as much of it as possible. It is possible it was drafted by the Public Service Commission staff, it is possible it was drafted by a legislation counsel staff. I don't recall having drafted it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But it was reviewed and approved by the Governor's office; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Any legislation that was going to be included in a call for a Special Session would have been reviewed by the Governor's office prior to its inclusion in the call for the session.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So what we know now, Mr. Bratton, is that the original veto came before anybody was aware that the purpose of the legislation was to aid Castle Sewer and Water, that there were subsequent conversations with Tucker and Randolph, some of which involved you, some of which involved the Governor, in at least one of which the Governor said it was an error to veto the bill, that the Governor agreed to put it on the call for a Special Session, that if the Governor had not done so, it could not have been passed a second time?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I don't agree that all of those things are true.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Which things do you disagree with?

Mr. BRATTON. If you would like to run through them one by one—

The CHAIRMAN. Let's just calm down, all of us. We're going to go through one at a time, OK? And if you disagree, you will have an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. BRATTON. I'd be happy to, Senator.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The original bill was vetoed; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you did not know at the time that you recommended the veto that it was designed to assist Castle Sewer and Water?

Mr. BRATTON. I did not know that, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Randolph communicated to you and Mr. Tucker communicated to you that it did involve Castle Sewer and Water and that they were upset about the veto?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. Tucker communicated that to me. I think it is likely Mr. Randolph did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that Mr. Randolph had communicated that to the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. I knew that Mr. Randolph had attempted to communicate that to the Governor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And we know from seeing a letter written by Mr. Tucker that the Governor had told Mr. Randolph that the veto was in error?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, I know that assertion is made in that letter, I don't know that the Governor told anybody that the veto was in error. I know that that assertion is made in that letter.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In any case, you were not part of a conversation with R. D. Randolph and the sponsors in which the Governor said the veto was an error?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall having been present in any conversation between the Governor and Mr. Randolph.

Mr. CHERTOFF. We also know that Mr. Randolph communicated to the Governor that in his mind, there was a connection between this request he was making to resubmit the bill and a $33,000 meeting 2 years ago; right, because you saw it in the memo?

Mr. BRATTON. I saw a memo that reflected that Mr. Randolph made some reference to that to Ms. Hernreich.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now did you understand the thrust of that memo, that it was designed to draw a connection between the $33,000 meeting and this legislative action or official action?

Mr. BRATTON. Absolutely not, because I had no idea what the $33,000 referred to.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You thought that Mr. Randolph just mentioned it in the course of a—you are the counsel to the Governor, Mr. Bratton, and you get a memo that indicates that Mr. Randolph has come in and he said two things, "I am really angry about this veto which hits me in my pocketbook; and by the way, we had a meeting a couple of years ago where $33,000 was involved." You don't see the juxtaposition of these two statements in a single conversation as a troubling suggestion?

Mr. BRATTON. I do not know what Mr. Randolph was trying to suggest.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did the red flag go up and did you say, "I'm going to get on the phone to Randolph and I'm going to ask him, what the hell do you think you are doing raising the issue of a $33,000 contribution at the same time you are asking the Governor to reverse his veto?"

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you go to the Governor and say, "Governor, what on earth is R. D. Randolph doing bringing up $33,000 in the same conversation as he asks you to reverse the veto?"

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of asking the Governor what the reference to $33,000 was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you did not see any reason to pursue this suggestion?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You did not see any reason to wonder whether there was an issue because the Rose Law Firm had represented Madison?

Mr. BRATTON. I had no reason to think there was any tie between this legislation and the Rose Law Firm.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me ask you, you were asked your opinion about whether there's anything unethical or improper about this kind of thing. Were you aware that as part of the legal research done before the closing on the transaction to sell this utility to R. D. Randolph, that there was legal research done by the Rose Law Firm specifically addressing the question of whether or not this utility had to be regulated by the Public Service Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no recollection of being aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me what you do know is that when you went out to get more information at the request of the Governor, the information you got was that if this legislative problem were not—if this veto were not reversed, if this legislation didn't get through, there would in all likelihood be litigation, a court dispute between Madison and Randolph, about the original sale; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You put it in the memo?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what I put in the memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. At the time you put that in the memo, you were not aware, I take it, that one of the opinions that underlay that original transaction had been written or had been rendered by the Rose Law Firm and specifically by Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. BRATTON. I was not aware of that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Knowing that now, had you known at the time that Mrs. Clinton personally had been involved in the rendering of an opinion relating to the regulation of this utility that was one of the conditions of this sale in February, would you have said to the Governor, "You ought to stay out of this because your wife and her firm have a personal financial stake in any litigation that arises if there's a dispute about this."?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know what I would have recommended if I had known that at the time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So I guess you are not really in a position to discuss whether there's a conflict of interest here because you didn't know the facts in 1987?

Mr. BRATTON. That there was a conflict of interest about what?

Mr. CHERTOFF. About whether the Rose Law Firm and Mrs. Clinton had rendered legal advice that would become the very subject of the dispute that Mr. Tucker raised with you when he explained why it was so important to get this veto reversed. You just told us you weren't aware of this representation.

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Governor did not tell you that the Rose Law Firm and that Mrs. Clinton had been involved in rendering the very legal advice on the very issue that would be disputed if this veto were not changed?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no reason to believe he was aware of it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But Mr. Tucker made you aware of this mortgage dispute; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. Tucker did not make me aware of what role the Rose Law Firm might have played in any opinion involving these issues.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But he made you aware of the fact that if this veto were not reversed—and it was reversed, wasn't it?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir—

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Governor changed his veto?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. The veto was not reversed. A piece of legislation that was of general applicability to all Class C water and sewer companies was subsequently passed. The veto was not reversed.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It was actually put on the Special Session by the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you did your memo of May 19, which we will put up right before you so you can look at it, this was your report to the Governor as to your findings of all the significant facts relating to this action; right?

Mr. BRATTON. It is my report to the Governor based on the conversation, or perhaps two conversations, I had with Mr. Tucker.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Which he had asked you to have in order to get the facts on this whole issue; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is there discussion in here about the impact on the ratepayers?

Mr. BRATTON. No, there is not a specific discussion in that memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You were shown a memo by the Public Service Commission about their view of the constitutional issues. Is that discussed in this memo?

Mr. BRATTON. It is not specifically discussed in this memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What is specifically discussed in this memo?

Mr. BRATTON. What is specifically discussed in this memo is the information I got from Mr. Tucker on the background of the legislation. The PSC memorandum that talked about the constitutional problem talked about the earlier legislation which had already been vetoed for that reason.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What you put in this memo was a discussion of the effect of this veto and this legislation on Mr. Randolph's pocket-book because he owned the utility; right?

Mr. BRATTON. What I put in this memo was the information I got from Mr. Tucker regarding the background on this issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What you put in this memo, Mr. Bratton, was that if this weren't cured, if this thing weren't passed in the Special Session, there would in all likelihood—you put "probably" be litigation between Madison and the utility in which the issue of the validity of the mortgage would be directly called into question; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what the memo says.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And of course, as you have indicated, you didn't know at the time that the Rose Law Firm had been involved in rendering advice on this very issue before the mortgage was executed; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Would you agree with me that that's a fact that had you known about it, you might have considered advising the Governor that there was a conflict of interest there?

Mr. BRATTON. The fact that the Rose Law Firm had rendered an opinion—

Mr. CHERTOFF. That turned out not to be right.

Mr. BRATTON. —might or might not have been a conflict of interest as to whether a matter could be considered by the Arkansas General Assembly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's reason it out for a second, Mr. Bratton. The threat here by Mr. Tucker was if this legislation does not get through the Special Session, there's going to be a court case about the validity of this mortgage. Would you agree with me in that court case it would be highly likely that the number one thing that would be attacked would be the original opinion saying you didn't need to get PSC approval that had been rendered by the firm as a condition to doing this mortgage?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know what the issues in the litigation would have been, and I don't know what the opinion from the Rose Law Firm would have been.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let me tell you something now. You're the Governor's counsel, you're a lawyer, you've dealt with these things, and I will yield to the Minority if they—OK. Let's put that memo up. This is the first time I have read this. Go down to the last paragraph on the first page:

According to Tucker, if the legislation exempting certain water and sewer companies from the PSC regulation is not enacted in the Special Session, litigation will probably be initiated between Madison and the company owning the utility and the initiation of litigation between those two parties would likely negate the possibility of the utility expanding its operation through any sort of arrangements with the City of Wrightsville. I assume the litigation would result because of the question of the validity of the mortgage and the fact that the S&L is now being operated under the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal, et al.

Obviously, Mr. Tucker told you this, but you thought that it had such significance that you just didn't—you don't just report everything that somebody tells you, that you put in the fact that this litigation would take place and that McDougal no longer controlled it. Then you say:

I have talked with Robert Johnston and asked Johnston to review with appropriate PSC staff what options may be available to address the Tucker/Randolph problem.

You are asking how do we resolve this short of deregulation proposed, and you say, "I did tell Robert that I thought you would be inclined to try to be of some help in resolving this problem." So you said this. What impact would proposed legislation have on the merits of this legislation? People get sued everyday. You're attempting, it's obvious here, to attempt to avoid this litigation, and you bring in that McDougal no longer controls this.

Why would you put that in a memo? What impact would that litigation between Madison and a utility have on the appropriateness of the merits of this legislation, which heretofore you said was unconstitutional? And you had vetoed?

Mr. BRATTON. The legislation that was ultimately passed was not unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that. We're now talking about why you would want to overcome this. Why? I mean, what is the merit in your saying, "By the way, they say there's going to be litigation," et cetera. You see, if you didn't want to make and if there wasn't a direction to solve this, given what we know, the memo that Ms. Hernreich took down when this fellow walked in and starting screaming, given the Governor saying, "ugh," given the carbon copy sent to you. This didn't just drop out. You really wanted to keep that litigation from taking place. Isn't that true? Tucker told you it was going to happen and you said you know there's going to be litigation. Is that true or not?

Mr. BRATTON. I didn't have any personal concern whether litigation happened or not. If—

The CHAIRMAN. If you didn't have any personal concern, you certainly wrote a memo, the gist of which was, if you read this, that you're going to have litigation and you want to avoid this, and this is a way to avoid it. You already passed legislation to avoid that litigation, isn't that true? That's the gist of the memo. You say this is a problem.

Mr. BRATTON. Senator, the gist of the memo is that Mr. Tucker says this is a problem and this is why he says it is a problem. I don't say it is a problem. I report what Mr. Tucker told me. And then—

The CHAIRMAN. How do you draft legislation? You recommend drafting legislation or dealing with this problem. You say, "I thought you would be inclined to try to be of some help." You say that to the Governor. Is that true? Look at that, second page, right? "I thought you would be inclined to try to be of some help in resolving this problem." Is that true? Did you put that there?

Mr. BRATTON. If that's what I wrote at the time, I'm sure that's what I told Johnston, and if I told him that, that would have been my impression.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought it was important enough to even put in there that McDougal no longer—going back, this would be "under the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal." You knew that Jim McDougal had a close relationship and, you know, you could count on him but you couldn't count on him anymore because you now had FSLIC there; isn't that true?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure what you mean by "count on."

The CHAIRMAN. Why would you put that in there? This is an assumption that you make in the last paragraph, last sentence. You say, "I assume the litigation would result because of the question of the validity of the mortgage." You say this. You didn't say Tucker told you. You assume this. This is you, this is not something that Tucker told you, "and the fact that the S&L is now being operated under the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal." Why did you think it was important to put that in? What was the relevance of that?

Mr. BRATTON. I would imagine that I included that statement to indicate that I thought the litigation was more likely to occur with the FSLIC managing the utility than if McDougal was controlling the utility—I'm sorry, the savings and loan, since the savings and loan had sold the utility while McDougal was in control of it and he would have been less likely to initiate the legislation—I mean, the litigation than the FSLIC would have been.

The CHAIRMAN. So you felt that it was important to help avoid litigation?

Mr. BRATTON. I had no concern whatsoever whether there was litigation or not.

The CHAIRMAN. That's the intent of this memo, to convey that there's going to be litigation and I assume that you want to help. "I thought you would be inclined to try to be of some help in resolving this problem."

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir. I apparently told Mr. Johnston that I thought the Governor would be inclined, if there was a way to address this issue in a constitutional manner that did not create other problems, that he would be inclined to look at it.

The CHAIRMAN. To avoid the litigation.

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You don't talk about anything else, you don't talk about the rates, you don't talk about the impact on the company, you don't talk about what the disparity may or may not be, you don't talk about the constitutional problem. What you mention here, the only thing you really mention here is that this dispute is going to break out and that Jim McDougal is not there any more to control the situation and that you have the FSLIC, the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal. That's your memo.

Senator Sarbanes.

OPENING COMMENTS OF SENATOR PAUL S. SARBANES

Senator SARBANES. If we can put up the first page of that memo on the machine, the second paragraph. Mr. Bratton, who is Bill Walker?

Mr. BRATTON. Bill Walker was a State Representative at that time. He's now a member of the State Senate. He represented an area that included a portion of the City of Wrightsville.

Senator SARBANES. This memo says—because we've just heard it asserted it had nothing to do with rates—"Bill Walker's interest in this matter apparently arises from the fact that this utility company could sell water to the City of Wrightsville at wholesale at a price substantially less than Wrightsville is currently purchasing water from the City of Little Rock." When you say, "this utility company," do you mean Castle—I take it that's what this memo means; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, that's correct.

Senator SARBANES. What was it that Walker was asserting, as you understood it?

Mr. BRATTON. Walker's interest in the legislation was to try to get lower rates for the City of Wrightsville, which is an incorporated municipality with a very high-minority population, very low-socioeconomic base. The water rates that Wrightsville was paying at the time as a result of purchasing water from Little Rock and transmitting it to Wrightsville were fairly high. Walker was attempting to negotiate arrangements on behalf of the City of Wrightsville to find an alternative water supply source for the City of Wrightsville and apparently Castle Sewer and Water was one of the alternatives that was potentially available as a source of water for the City of Wrightsville.

Senator SARBANES. One of these memos that was shown to you has Walker seeking an appointment with the Governor to bring in Tucker and Randolph; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe it does.

Senator SARBANES. Have you seen that memo?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe I saw it during my deposition.

Senator SARBANES. Was Walker the author of this legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. He was one of two sponsors, along with Representative Wilson.

Senator SARBANES. And did he remain interested in the legislation after it was vetoed?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my recollection.

Senator SARBANES. When was the legislation vetoed? Do you recall that?

Mr. BRATTON. Apparently sometime in the early part of April and this memorandum is dated——

Senator SARBANES. The early part of April. And in May, Walker was seeking this meeting, and this memo that's up on the board here in which you make reference to Walker's interest in this matter is dated May 19th; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. So Bill Walker continued to pursue this matter——

Mr. BRATTON. That's my recollection.

Senator SARBANES. —subsequent to the veto; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my recollection, and that's what this memorandum dated May 13th would indicate.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Let me pursue the issue of the Wrightsville district and Mr. Walker's interest. Do I understand you correctly to say that at the time this legislation was being considered, the residents of Wrightsville were paying a substantial premium over that paid by, say, residents of Little Rock for their water?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my general recollection, and that seems to be reflected in the May 19th memo.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that if this legislation passed and the district served by Castle were expanded to include Wrightsville as was anticipated, Walker hoped that this would result in lower rates for his constituents?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you have any reason to disbelieve that?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you know whether what they were paying in Wrightsville was a multiple two or three times that of Little Rock or you just know it was substantially more?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of what those rates are other than that they were considerably higher than Little Rock and Walker apparently thought it could be lessened by a contract with Castle Sewer and Water.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now let's clear this up. The veto that Governor Clinton issued with respect to the first bill was not reversed by Governor Clinton, was it?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. The constitutional infirmity of the first bill was remedied in the drafting of the second bill at the suggestion and approval of the Public Service Commission; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. The Public Service Commission staff had suggested that legislation which would deregulate small water companies be considered and passed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And that consideration by the Public Service Commission had gone back even years earlier, had it not?

Mr. BRATTON. At least some point earlier.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. According to records we've seen back in 1985, they were taking the same position about the regulation of the small water and sewer companies?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe that's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So they've consistently taken the position that such legislation would be beneficial. There was no opposition to it. The legislation that was proposed was proposed without consulting the Governor in any way about the interests of any party. The legislation was proposed by Representative Walker and was vetoed because it was likely unconstitutional in your view and in the view of the Public Service Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. Proposed by Wilson and Walker and vetoed because of the constitutional problem.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. New legislation is proposed consistent with the position of the Public Service Commission, with strong support by Representative Walker for the constituents of the Wrightsville district, if I understand the chronology of events. And it was now in a form that was constitutional, in your view?

Mr. BRATTON. Correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. It was not controversial. There was no one, to your knowledge, who opposed this deregulation?

Mr. BRATTON. I do not have any recollection of any controversy regarding it.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Finally, was there any conversation that you had with the Governor to suggest that the reason why the Governor ought to sign the bill if it passed both Houses again, which seemed quite likely, since it had passed in its unconstitutional form earlier—

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. —was there any suggestion in conversation with the Governor that a reason why the Governor ought to sign it was to avoid litigation between Madison or its successor and Mr. Tucker?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I have any recollection of.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. When then-Governor Clinton wrote the words "ugh" on this memorandum that set forth Mr. Randolph's reminder about a $33,000 conversation, that pretty well summed up his position about people making these kinds of observations; would that be fair to say, Ms. Hernreich?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Since we have not talked much to you this morning, Ms. Hernreich, let me ask you very briefly whether in your present position you have had occasion to visit the Book Room in the White House residence.

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know if I have ever been in the Book Room or not. I have been to a room on the third floor where some gifts are kept once, and I don't know if that's the same room as the Book Room.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Did you ever notice what appeared to be billing records in the Book Room?

Ms. HERNREICH. Absolutely not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Has anyone told you who might have put billing records in the Book Room that have been testified about by Ms. Huber and turned over to this Committee upon Ms. Huber's recognition that they might be of interest to us?

Ms. HERNREICH. No.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Ivey.

Mr. IVEY. Thank you.

Mr. Bratton, I wanted to go back to the May 19, 1987 memo that you drafted for the Governor and ask you a few questions about that. Did you draft a number of memos to the Governor? Was this a routine practice?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Well, what was the goal of drafting these types of memoranda?

Mr. BRATTON. Various different goals, but largely to provide information.

Mr. IVEY. Information you thought would be relevant to him?

Mr. BRATTON. Information that I thought would be relevant or sometimes information that I thought might not be relevant, but that some constituent, or some constituent group, or member of the General Assembly thought was relevant and wanted the Governor to know.

Mr. IVEY. In any event, you wanted to be accurate with the information you conveyed?

Mr. BRATTON. I certainly tried to be.

Mr. IVEY. In this memo, I notice when you're discussing the litigation comment that Mr. Tucker raised, you make no mention of any reference to the Rose Law Firm or Hillary Clinton; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. IVEY. Was there any mention during that meeting of the Rose Law Firm or Mrs. Clinton?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I have any recollection of.

Mr. IVEY. So did you have any reason to connect her to the conversation that you had with Mr. Tucker at that point?

Mr. BRATTON. To connect the Rose Law Firm to it? No, sir.

Mr. IVEY. Did Mr. Tucker's comment about litigation influence in any way the recommendations that you made to the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. IVEY. Let me ask you to take a look at the packet of information that you received I think during the first round of testimony; a series of documents from Doug Strock of the Public Service Commission.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. I think at the top of that, there is a document dated January 17, 1985.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Now down near the bottom of the page in paragraph B, there's some writing about, "Eliminate, by law, our jurisdiction over small water companies." Do you see that?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Is this the concept, again, dating back to 1985, that ended up being embodied in the legislation that was ultimately passed and became, I believe, Act 37?

Mr. BRATTON. It's similar.

Mr. IVEY. This again was before the IDC property transaction took place; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know when the IDC transaction took place.

Mr. IVEY. I have nothing further.

Senator SARBANES. This memo that you were just asked about, that's in January 1985?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Senator SARBANES. And that's a memo prepared by the General Counsel of the Arkansas Public Service Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Who's the memo to? Who are those gentlemen who are listed as recipients of the memo?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not sure what position Mr. Creston and Mr. Sullins held at that time. Larry Jegley was another staff attorney. Sullins and Creston are not lawyers. Creston worked on quality of service issues, I believe. I'm not sure what Mr. Sullins' position was at that point in time, had something to do with rates.

Senator SARBANES. In that memo, Strock points out, he says:

The small water companies find it hard to come up with the money, oftentimes, to finance the health and safety-related improvements required by Q of S and health department laws and regulations. They also find it difficult to finance a rate case, with all of its costs and expenses in hiring accountants and lawyers. As a result, we rapidly reach a stalemate in achieving compliance with health and safety measures, because the utility does not have the money and cannot afford to file a rate case to get the money.

Having given this matter a little bit of thought, I see several possible solutions.

And one of the ones he sets out was, "Eliminate, by law, our jurisdiction over small water companies." In the end, that was the approach that was taken; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. This suggestion was made back on January 17, 1985?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Now the Public Service Commission, as I understand it, was opposed to the first bill. They wanted it vetoed because of the constitutionality question that you identified; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what was indicated in Mr. Strock's memo and that's my recollection of the conversations with Robert Johnston, who was Chairman of the Commission.

Senator SARBANES. What was their position on the second bill, the one that was put on the call calendar for the Special Session?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe they were generally supportive of that.

Senator SARBANES. In fact, I think Strock prepared a memo in which he concluded this bill would relieve small water companies of the financial burdens of regulation, which include costly rate case expenses which are passed on to the consumers. That was in 1986, when he was talking about proposed legislation for 1987, which included divesting the Public Service Commission of jurisdiction over small water and sewer companies.

So the Public Service Commission from early on, unrelated, I take it, to any of these other matters that have been raised, had a position which was finally carried out in the legislation that was placed on the Call Calendar for the Special Session and enacted into law; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait, wait, wait. OK. All right, Mr. Chertoff.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton, I don't want you to lose hold of that memo you were just looking at, and I want to you look at two others. I want you to look at the February 24, 1987 memo, which is the first bill, which is the one that was vetoed, and the final bill, which was passed, which is in a letter marked June 18, 1987.

We'll have someone go and help you find those for a second. Why don't you get those three in front of you. There's the one you just had in front of you. Do you have that one?

Mr. BRATTON. The January 17, 1985?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Right.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have the February 24th letter or memo to Mike Wilson from Tucker?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let's stop and find the February 24, 1987 memo and the June 18, 1987 memo with the final bill.

Mr. BRATTON. June 2, 1987?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, the one with the final bill, June 18, 1987. Do you have those three?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. First of all, that memo of January 17, 1985, where they first raised the possible solution in terms of rate regulation for these companies, was there legislation enacted in 1985?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe there was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there legislation enacted in 1986?

Mr. BRATTON. There would not have been a regular session in 1986.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that although someone had the idea in 1985 of coming up with a solution to these financial problems, what finally spurred the legislation was when Mr. Tucker got Representative Wilson to put in the legislation, which he describes as proposed legislation for Castle Sewer and Water Corporation; right? That's when it first really hit the legislature?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of there having been legislation introduced in the 1985 session.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So this idea in 1985 didn't result in anything until Mr. Tucker and Mr. Wilson talked about putting in legislation for Castle Sewer and Water. Then it started to get done; right? It's in 1987. The memo is right in front of you; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That legislation was introduced in 1987 by Mike Wilson.

Mr. CHERTOFF. In fact, this 1985 memo talks about the possibility of dealing with this issue by having, in the last paragraph on the second page, "a combination of simplified filing requirements and establishment of ranges of acceptable rates." It talked about keeping these small utilities within some kind of simplified rate setting process; right? That's what was being recommended; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think Strock was recommending anything. I think what he seemed to be doing was suggesting that there were several different options available to deal with this problem.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He summarizes at the end by saying eventually I think—actually, he says the one that would be most helpful would be the use of Act 310, which is item number D that talks about kind of a simplified rate setting procedure; right? That's what he says would be the most helpful. He doesn't say completely deregulating and taking them outside of the Public Service Commission is the best. He says having the simplified rate setting every 6 months; right?

Mr. BRATTON. He suggests that an Act 310 process could certainly be an alternative.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's what the Public Service Commission suggested; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what Doug Strock suggested.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want you to go to that February 24th bill. On page 4 of that bill, which is the one that was vetoed, that was also at least—had some protection for the ratepayers; right, because section 4 limited this deregulation to situations where the utility charged the rate not greater than 10 percent more than the rate charged by a comparable—by a sewer or water utility in a first-class city; right?

Mr. BRATTON. It has a tie there, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it ties—there is some limitation under the original bill which was vetoed. There's some limitations in the ability of these deregulated utilities to raise rates. They can't go more than 10 percent above a comparable utility within 10 miles; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's what that provision says.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now let's go to the one that came out of—to use Mr. Tucker's words, whoever drafted it, came to them from the Governor's office, which is the one that was signed by Governor Clinton on June 12, 1987, which is the last document. Does that bill have any restriction whatsoever on rates, a 10 percent limitation, a 20 percent limitation?

Mr. BRATTON. I believe it simply exempts Class E water companies from jurisdiction.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So for Castle Sewer and Water, the bill that was eventually signed put no limit whatsoever on the amount of rates they could charge; right?

Mr. BRATTON. It put no limitations on the rates that could be charged by any Class C water company.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Of which Castle Sewer and Water was one, because you understood the driving force behind this bill was Tucker and Randolph. They made that very clear to you; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I understood at the time that the second legislation was introduced that Castle Sewer and Water had been the utility effected by the first bill, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was going to fall within the second bill; right, but unlike the first bill which was vetoed where Castle Sewer and Water—they only asked to go 10 percent above the regular rate, in the second one, the one that was signed, they got more than they asked for originally. They got literally the sky is the limit on rates; right? There was no limitation?

Mr. BRATTON. In the legislation that was eventually signed, the Class C companies were deregulated, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So that given that, apparently people who are serviced by this utility now were paying three times what people in Little Rock are paying. If the first bill had been signed, they'd at least only be able to go 10 percent above the Little Rock rate. Now, they're going 300 percent above the Little Rock rate; right?

Mr. BRATTON. If the first bill had been signed, I have no reason to think it would still be locked.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Oh, you think that they might have ultimately removed the cap thereto, but we do know—

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir because I think the legislation was unconstitutional and probably would not—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton, couldn't you have corrected the constitutional problem and still kept the 10 percent rate cap in? There wasn't a constitutional problem limiting the rate?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So when this bill was "corrected" at the request of Mr. Randolph and Mr. Tucker, more change than just the constitutional problem, there was a change and you went from some limitation on rates to a total ability to raise rates as high as you want; isn't that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. The companies were completely deregulated if they were Class C companies, that's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And the State Constitution didn't make you do that; right?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You are Chairman of the Public Services Commission. Do you get complaints from people who are serviced by this utility about the rates?

Mr. BRATTON. I think that we have gotten one or two complaints about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What do you tell them? Tell them it's out of our hands?

Mr. BRATTON. Tell them it is not within the jurisdiction of the Commission, yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you wrote this memo of May 19, 1987, which is the memo you wrote to the Governor in order to discuss with him sewer district regulation, did you discuss what to the ratepayers would be the most important issue, which is namely whether they're going to be paying 10 percent over Little Rock rates or 300 percent over Little Rock rates?

Mr. BRATTON. I discussed in the memo what's in the memo.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now look, Mr. Bratton, you were not merely a messenger, you're the counsel; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You're supposed to give advice?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You're supposed to give legal advice?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have discussions with the Governor after you sent the memo in about what was in the memo?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you talk to him about this litigation issue?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any recollection of what the specifics of the conversation were. It's been almost 10 years ago.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Are you trying to tell us that in your transmitting this memorandum, which was to go to the Governor so he could take action, all you were doing was serving as a conduit of information from Tucker?

Mr. BRATTON. All this memo does is pass on the information that I got from Tucker, which is what I was asked to do in preparing this memo. Did I have subsequent conversations with the Governor about this issue? I am sure I did. Can I tell you today what those conversations 10 years ago were? No, sir, I can't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you have any other memos on your research or information gathering?

Mr. BRATTON. Do I have memos?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes, are there any other memos that you wrote to the Governor after he asked you to gather the facts on this transaction?

Mr. BRATTON. On this transaction?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Mr. BRATTON. I have no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. This is the only one you wrote about this transaction.

Mr. BRATTON. I have no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, do you remember writing another one?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, but I didn't remember specifically writing this one until it was shown to me sometime recently.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You knew that Randolph and Tucker were perfectly capable of talking to the Governor themselves. They did not need you to pass a message on?

Mr. BRATTON. The Governor asked me to do something, and that was specifically to call Mr. Tucker to find out the background on the legislation and to transmit to him what I found out the background on the legislation was, and that's what the May 19th memo does, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you something. There comes a point in time, then, there's a legislative process initiated. You, I think, testified before that the Governor's office itself did not draft this?

Mr. BRATTON. I testified that I don't have any recollection of having drafted it.

The CHAIRMAN. Now take a look at the bill that eventually passed. You have it in front of you? Would it be customary for that kind of bill, particularly if you are responding to what was a constitutional problem heretofore that—you explained that you would review this as counsel; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm sure I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be customary, "it" being a matter affecting the regulations by the Public Service Commission, that you would have input from the Public Service Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That's customary; right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman, that would have been customary.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find it strange that in your discussions with Tucker, there's nothing with respect to rate impacts, et cetera, in a bill affecting rates that can or can't be charged, nothing at all. You never discussed that with him?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall the discussion with Mr. Tucker with any specificity, Mr. Chairman. I would——

The CHAIRMAN. The memo doesn't have anything—if you had discussed rates, would rates have been in there?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find it strange instead of constructing a constitutional bill which would have dealt with the impediment—the impediment was what? It dealt with one specific area as opposed to being general; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's generally correct, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill doesn't do that. This bill goes beyond. It corrects that deficiency. You could have corrected that very easily by including that this would be available to all of these Class C companies, so it's not just one, you have no constitutional impediment; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. Well, I don't know how many Class C companies are located within 10 miles or 20 miles of a Class 1 city——

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that. You could have corrected that constitutional impediment without the necessity of dropping any limiting provisions as it relates to rate differentials. Didn't you find it strange—did the PSC say anything to you? They went along and said just drop so that you can charge—any Class C company can charge anything it wants?

Mr. BRATTON. I think it is likely that the PSC drafted the second draft of the legislation from looking at it. It does not appear to be in a format consistent with that that would have been drafted by legislative counsel, so I think there is a good possibility that the PSC staff drafted that legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill has a limitation that you can only charge 110 percent, 10 percent more than is being charged in the adjoining city; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The second one, what kind of limitation does it have?

Mr. BRATTON. It is a complete deregulation of Class C water companies.

The CHAIRMAN. No limitations?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You are Chairman of the Public Service Commission now?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So you have an understanding approximately of what rates are in this area and so when Counsel said to you, you know, this company now is charging three times or 300 percent or thereabouts what the people in Little Rock pay——

Mr. BRATTON. I don't regulate the rates for the City of Little Rock.

The CHAIRMAN. But they pay three times that rate?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know what they pay.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no idea? Who regulates it?

Mr. BRATTON. Who regulates the City of Little Rock?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, the rates, the PSC. You have nothing with respect to the rates?

Mr. BRATTON. We regulate only the private water companies of which there are a handful.

The CHAIRMAN. So the people who were previously being served, right, were they being served by Little Rock at one point in time?

Mr. BRATTON. The people who were being served by Castle Sewer and Water?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, out in that region. Where were they getting their water?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure which people you're talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The people in that area, in the Castle Grande area or the Castle Sewer area, would any of them be getting water from an adjacent city?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not sure whether that utility had wells or whether it purchased water from some other source.

The CHAIRMAN. OK. I would just point out again that you go from one bill limiting the rates to 110 percent to the second bill which has absolutely no limitation; there's no discussion of that in this memo, no discussion about what the impact of proposed legislation will be, and you don't recall any that anybody said to you, this Class C company can charge whatever they want?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, I don't recall any specific discussions on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Wouldn't that be something that you'd be interested in, what impact would this legislation have on ratepayers?

Mr. BRATTON. It may well be, Senator, that the reason the cap was removed was for other companies other than Castle, that 110 percent cap would not have addressed the problems that Mr. Strock had identified in his earlier memos—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Name one besides—

Mr. BRATTON. I would suggest that is entirely possible if that legislation was drafted by the Commission, which I believe may—

Mr. CHERTOFF. Name one besides Castle Water and Sewer.

Mr. BRATTON. I don't regulate them. I didn't keep up with what the companies were at that point in time. Part of the problem with the small water and sewer companies was even identifying how many of them were out there.

The CHAIRMAN. You give them a blank check is what happened. You first talked about a constitutional prohibition because it was only with respect to one specific company. Now, you opened it up that that specific company in every Class C; right? Every Class C has the ability to charge whatever rate it wants, whatever the traffic can bear?

Mr. BRATTON. The legislation that was signed did completely de-regulate Class C water companies, Senator, and I would suggest again that I think one reason the cap may have been removed was to give other companies, other than Castle and Sewer, greater flexibility that they may have needed, and may have had absolutely nothing to do with Castle Sewer and Water's situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you ever searched the record to see if you have any memorandum with respect to this legislation over at the PSC? I understand you weren't there then, but have you checked the records to see if there's any that would give you any reason to believe that the Public Service Commission, that they entertained that thought?

Mr. BRATTON. Based on Mr. Creston's memo of January 1985, they considered that as one option——

The CHAIRMAN. And the fact of the matter is he concludes, and we read the conclusion, it doesn't come out anywhere near what you suggested. He actually talks about keeping a control and that it would be reviewed on a 6-month basis and streamlining the process. Let's not go through—he outlines a series of possibilities, and his conclusion is far different than total taking off, absolutely no filing whatsoever and having no ability to control the rates whatsoever; wouldn't you admit that?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. Creston suggested he thinks Act 310 procedures or something similar to would be his recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. So you didn't undertake his recommendation, nor did the Commission. Now, I'm not asking you to refer to this memo. Are you aware of any other memoranda where there was a discussion as it relates to total deregulation, taking off any controls as it relates to Class C companies?

Mr. BRATTON. Any documents that would have had anything to do with this legislation have been provided to this Committee under a subpoena earlier this summer.

The CHAIRMAN. So you're not aware of any. Have you had an opportunity to look through the files as Commissioner for any documentation in attempting to comply with the Committee's subpoena?

Mr. BRATTON. I did not personally search the file. I looked at the material that was compiled.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Bratton, I understand you did not personally. Did you cause or ask people under your direction to search the files to see if there was any information pertinent to this particular legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And did you find any additional information that would have indicated that there were discussions with respect to rates, et cetera?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not aware of any other documents, other than that which have been provided to the Committee that are in the files of the Commission at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. So there is no information that the Committee would have available to it through the Public Service Commission or that you are aware of that ever suggested that the Public Service Commission consciously itself and deliberately supported legislation that would take off any limitations as it relates to the rates that would be charged, which is what this bill did?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. Chairman, it is my general recollection that I had some discussions with Commission staff or the Chairman of the Commission regarding whether a cap was appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. Really? Well, now, we are getting someplace. You actually spoke to somebody about this, about taking off the cap on the rates?

Mr. BRATTON. I have a general impression that I probably had a discussion about that. I can't tell you for sure, but I have a general impression that that probably occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. Who would you have discussed that with? You're counsel to the Governor. Who would you have discussed that with, not a staff lawyer?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably would have discussed it with the Chairman of the Commission, if I discussed it with anyone.

The CHAIRMAN. Who's the Chairman of the Commission?

Mr. BRATTON. Robert Johnston, and I'm not sure I did, but it is possible that I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is that the same Mr. Johnston you told the Governor would be inclined, would try to be of some help in trying to resolve the problem?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. Is the Public Service Commission considering reregulating small water companies?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Is there a clamor in Arkansas to reregulate the small water companies?

Mr. BRATTON. There is an issue involving one small water company that comes up every session and there's legislation introduced and so far it has not passed.

Senator SARBANES. How about with respect to the other small water companies?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Senator SARBANES. Apparently not. So the deregulation was a public policy commission that was taken, is that correct, that has remained in place now for almost 10 years?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Ben-Veniste.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Bratton, was it the case that someone representing Castle came to you and said we made a mistake with this legislation, please have the Governor veto it because we don't like the 10 percent cap so we can come back later and write some new legislation that doesn't have a 10 percent cap?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Nothing like that occurred?

Mr. BRATTON. Absolutely not.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And with respect to the limitation of the 10 percent cap, it is your recollection that that was the result of now broadening the legislation to cover other small water and sewer companies that would have been affected by a 10 percent cap?

Mr. BRATTON. I think that is entirely possible. I cannot tell you the specifics of any conversation I had with Johnston or anyone else at the Commission, but I do think that I did have some conversations involving whether the 10 percent cap would remain appropriate if the legislation would be broadened to include all Class C companies.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So to follow along Mr. Chertoff's line of thinking here, let me ask you whether there was any discussion with Mr. Tucker or others involved in Castle Sewer and Water to suggest that we don't like the cap, we want that eliminated from the next legislation.

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I have any recollection of. If I could expand just for one moment, the reason I think that I probably had some discussions regarding the cap and that there was a conscious decision to remove the cap would be that if a small company had to make a significant investment to upgrade its plant, then a 10 percent override provision would not necessarily be of any significant benefit. If a company was only having to adjust to inflation concerns, then a 10 percent cap might well be appropriate, but if a company was placed in the position of having to comply with health department rules or Clean Water Act rules and had to make significant upgrades to the system, then you would be right back into a regulatory situation with the attendant costs that would be available there.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now that we have descended into the minutia of sewer legislation in Arkansas a decade ago, let me ask you to take a look at the bill that was actually passed and see whether there was a provision contained in that bill that was not contained in the original bill that provided for any district covered by the deregulation to exercise the power of eminent domain over the water and sewer company serving that district. And I would direct your attention to Section 3, paragraph N, it looks like.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Do you see that reference?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, I do.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Was that in the original bill?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe it was.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Would you explain to all of us interested in water and sewer history in Arkansas in 1985 and 1986 what that eminent domain provision provided for?

Mr. BRATTON. Well, it appears to authorize some type of municipal improvement district or special improvement district to condemn the property of any water or sewer utility that was located within the boundaries of that improvement district which was exempt from the definition of public utility.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And again, that provision for eminent domain is included in Section 4, paragraph 1, which also provides for eminent domain, condemning any water or sewer utility found within the boundaries of that district covered by this legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So for the historians of water and sewer regulatory law in Arkansas in the late 20th century, this provision would provide for the residents of a water and sewer district petitioning to get together to condemn and take over a water and sewer utility, such as the one in question here, Castle, in the event that they felt that it was appropriate to do so?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my understanding of that language.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So instead of a cap, you have the right of eminent domain if things got out of hand to the extent that there was a need to condemn the utility because they charged too much or did something else that the people in their district didn't like?

Mr. BRATTON. These provisions certainly appear to give the customers of the utility an alternative to address what they thought to be excessive rates or other problems.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now all of this, the issues about Castle Sewer and Water, were covered by the House of Representatives last summer. Is there anything that has come out today that you are aware of that sheds any new light on whether Governor Clinton acted appropriately in connection with the water and sewer legislation in the 1987 legislative session?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm certainly not aware of anything that suggested he acted inappropriately, no, sir.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Mr. Ivey.

Mr. IVEY. Mr. Bratton, let me just follow up on the point you were making about eminent domain. Do you have the June 24, 1986 memorandum from Doug Strock to Mr. Clark? The subject is proposed legislation for 1987.

Mr. BRATTON. I'm sorry, what was the date?

Mr. IVEY. June 24, 1986.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Attached to this memorandum is a proposed legislation with respect to the deregulation of public utilities. Is it on the back of your copy there?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Could you flip through the proposed bill to pages 3 and 4—I'm sorry, pages 3 and 5, Sections 3 and 4 in that bill. Are those provisions substantially the same as the Sections 3 and 4 in the legislation that was actually enacted?

Mr. BRATTON. They appear to be so.

Mr. IVEY. This is the same power of eminent domain that was included in the final legislation.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, it is.

Mr. IVEY. And this June 24, 1986 memorandum was written before, to the best of your knowledge, the Castle Sewer and Water issue was on your radar screen at all?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir, and it does suggest that my general impression that the PSC possibly drafted the second piece of legislation is probably accurate.

Mr. IVEY. Yes, sir. Now go through that packet. There's another document I'd like you to take a look at. It's a letter dated May 6, 1987, and it's addressed to Senator Charlie Cole Chaffen—

Mr. BRATTON. Chaffen.

Mr. IVEY. I take it he was a Member of the Arkansas State Senate at that time?

Mr. BRATTON. She was.

Mr. IVEY. Oh, sorry. All right. Now go down to paragraph 4. Are you with me?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. You mentioned earlier the issue of the difficulty in purchasing new plants. Is that discussed here in the letter from Doug Strock to Senator Chaffen?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Is that the issue you were raising just a few minutes ago, often the small water company may need to purchase new plants such as a water tower or other equipment or may need to replace existing—

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, it's the same issue.

Mr. IVEY. And the issue was the need for money to make these capital improvements?

Mr. BRATTON. To make major upgrades to a system, yes, sir.

Mr. IVEY. In the next paragraph, it says, "The reasons the regulation aggravates the small water utilities problems is as follows" and there's a long paragraph on page 2. Do you see that?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. That goes through the reasons that regulation was of concern to small utilities at that time?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. And the paragraph after that says, "For the foregoing reasons, regulation by the PSC is of little benefit to the small water utilities or their customers because regulation does not solve the basic needs of those small water companies." Do you see that?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Last question here. If you could go to page 3 of that same letter.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. IVEY. Look at the second paragraph. Could you read that second paragraph?

Mr. BRATTON. It says:

Deregulation should be coupled with giving the power to suburban improvement districts to condemn small water and sewer companies. The reason is if a small water company is deregulated and is not being run to the satisfaction of its customers, they could then form an improvement district and force the sale of the utility for the district and run the utility to suit themselves.

Without the power of condemnation, the ratepayers would have little effective recourse if the management were unresponsive or charge rates which were unconscionable, both deregulation and giving the power of eminent domain to suburban improvement districts would require legislation.

Mr. IVEY. And this is under the heading "Possible Solution"?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. IVEY. Is the final legislation that was enacted, does it reflect the possible solution that Mr. Strock wrote about in this May 6, 1987 letter?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, it does.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So if I understand, Mr. Bratton, the legislation that was ultimately passed was legislation recommended as early as 1985, in substance, by the Public Service Commission; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. There was a very good reason to deregulate the small water and sewer districts; correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. And the concern over rate increases was met not with this unfettered opportunity without recourse for the utilities to raise their rates, but balanced by the right of eminent domain and the opportunity to form independent water districts and take over the utilities by the residents of those districts if they were unhappy?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So rather than say that there was a change from a cap to a complete freedom without recourse, in fact, there was freedom and recourse?

Mr. BRATTON. There was an alternative that the customers could exercise.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Without getting back all the way to Jean Valjean and the sewer systems in place historically in other places in the world, with respect to Arkansas, this system has been operating for a decade now for 10 years or so, and it has not been subject to revision or subject to proposals for new legislation to change it?

Mr. BRATTON. As I indicated, there have been proposals to make some alterations to it that have come out of the one particular situation, but those proposals have not passed.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. You mentioned that Little Rock is not within your purview of regulation at the Public Services Commission now; is that correct?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. Now who regulates Little Rock?

Mr. BRATTON. Almost all municipal utilities are self-regulating in that they are operated by the city government and the rates are set by the city. The City of Pine Bluff is served by a private water company and we have jurisdiction over that municipality, but I believe that's the only municipality in the State in which we have any jurisdiction over the municipal water rates.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. So under any circumstances comparing Little Rock to the Castle district would be comparing apples and oranges in terms of regulation?

Mr. BRATTON. At the very least, apples and oranges.

Mr. BEN-VENISTE. I have nothing further.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Mr. Bratton, just before we move on to something else, Little Rock is a municipally-operated system?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's not for profit?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that you can say it is "not for profit."

Mr. CHERTOFF. It's not a private company; right?

Mr. BRATTON. It is not a private company. There are municipal operated utilities where municipal utility rates are used to subsidize other services provided by a city government, so they sometimes operate it above cost.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But they're not owned by guys like Randolph and Tucker; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And with regard to this power of eminent domain, just so we understand what alternative was left open to the people who were serviced by Castle Sewer and Water for whom I assume their monthly utility rate is a matter of more than academic interest, they probably have to sit down every month and write a check out, in order to exercise eminent domain, they would have to band together, form an improvement district, and agree to pay the utility for the cost of the property. If the utility didn't agree with the amount, they would have to go to court and fight it out in court; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's what the alternative of eminent domain is; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. That is correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Finally, just so we keep all eyes on the ball here, which is the interplay with the Governor's office and the Governor's veto, with all these memos in the files of the Public Services Commission, the only two memos I've seen that discuss the arguments in favor of changing the veto—which the Governor did change; is that right? He did not veto the second legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. He did not change the veto. He signed a second piece of legislation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The only written memos regarding that issue are the memo which conveys Mr. Randolph's cryptic mentioning of the $33,000 meeting, and your extended discussion of the litigation that can be avoided, including your own assumption about whether the litigation would touch on the validity of the mortgage. Do you know of any other written memos that were submitted to the Governor laying out the arguments on this besides these two?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know whether there were other written memoranda or not. From time to time, I would write shorthand written memorandum, most of which I threw away when I left the Governor's office. It was also very common for me to have discussions on these issues verbally with the Governor rather than writing it all out in memo form.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So the short answer to my question is that you don't know of any other written memos besides the two you've seen here; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no personal knowledge at this point of any other written memos, although I am sure there were other discussions about this issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you can't remember them; right?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. I'm sure there would have been a discussion about what items to include in a session. That would have been routine.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And one of those was this. Now, Mr. Bratton, let me turn your attention to this notation of July 2, 1986, from Beverly Bassett Schaffer, with which we began your examination today, and again, what I'm trying to understand here in your position as counsel—I mean, we've already seen that you saw communication where Randolph, what would have to be considered in a pretty blatant way, draws a connection or tries to draw a connection between something he wants the Governor to do officially and something to do with $33,000 2 years before.

Here we have Ms. Bassett saying, "Madison Guaranty is in pretty serious trouble. Because of Bill's relationship with McDougal, we probably ought to talk about it." What did you understand was the significance of Bill's relationship with McDougal as the reason you ought to talk to Beverly Bassett about this?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that I gave it any significance.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When you saw this, did you say in substance, "Beverly, look, whatever the Governor's personal things are, we don't consider that here. All we talk about is the public policy and the issues that concern the citizens of the State of Arkansas." Did you say anything like that to Beverly Bassett?

Mr. BRATTON. I didn't need to. She and I had had enough discussions during the time that she had been in charge of the Securities Department on sensitive issues that I knew she understood we were not going to ask her to take inappropriate actions, and that she would not be expected to read between the lines and figure out what sort of favorable dealings she was supposed to have with people who might have known the Governor or might have made campaign contributions. I didn't need to tell her that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But you didn't wonder, then, why she made a point of asking for a meeting not because of some distress to the citizens of Arkansas or jeopardy to the investors?

Mr. BRATTON. I didn't read anything into that comment. She and I had been talking about Madison off and on for some period of time before that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you had been talking to Governor Clinton about it?

Mr. BRATTON. I had periodically made him aware that there were problems with Madison, yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were there any other instances in which there were regulatory problems Ms. Bassett encountered as head of the Arkansas Securities Commission where she told you that she was bringing it to your attention because the people had a relationship with the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. There were probably situations, not necessarily involving a savings and loan, but there were probably situations where, in her capacity as Securities Commissioner, that she would make me aware of some action that the department intended to take against a broker-dealer or bond house because she knew that the individuals who might be the subject of that action would likely call the Governor's office when they found out that some unfavorable action had been taken in a case involving them.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Can you think of one right now?

Mr. BRATTON. I can think of probably several.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was there one involving Lasater & Associates?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall a specific conversation involving Mr. Lasater that I can tell you about. I know we've had some conversations on more than one occasion about matters involving Lasater's company.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Tell us about the conversations.

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall the specifics of it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, give us generally. Was it that Lasater was being investigated or having problems in terms of his conduct of the securities activities?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm sure it had to do with that generally.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Were you aware that Lasater had a relationship with the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. I think I was generally aware that he might have made some campaign contributions. I don't know that I considered that they had a relationship of any sort.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know if Mr. Lasater was ever at the Mansion, for example?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know whether he ever saw the Governor in person outside of a fundraising event?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no idea.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know if they had a social relationship?

Mr. BRATTON. I never had any impression that they had a social relationship.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Governor Clinton ever travel on Lasater's airplane?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever try to reach the Governor through Mr. Lasater?

Mr. BRATTON. Did——

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever try to reach the Governor through Mr. Lasater?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know whether Governor Clinton and Mr. Lasater took trips together?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I'm aware of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, these discussions about Lasater, why would Ms. Bassett have come to you and explained to you that there were issues in her jurisdiction as a securities regulator involving Mr. Lasater?

Mr. BRATTON. She periodically made me aware of decisions that the department was going to take involving people who were regulated by or licensed by the board. Was Lasater one of them at one point? Yes. Were there others? Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Lasater do a lot of business with the State?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know how much business Lasater did with the State.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he do bond underwritings?

Mr. BRATTON. He did some bond business.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have responsibility for the Arkansas Development Finance Authority in your liaison function?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I did not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who had that?

Mr. BRATTON. Bob Nash.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was even before Bob Nash became the head of that; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you can't, as you sit here, remember any particular reason that you had contact with Ms. Bassett about Mr. Lasater; is that your testimony?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. My testimony is that that is one example of other regulatory or disciplinary actions, if you will, that Ms. Bassett made me aware of that the department was going to take. There were others that involved other individuals or companies that were regulated by her department. It was common practice if they were going to take a significant disciplinary action, that the Governor's office didn't want to read about it in the newspaper.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They wanted a heads-up?

Mr. BRATTON. That the Governor expected to be aware when a department was going to take some major activity, not read it in the newspaper.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And you told the Governor, therefore? You would inform him of what Ms. Bassett told you?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir, or other agencies that I had a liaison relationship with.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When were you in this counsel function, for what years?

Mr. BRATTON. From 1984 through the early part of 1989.

Mr. CHERTOFF. During this period, do you remember regulatory action being taken against Mr. Lasater?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't remember specifically what actions were taken. I do know at some point in there that there were actions taken, either by NASD or by the State, or both.

Mr. CHERTOFF. NASD is the National Association of Securities Dealers?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That's a Federal, or it's kind of a private body but it's under Federal—

Mr. BRATTON. Self-regulation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. They took some regulatory action against Mr. Lasater?

Mr. BRATTON. That's my general impression.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you tell the Governor about it?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have discussions with the Governor about whether Lasater—the impact of that on any State business Lasater either had done or was going to do?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't recall? It wasn't a big issue?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall the specifics of the conversation.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Ms. Bassett tell you that Mr. McDougal was the person making recommendations for appointments to the Arkansas Savings and Loan Board?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that Ms. Bassett told me that. Was I generally aware that McDougal probably had an interest in that? I probably was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you know that his interest was heard when it came time to make appointments to the Bank Board and the Savings and Loan Board?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know whether it was heard or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You don't? You don't know whether he was influential in terms of appointments to the Bank Board and the Savings and Loan Board?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any personal knowledge of that, no.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How about knowledge acquired from somebody else in the course of your official duties?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't have any specific recollection of conversations about that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How about a general recollection? Come on, Mr. Bratton.

Mr. BRATTON. Not beyond what I have already indicated, which was that I knew McDougal periodically had some interest in those appointments.

Mr. CHERTOFF. But it wasn't an unrequited interest. It was an interest that he was able to consummate because when he asked to have people appointed, he was the one whose recommendation was heard; right?

Mr. BRATTON. I know that Mr. Latham, who worked at Madison, received an appointment.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did there come a time when you were hearing about all these capital problems at Madison Guaranty, that it made you uncomfortable to think that Mr. McDougal might be a person who had some influence in recommending appointments?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did Mr. McDougal have a reputation in the mid-1980's of being kind of shady, kind of a wheeler-dealer?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm sure there were some that would characterize him in that regard.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you warn the Governor to stay away from Mr. McDougal?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, I don't think I warned the Governor to stay away from Mr. McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you advise the Governor that he might not be a person who ought to have influence in making appointments?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall any conversations with the Governor about McDougal and the appointments process.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me show you DKSX 13314. It is from the Governor's office. And it says, "Jane Re: November-December appointments." It is a Xerox of two pieces of paper. On the second page, number 5, it says, "Banking Board, ask McDougal." Do you know whose handwriting this is? Do you recognize this?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe so.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It doesn't look familiar to you? Is it Mr. Clinton's handwriting?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it Betsey Wright's handwriting?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe it is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it your handwriting?

Mr. BRATTON. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And "Banking Board, ask McDougal," did you understand that on the Banking Board, on appointments, they got cleared through McDougal?

Mr. BRATTON. I never had any impression that any appointments were cleared through McDougal.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That he was asked about them?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall at this point knowing whether Mr. McDougal was asked about Bank Board appointments or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was Mr. Lasater asked about securities appointments?

Mr. BRATTON. Not that I have any knowledge of.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hear from somebody else that he was?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. I do know that based on a letter I was shown during a deposition, that he had written a letter to the Governor regarding Beverly Bassett Schaffer's appointment.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that's all you know?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Before I open up into the next line, since my time is just about up.

The CHAIRMAN. We're going to continue.

Senator SARBANES. Could I ask what the date of this memo is?

Mr. CHERTOFF. We don't know what the date is. It's November-December but it's undated as to year, and since no one has owned up to authorship, we're attempting to figure out the answer.

Now let me continue along the line of Mr. McDougal and Madison. Did there come a time that you were aware that the Arkansas Development Finance Authority or the Arkansas Housing Agency was leasing space in one of Mr. McDougal's buildings?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. And that was a decision made by who initially?

Mr. BRATTON. State Building Services.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was the person in charge of that?

Mr. BRATTON. Paul Mallard.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who was the director of the agency at that time?

Mr. BRATTON. Of which agency?

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Housing Agency.

Mr. BRATTON. I believe that Wooten Epes was the Director at that time.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So it was his agency to be put in this building?

Mr. BRATTON. That's correct.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He had an objection to it, didn't he?

Mr. BRATTON. That is my recollection.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He objected because it was an unsafe area?

Mr. BRATTON. He objected to it, and that was at least one of his stated objections.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What were his other stated objections?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall at this point.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was one that there was a possibility of getting space at a cheaper rate elsewhere?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, you indicated that it was one of his stated objections. Obviously, you have a recollection there were other stated objections. What were they?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall what the other objections were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, was it price?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall what the other objections were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Safety was one; right?

Mr. BRATTON. That's the only one I recall. It is my recollection there were other objections he had. I don't recall what they were.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What was Mr. Mallard's argument in favor of leasing in Mr. McDougal's building?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall whether—what the basis of the SBS decision was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now this was in 1984?

Mr. BRATTON. Somewhere along in that period of time. I don't recall specifically.

Mr. CHERTOFF. How did this—who resolved this dispute?

Mr. BRATTON. It is my general impression that SBS had selected that space and perhaps had already executed a contract for the State to lease it or was on the verge of doing so. Mr. Epes didn't want to move there, and the decision remained the decision made by SBS.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, who resolved the dispute? Didn't it go up to the Governor's office?

Mr. BRATTON. The issue was discussed in the Governor's office, and Mr. Mallard's decision remained the binding decision.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who discussed it in the Governor's office?

Mr. BRATTON. I had probably some discussions with both Mallard and Epes, probably Betsey Wright had some discussions with both of those. I'm sure Betsey and I probably had some discussions with the Governor about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you and Betsey discuss about it?

Mr. BRATTON. At this point, all I recall is that there was a dispute about Wooten not wanting to move his agency into the space that SBS had leased for him and that he ultimately moved there. I don't recall anything further about it, other than one of his stated reasons for not wanting to move was that he thought it was not a safe area or he asserted that.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The Governor made the final decision?

Mr. BRATTON. If by not overriding Mr. Mallard's decision the Governor made a decision, then you may characterize it as the Governor's making the decision. Mr. Mallard made a decision; Mr. Epes hoped that decision would be overturned. It was not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. When did you first become aware that the Governor and Mrs. Clinton had a business relationship involving land with Mr. McDougal?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it in 1984?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall when it was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it in the 1980's?

Mr. BRATTON. Probably sometime in the 1980's.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was it before or after Mr. McDougal was kicked out of the savings and loan?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you have an impression in 1984 and 1985 and 1986 about Mr. McDougal's reputation for integrity?

Mr. BRATTON. I'm not sure what his reputation for integrity was. There were probably some people who were more suspect of it than others.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, what about you? Were you suspect of it?

Mr. BRATTON. By the mid-1980's, I thought there was probably some question as to how appropriately Mr. McDougal managed the S&L.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you go into the Governor at some point and say, in effect, "Stay away from this guy."?

Mr. BRATTON. The Governor had known Mr. McDougal for a long time. I thought the Governor's decision as to what his personal relationship or lack of a personal relationship with Mr. McDougal was his business and wasn't mine to dictate to him. I brought to his attention information that I thought was appropriate for him to know and then how he chose to have or not have a relationship with Mr. McDougal was something he had to decide.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you remember an issue Mr. McDougal had involving a health official known as a sanitarian?

Mr. BRATTON. I am generally aware of that issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. He wanted to have somebody removed because the person was giving him difficulty on a development project; is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall what specifically, whether he wanted to have someone removed. He thought the health department was over-aggressive in some of its interpretation of rules and regulations that applied to a subdivision that he was involved with, and he wanted the matter resolved in a way that was favorable to his development.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he get a meeting with the Governor over it?

Mr. BRATTON. It is my recollection that there was a meeting involving Mr. McDougal and the Health Department with the Governor.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did the Governor say?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't think I was present.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you hear about it afterwards?

Mr. BRATTON. I probably heard about it before or afterwards, one or both.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did you hear? Tell us what you heard.

Mr. BRATTON. Well, it is my general recollection that McDougal was not able to get the result that he wanted.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, didn't the man get removed?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no recollection about an individual personality within the general impression that I have, or the general recollection that I have was about the issue of enforcement of the regulations, and it's my general impression that McDougal didn't get the result he wanted.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I'm going to show you, we're going to refresh your memory with a memo of March 5, 1986, which we will get down to you. Who is Mr. Choate, by the way, or Ms. Choate?

Mr. BRATTON. She was a Member of the Governor's staff who had liaison responsibilities with the Department of Health and Department of Human Services.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I want you to help us understand this memo, March 5, 1986, to the Governor. There's a little check mark. Is that a sign that the Governor used to make indicating he read a memo?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. CHERTOFF. I think it says, "Thanks" on the top. Is that the Governor's handwriting?

Mr. BRATTON. It appears to be.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It goes:

I have talked with Tom Butler this a.m. He tells me that the 3 men Jim McDougal referenced in yesterday's meeting have been removed from those jobs. Tom met with their supervisors, too, and spelled out to all of them that none were to talk about Brittany Point, Eden Park, or Maple Creek in or outside the office, period, because they don't want to give credence to any of McDougal's allegations. Tom will send over a complete report soon.

Tom, Jerry, and Dr. Saltzman said they kept silent yesterday out of respect for you, but their silence was not tacit approval of Jim's accusations. Frankly, they were taken aback at much of what he said and felt a great deal of frustration at not responding. It was obvious to them that Jim was quite upset and had placed them in a defensive position.

I believe they took their cue from you when you told them that Jim was your friend of 20 years who had never asked for a favor plus the fact that Jim's first comment was he was being ganged on and that there had been nothing but duplicity and trickery from the Health Department.

By the way, is it your understanding that March 1986, was the first time Jim McDougal ever asked for a favor from the Governor?

Mr. BRATTON. I have no idea when and if McDougal may have asked for favors.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, was the Latham appointment, wasn't that in 1985?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't recall when the Latham appointment was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. The record shows that it is. Isn't it a fact that Mr. McDougal asked to have Latham appointed or suggest him to be appointed?

Mr. BRATTON. It is my understanding that he had recommended Latham for appointment to that position.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now does this ring a bell about this meeting?

Mr. BRATTON. Not particularly.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you can't shed any further light on the Governor's statements at the meeting?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir. As I said, I don't believe that I was present and I don't have any specific recollection of being told any details about it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now, Ms. Hernreich, do you remember during the period of time you were, I guess, acting as a gatekeeper for the Governor, contacts between the Governor and Jim McDougal and Susan McDougal?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't recall any contacts between the Governor and Jim McDougal. Susan McDougal, I recall, called me once in that period of time but I don't recall contacts with Jim McDougal and the President.

Mr. CHERTOFF. What did she call about?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't remember.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, did you ever place calls to Jim McDougal for the Governor?

Ms. HERNREICH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. No?

Ms. HERNREICH. Did I place calls?

Mr. CHERTOFF. Yes.

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I didn't. That wasn't my job. I didn't place calls for him.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever leave word for Jim McDougal that the Governor wanted to see him?

Ms. HERNREICH. I am unaware of it if I did.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Well, I would like to put up, and we'll get down to you a message pad—actually two pages from a message pad—I think if we can suspend for a moment or maybe if we pass over, I'll have copies made and we will resume with this.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you like to—Senator Sarbanes. Why don't we put—

Senator SARBANES. Mr. Bratton, I just want to develop a couple of points with you because I was listening to this questioning from Mr. Chertoff. Who was Tom Butler?

Mr. BRATTON. Tom Butler was the Deputy Director of the Health Department, I believe he was Deputy Director at that point. If not, he was Senior Assistant Director but I believe he was a Deputy Director.

Senator SARBANES. Well, in his deposition about this meeting, the one that was referred to that McDougal was in, he said that afterwards he stayed and talked to the Governor and the Governor told him, he said, "You go do what you have to do and you will never hear another word from me." That was my last conversation with the Governor on the matter." Were you in that meeting?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't believe I was in that meeting. I am fairly certain I was not.

Senator SARBANES. Did you know about this statement of Tom Butler's?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know that I knew about that specific statement, but it was my general impression that Mr. McDougal did not get the result from the Health Department that he wanted, so that statement is consistent with my general understanding of the outcome.

Senator SARBANES. Then the other thing was apparently what Lex Dobbins said in his deposition—who is Lex Dobbins?

Mr. BRATTON. I don't know.

Senator SARBANES. He was one of the people in the department. Because subsequently some of these people were transferred and the issue was raised, "Well, that was done at Mr. McDougal's insistence," and he says, "McDougal could affect the same transfer without going to the Governor's office. It was standard operating procedure any time a developer complained to the State Health Department about unfair treatment, the sanitarian would be reassigned. Standard operating procedure." Then he went on to say, "Any time they had a situation like that, they would always try to correct what they call the level playing field to show no bias in the way we regulated the developers. Standard procedure."

So if a developer complained, all they had to do was go to the Health Department and the Health Department would then transfer the person. And apparently that was the standard practice.

But I gather from the Butler comment that they then handled a matter within the department in their normal way of doing business. Is that your understanding, or do you have an understanding about that?

Mr. BRATTON. As I said, Senator, my understanding was in a very general way, that McDougal had asked for some relief from Health Department enforcement of regulations and that ultimately he did not get the relief that he had requested.

Senator SARBANES. Well, apparently he really made a scene in that meeting, but the Governor at the end of the meeting told Mr. Butler, "You go do what you have to do and you'll never hear another word from me." So I just want that on the record.

Mr. IVEY. If I could add to that additionally, let me read some of William A. Teer's deposition. He worked under Mr. Butler apparently, and after discussing the Health Department meeting—this is on pages 37 and 38 of his deposition before this Committee—he was asked:

Question: Well, did he tell you how the decision was made to reassign Dobbins and these other sanitarians?

Answer: No, I don't remember if they all came up as far as because of Lex or if anything else came up on the other projects.

Question: Well, who made—

Answer: What we have done in the past is when we have a situation going similar to what we had with McDougal, in order to show that we are trying to bend over to be customer conscious and pro-customer, is that we have reassigned people. I mean, we've reassigned people all the way back to 197—late 1970's. As a matter of fact, some of the most recent things we've had was, let me see, we reassigned a man on an establishment as of this year, I believe.

Senator SARBANES. Go ahead.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So Mr. Bratton, if this was such a plain vanilla thing, why did the Governor entertain Mr. McDougal and say, as we have in the contemporaneous memo, "that Jim was his friend of 20 years who had never asked for a favor." Do you know why?

Mr. BRATTON. No, sir, I don't know specifically why the Governor decided to meet with Mr. McDougal and representatives of the Health Department on that issue.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Ms. Hernreich, I think we've put before you and we're going to put up a couple of pages from a message pad which were taken by Mr. McDougal's secretary, Ms. Strayhorn, and I think if you look, they both appear to be January 15, one in fact appears to have been kind of crossed out and then it's followed by the second one. It's from Nancy Hernreich, misspelled, Governor's office, 371-2345. Is that number a familiar number to you?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, that's the number at the Governor's office.

Mr. CHERTOFF. That was his personal number?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, the general number at the Governor's office.

Mr. CHERTOFF. It says, "Can see Governor Saturday at 11:00—Go by Mansion." Why would you have placed a call to McDougal about when Mr. McDougal could see the Governor?

Ms. HERNREICH. I do not recall doing this, and certainly if it's there, then, you know, I don't question that I did it, but I received and set up probably over the period of time that I worked for the Governor tens of thousands—I have taken tens of thousands of requests and set up thousands of meetings and events for him, and I just didn't recall that this within had occurred.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you were a scheduler among other things?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, I was.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You didn't normally place calls for the Governor?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I did not place calls for him, but this was—looking at the message, it looks like I was scheduling a meeting with Mr. McDougal and the Governor. And with that message.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Was your communication with Mr. McDougal involving something to do with closing on a house?

Ms. HERNREICH. I have no idea. I really don't remember at all what it was about.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Let me show you a daily schedule for the Governor, same date, Monday, January 15.

Ms. HERNREICH. OK. Do we know what year this is?

Mr. CHERTOFF. We don't, and maybe you can help us by looking at the document. It's DKSJ 13118. It may be 1986 but let's see if you can help us on this a little bit. Do you have that document in front of you?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is this your schedule that you would have prepared?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know. We changed our format shortly after I arrived there, and most of the schedules that I did during the time that I was his scheduler were not in this format, so I don't know if it was mine or not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Is it your handwriting on this?

Ms. HERNREICH. No.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Whose handwriting is it?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know whose handwriting it is.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know who Dr. Qualls was?

Ms. HERNREICH. Where is that?

Mr. CHERTOFF. At the bottom, "Dr. Qualls will be sworn in."

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know. It might be R. L. Qualls.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who is that?

Ms. HERNREICH. Well, I know him now because he lives in my former hometown in Fort Smith, Arkansas, and I know him from that as much as anything.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did he hold an official position in the State in the 1980's?

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't know.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Because I thought maybe it could help identify the date.

Ms. HERNREICH. I don't think this is my document because I don't recall ever scheduling something where he would have been sworn in. I don't know what he did there, so I don't recall him ever being in the government when I was there.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now this reference to Susan McDougal, it says "Mansion." Typically, was it the practice if there was going to be a meeting at the Mansion to put "Mansion" in parentheses?

Ms. HERNREICH. Again, this doesn't look familiar at all to me, and you would have had to have put it there somewhere. If it was Monday the 15th—yeah. My schedules, what I would have done would have been probably indicated depart Mansion for Governor's office, State Capitol at a certain point, so that it would have maybe been understood that the meeting was at the Mansion and then at some point you indicate what time he left the mansion to go to the Governor's office in the State Capitol.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Who else prepared this schedule besides you in 1986, let's say, in January 1986?

Ms. HERNREICH. My assistants at the time would have probably done the typing on it.

Mr. CHERTOFF. You actually started as the scheduler when, in 1985?

Ms. HERNREICH. Yes, in September 1985, late September 1985.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Now let me ask you to look at the second sheet of paper. We only have a few of these we have received so I can't claim this is comprehensive. This is dated Monday, August 13th. Midway down the page it says, "McDougal et al. Re: Road trip." Is that your handwriting?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, it's not.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Do you know what that refers to?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, I don't.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you ever schedule matters with Dan Lasater?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Did you schedule any airplane trips for the Governor with Mr. Lasater?

Ms. HERNREICH. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Any other trips with Mr. Lasater?

Ms. HERNREICH. No, not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Meetings with Mr. Lasater?

Ms. HERNREICH. Not that I recall.

Mr. CHERTOFF. So you don't remember any contact or discussion with Mr. Lasater during the 1980's?

Ms. HERNREICH. No. Well, when I arrived, after September 1985, no, I do not recall any discussions with Mr. Lasater.

Mr. CHERTOFF. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Sarbanes.

Senator SARBANES. I have no questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Ms. Hernreich and Mr. Bratton, for being here today. We stand in adjournment until tomorrow morning at 10:00 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 1:38 p.m., the hearing was adjourned, to reconvene at 10:00 a.m., on Wednesday, February 14, 1996.]

Madison Guaranty is in pretty serious trouble. Because of Bill's relationship w/ McDougal, we probably ought to talk about it. The meeting referred to in the attached letter has been moved up to July 11, 1986 and the FH LBB has asked me to be ~~at~~ at the meeting.

Please note that while all of the FH LBB restrictions in the letter are serious, #5 & 6 effectively put Madison out of business.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Mike Wilson
FROM: JGT
DATE: 2/24/87
RE: PROPOSED LEGISLATION FOR CASTLE SEWER & WATER CORP.
FILE NO. 7261-1

Attached is a proposed bill designed to take care of a problem of both Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan and Castle Sewer and Water Corporation ("CS&W").

The bill attempts to deal only with the CS&W sewer and water system by being limited to "private" companies within ten miles of a city with a population in excess of 140,000 (which, I assume, includes Little Rock, but only Little Rock. We may need to check that population number).

It would essentially create a rate deregulation to the extent CS&W's rates did not exceed 10% above what Little Rock charges its own water customers. It would require health and EPA reports by CS&W.

CS&W is at the old Little Rock South Industrial Park and serves about 90 customers. Over one-half of its revenue is from a few industrial clients.

William "Bill" Walker will need to know about this. I have not had a chance to discuss it with him.

The cost and uncertainties in regulatory compliance for a little $8,000 per month company like this is simply too great. This would vastly simplify while still protecting customers if the utility tries to charge more than 110% of what Little Rock is charging its residents. (Actually, I think Little Rock charges more to non-residents and, maybe, more than 110%).

There is some precedent for the 110% limit in the statute that allows city electric companies to charge adjacent non-residents up to 110% of the rate they charge their residents without APSC control).

Would you: (a) review; (b) ask legislative counsel to put in bill form and check the population; and (c) let me know if you think it can be passed this session.

Mike Wilson Memorandum

I have not asked the APSC to review it. (I have sent a copy to Ernie Faucette of the Arkansas Rural Water Association. He has voiced no objection to me). I'll be in trial in Crittenden County Wednesday and part of Thursday but will check for messages.

REMARKS:

Mr. Randolph stopped by to see you this morning to talk to you about the Water Bill you vetoed. He said that he talked to you on Sunday morning. He wants to know if the veto is going to stand. He would like you to call Jim Guy Tucker about this. He said that he has a difficult time getting an answer from you. (He mentioned a meeting between you, Tucker and Jim McDougal a couple of years ago which involved $33,000. This was pretty cryptic.) He seemed angry. Someone, I think he prefers you, needs to call Tucker.

The Honorable Bill Clinton
Governor
State Capitol
Little Rock, AR 72201

Dear Governor Clinton:

H.B. 1780 by Representatives Mike Wilson and William Walker was vetoed after having passed both houses with no dissenting vote.

The bill was designed to resolve the problems faced by small water and sewer companies that comply easily and fully with EPA and State Health Department requirements but are not financially able to comply with statutes requiring rate regulation by the State Public Service Commission.

The bill could serve as an excellent model in that it offers such a sewer and water company the opportunity for substantial rate deregulation if the company is willing to limit its rates to no more than 110% of the rate being charged by a city of the first class to its own customers.

R. D. Randolph, Madison Guaranty Savings & Loan, and I were all very disappointed that this non-controversial bill was vetoed. If a special session does become necessary, we ask that your call include this legislation. If the member of your staff who suggested a veto has any questions or desires

Dear Jeff:

Governor Clinton vetoed H.B. 1780. He has told R. D. Randolph and the sponsors that the veto was an error he will correct if there is a special legislative session. Such a special session is generally expected, but not guaranteed. If held, it could come as early as June or as late as September.

This legislation is needed critically for the utility. I suggest we complete our contract; execute it; and wait to see if a session develops. Effectiveness of the contract will still depend on enactment of the legislation.

Very truly yours,

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

MEMORANDUM

To : Governor

Date: May 19, 1967

From : Sam *W*Subject: Sewer District regulation legislation/Jim Guv Tucker-
R. D. Randolph, Mike Wilson, Bill Walker

I have talked to Tucker about the situation. According to Tucker, Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan purchased the water and sewer company when it purchased the old Little Rock Industrial Park area; however, the S&L subsequently learned that it could not legally own and operate a utility company. Therefore, the company was sold to a company organized by R. D. Randolph for the purpose of acquiring this water and sewer utility. The problem arises from the fact that a utility legally subject to regulation by the Public Service Commission is prohibited from mortgaging utility property without permission of the Public Service Commission. Madison Guaranty is the mortgage holder. Therefore, in Tucker's opinion, the mortgage is invalid as the utility had not filed for regulation and obtained approval of the mortgage.

Bill Walker's interest in this matter apparently arises from the fact that this utility company could sell water to the City of Wrightsville at wholesale at a price substantially less than Wrightsville is currently purchasing water from the City of Little Rock. There is also a possibility, although a lesser one according to Tucker, that the company could extend utility service into the Wrightsville area.

According to Tucker, if the legislation exempting certain water and sewer companies from PSC regulation is not enacted in the special session, litigation will probably be initiated between Madison Guaranty and the company owning the utility and that the initiation of litigation between those two parties would likely negate the possibility of the utility expanding its operation through any sort of arrangements with the City of Wrightsville. I assume the litigation would result because of the question of the validity of the mortgage and the fact that the S&L is now being operated under the close scrutiny of FSLIC and is no longer controlled by McDougal, et. al.

DKSN018011

I have talked with Robert Johnston and asked Johnston to review with appropriate PSC staff what options may be available to address the Tucker/Randolph problem short of the deregulation proposed by HB 1780. I did tell Robert that I thought you would be inclined to try to be of some help in resolving this problem. Robert is to get back to me tomorrow or the next day. I left it with Tucker that either PSC or I would get back to him after PSC had a chance to evaluate the situation.

MEMORANDUM

TO:           Jerrold Gray
FROM:        Doug Strook
SUBJECT:     H.B. 1780 - PSC Position
DATE:        April 9, 1967

This is in response to your request for my opinion of the merits of H.B. 1780.

H.B. 1780 provides that those private water and sewer utilities ("utilities") which provide services to customers within ten miles of the corporate limits of a city of the First Class which has a population in excess of 140,000 persons, . . . ("City"). Utilities which are operated by improvement districts or municipalities are exempt from this bill. The bill exempts from PSC regulation those utilities which, among other things, charge a rate which is not more than 10% greater than the rate charged by the city for the municipal or provided water and sewer utilities.

The bill is obviously designed to apply only to some utility/ies within ten miles of Little Rock. It is really a kind of special legislation, dressed with an eye to meeting constitutional provisions against special legislation. It may possibly be vulnerable to a constitutional challenge as special legislation, however.

I believe the concept of the bill is fine, however, and should probably be extended to cover all water and sewer utilities that are Class B or lower under the Uniform System of Accounts adopted by the PSC. The reason is that rate base regulation by the PSC often exacts a toll on management and ratepayers that exceeds its value.

For example, if a utility needs to make major improvements which require significant expenditures, the utility must first get the money to do so. The usual sources are borrowing, either from banks or by issuing bonds, or by issuing equity. Then the utility can come in for rate relief, to cover the cost of the improvements. Such a procedure, however, works well only for large utilities that are solvent enough to (a) borrow from banks.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Byron Collins
Larry Jagley
Tony Creston

FROM: Doug Strook

DATE: January 17, 1983

SUBJ: Small water company financial problems and quality of service related problems--possible solution by using Act 310 of 1981, as amended; simplified filing requirements; legislation providing low cost loans; etc.

Lately, we have been talking about the problems small water companies have with regards to compliance with Quality of Service health and safety regulations. The small water companies find it hard to come up with the money, oftentimes, to finance the health and safety related improvements required by Q of S and health department laws and regulations. They also find it difficult to finance a rate case, with all of its costs and expenses in hiring accountants and lawyers. As a result, we rapidly reach a stalemate in achieving compliance with health and safety measures, because the utility does not have the money and cannot afford to file a rate case to get the money.

Having given this matter a little bit of thought, I see several possible solutions:

- (a) Simplified filing requirements for general rate cases. If we could vastly reduce the amount of paper work imposed on small water companies, they might be more willing and able to seek the necessary relief.
- (b) Eliminate, by law, our jurisdiction over small water companies. This, however, would leave them unregulated, at least for rate purposes, but would allow the company to increase rates whenever it needed money. The Department of Health would continue to have jurisdiction over the health and safety aspects of the company.
- (c) Establish ranges of rates that the PSC would presume, on the front end, to be acceptable, much like TIER ratemaking, allowed to the Woodruff Coop. Higher rates would either have to be justified in a rate case, or sought by waiver. The rate ranges established by the PSC could be adjusted from time to time.

Memo - Small Water Companies
January 17, 1955

- (d) Allow/encourage water companies to file tariffs under Act 310 of 1951, if they have health and safety requirements to meet, which require expenditures of funds. This would provide them with the needed rate relief immediately, with a minimum of cost and trouble to the water utility. They would retain the ACT 310 rates until their next rate case, and can file a new one every six months, as needed, to meet the health and safety requirements imposed by the PSC and the Department of Health.
- (e) Consider the possibility of a range of automatic adjustment clauses, which might improve the cash flow of the small water company, such as a purchased power adjustment clause, and which would eliminate the need for frequent general rate cases.

Out of all the above approaches, I think that the use of Act 310 might be the most promising, for those companies which cannot pay for required improvements for health and safety, and which cannot afford to file a general rate case. Act 310 would enable them to get on their feet and fund these mandated improvements. Act 310 would provide the simplest, quickest relief. We might also consider innovated adjustment clauses.

Eventually, I think that a combination of simplified filing requirements and establishment of ranges of acceptable rates would also be very helpful, if we are to continue regulating these marginal, small water companies. We are already working towards simplified filing requirements, as a part of our effort to upgrade the general minimum filing requirements.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

MEMORANDUM

To : Governor
 From : Choate
 Subject: Follow-up to McDougal/Health Dept. meeting with you.

I have talked with Tom Butler this a.m. He tells me that the 3 men Jim McDougal referenced in yesterday's meeting have been removed from those jobs. Tom met with their supervisors, too, and spelled out to all of them that none were to talk about Brittany Point, Eden Park or Maple Creek in or outside the office, period, because they don't want to give credence to any of McDougal's allegations. Tom will send over a complete report soon.

Tom, Jerry and Dr. Salzman said they kept silent yesterday out of respect for you, but their silence was not tacit approval of Jim's accusations. Frankly, they were taken aback at much of what he said and felt a great deal of frustration at not responding. It was obvious to them that Jim was quite upset and had placed them in a defensive position.

I believe they took their cue from you when you told them that Jim was your friend of 20 years who had never asked for a favor plus the fact that Jim's first comment was he was being ganged on and that there had been nothing but duplicity and trickery from the Health Dept.

DKSN013404

When the sanitarians were called in this morning, they did ask Tom if you had been in agreement with Jim's assessment and Tom defended you by saying that you were there to listen as a courtesy to your friend and not really to pass judgment.

I am relating this to you because these past few weeks at the Health Dept. have been difficult for Tom - dealing with budget cuts, calling employees in to lay them off, trying to soothe ruffled feathers and hurt feelings because of this, the measles outbreak, which has thus far cost $800,000 (not knowing how they will pay), and talking to all of the irate people calling when basketball tournaments got canceled as a result of the measles problem. Don't laugh! They were furious. The ongoing trauma of dealing with disgruntled Jacksonville residents. Then, yesterday the meeting over here was none too sparkling. I think you can appreciate Tom's dismay at having to sit and listen to someone refer to me as "his employee" to state he knew "fairly well" as "not sane, not qualified, not stable and psychotic". I would like to think your instinct would be to give me or someone else up here the benefit of the doubt were you put in that situation. (In fact, I was pleased when you did come to your staff's defense not long ago as Nancy Ingle began criticizing us. I am not implying any comparison between Jim McDougal and Ingle, but you see my point).

P.S. Just this morning, Keith related that a friend who works at the Health Department was praising Tom rather for his honesty and sensitivity in dealing with employees and the way the lay-off situation had been handled.
